THE ENDLESS PROCESSION.

Down the vista of the ages,
Saints and sinners, fools and sages,
Marching onward, slow and solemn,
Go in never-ending column—
Here the honest, here the knave—
With a rhythmic step sublime,
To the grave.

Like the rolling of the river,
Going on and on forever—
Never resting, never staying
Never for an instant staying—
Peer and peasant, lord and slave,
Equals soon to mix and mingle
In the grave.

Duty can not, nor can pleasure,
For a moment break the measure;
They are marching on to doom,
They are moving to the tomb—
All the cowards and the brave,
Soon to level all distinction
In the grave.

Since the morning of creation,
Without break or termination,
Ever on the line is moving,
All the loved and all the loving,
All the mothers ever gave—
On to silence and to slumber
In the grave.

Here no bribe the bond can weaken,
Here no substitute is taken;
Each one for himself—no other,
Son nor father—no, nor brother;
Love the purest can not save;
Each alone the roll must answer
In the grave.

Who commands the dread procession?
Who shall know no retrogression?
Who can be the great director?
Ha! that grim and grizzly spectre,
Him that sin to Satan gave,
Death, the mighty king of terrors,
And the grave.

Jefferson Davis.

REMARKS OF ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD AT THE MEMORIAL SERVICES, DECATUR, GA., DEC. 11, 1889.

Jefferson Davis, the first and only President of the "Confederate States of America," has this day a nobler funeral than had the Macedonian, Alexander the Great. For he who loved us with all his heart, and served us with all his strength, and suffered for us as few men have ever suffered, is carried to his burial with the love of all his people. Power and wealth can command or buy costly and magnificent pageantry; only love can win the tributes paid this day to a poor, defeated, and powerless old man. It is a spectacle never witnessed before. There was never such an occasion; it can never occur again. The burial of Jefferson Davis, in a true and important sense, terminates an epoch in the history of a great nation.

God grant that the concluding words in an editorial of a great newspaper, as far removed from Mr. Davis and the cause he stood for as is the New York Tribune, may find response in every heart that loved the Union or the Confederacy in the bitter days of war. In Sunday's Tribune an editorial, concerning the death of Mr. Davis, closes with these words:

The North long ago recognized that the magnanimous offices of Horace Greeley were a first expression of Northern sentiment; and it now listens, without pain or antipathy, to Southern eulogies of the leader on whom it once invoked retribution. The last vestige of a deplorable past ought to be buried next Wednesday, and from that grave should spring the perfect flower of national unity.

If the Southern people did not this day do honor to the memory of him who, for nearly five momentous years, was their chosen leader, they would be base, indeed. We have, at this time, absolutely nothing to do with what his critics have said, or may yet say, as to his conduct of the revolution committed to his hands, or as to the various views of men, North or South, whether he has been ideally wise, either in his speech or in his silence, since April, 1865. Whether he made mistakes or did not, does not concern us at this time. It is idle now to inquire concerning these matters. After all is said, affirmed or denied, praised or blamed, this abides: We of the South that made up the Confederacy called him to be our leader. We placed this great burden upon him. He accepted it reluctantly; not because he lacked devotion to the cause upon which nearly all the best people in the South staked their all, but because he had prevision of the magnitude of the task we had undertaken. But he did enter upon the work to which we called him with absolute patriotism and absolute conscientiousness. To that work he consecrated all his great powers. From the porch of the Capitol in Montgomery, when he first took the oath of office, till the bitter end, he faltered not one hour. He poured out his soul in doing what, to him, was the supreme duty to God and man. When it was all over, the world said, "He failed." If not to-day, then to-morrow, just history will say, "He failed, indeed; but in stainless honor." If he had been a bad man; if he had failed in duty to the people who trusted him; if he had, for one moment, turned aside from the work to which he consecrated himself; if he had ever sought private advantage at the expense of the trust committed to him; if he had, in any way, betrayed or deceived us, or been in the least degree false to the cause we of the South called him to lead—then, indeed, we might be humiliated when narrow or vindictive men denounce him, now that he is dead. But bitter words and unjust words need not concern us. Those who can, in such a country and in such an age as ours, be intolerant or vindictive toward our dead leader nearly a lifetime after Appomattox, are not men for whose opinions a self-respecting friend of Jefferson Davis will care. There may, indeed, be a considerable company of such writers and speakers; but, among more than sixty millions of people, they count for little.

It is a common misfortune that the press is aptest to give widest circulation to the ugliest words, spoken or written; but it would be a calamity if the Southern people should conclude that such utterances fairly express the sentiments of the best people of those States that triumphed with the cause of the Union. They no more represent the best Northern feeling than the insanity of an occasional Southern utterance, antagonistic to the Union, really expresses the all-controlling thought of the South to-day. But if all the world, outside the States that made the Confederacy, united in denouncing and traducing Mr. Davis, we would be mean if we did not honor his memory. At last, it is not a question as to what others may think of him, but what we know of him. Of him we know that he did his best for us; that he never failed us in purpose and effort; and that with dauntless courage he bore up under our appalling misfortunes, suffering for us as few men have been called to suffer for any cause, or for any people.

It is a strange thing to me that some have been relentless toward Mr. Davis, even now that he is dead, while gracious enough to thousands who followed his leadership. If it be answered, "Because he was leader," the reply is, "We made him leader."

In what was he more guilty than the millions who chose him to be their representative? It is not sufficient to retort, "He never asked the removal of the political disabilities that dedisenized him." He had reasons for silence that no other had. What other Confederates, prominent enough to need political pardon, might most properly seek, he might not. Such a man was not silent in sullen defiance; of so small and paltry a motive he was incapable. Just how he would have put his reasons for silence into words, we do not know. But we know that they were reasons worthy of a great and true man. We do know that he had no censure for his comrades who sought and received political rehabilitation. We know that he rejoiced when they could again serve their country and contribute to the restoration of peace and national unity. A man so conscientious in all other things had motives of conscience stronger than any mere feelings of pride for accepting silence the issues the breakdown of the Confederacy brought to him.

Besides, I have often asked myself the question: "At just what time, since the final surrender, and from what administration, could Mr. Davis have asked for the restoration of his citizenship with propriety or profit?" Who is wise enough to answer? The application would have cost over-much. His petition denied would have exasperated the South; granted, it would have brought increase of passion where (for the South, at least) there was already too much. It was the part of a wise and magnanimous man, placed as Mr. Davis was, to be silent. For himself and for us, it was best that he preferred no petition for himself.

Many times, before this day, both North and South, in speech and in writing, I have sought, so far as a private citizen might, to foster a true national spirit, which is, at last, but another name for brotherhood. Some things I wish to repeat to-day. If any in the North would hear me, to them I would say: The Southern people know that the Confederacy failed; they know that secession was not their remedy; they know that slavery is done with. What Senator Benjamin H. Hill said on these subjects the South says and means. The Southern people are part of an indissoluble Union, and rejoice in it. But those people of the North who require confession of crime, in the matter of our adherence to the Confederacy, before they will trust our sincere devotion to the Union, require a condition that can never be met. To make such a confession would be a crime, for it would be false. We did not believe that we were doing wrong in entering into the Confederacy, or fighting its battles. We believed that we were doing right. I am not speaking of the obscurities in a Constitution of compromises that made possible and inevitable the different constructions that were the substance of political debate for seventy years and more. I am speaking of a simpler thing. I am not considering the wisdom of secession (we know now that it was not wise), but a matter easy of apprehension. I am considering only the case of conscience in a man who threw all he had and was into the Confederacy. Let each man who did that answer. Those among us who lived through that tremendous ordeal know—know absolutely—that the vast majority of the very best men and women in the South—as good, as religious, as God-fearing people as live—believed in their inmost souls that they were doing their duty to stand by the Confederacy, and that to have failed in loyalty to that cause would have been a crime. So they thought, felt, lived, prayed, suffered, fought, died, and failed. No good Northern man should respect or trust any man who went with the Confederacy, and would tell him now: "In the sixties I was a conscious criminal; I knew that I was doing wrong; I was a hypocrite; forgive me."

If any in the South would hear me, to them I would say what, in effect, I have been saying for many years: Let us respect facts and be as true to the duties of to-day as well as to the memories of yesterday. Both are sacred. Let us cultivate a broad and national spirit, and stand squarely by the Constitution as we have helped to make it. Let us teach our children to love the Union. So did Robert E. Lee till he died; so have done our noblest and best; so did Jefferson Davis as occasion allowed him. The limitations that hedged him about were many. If he did not when, on rare occasions, he wrote or spoke, always say the things that all might approve, remember that no other was circumstanced as he was. Not to teach our children to love the Union would be lunacy; to so teach them that, when we are gone, they should not truly and profoundly love their country, would be a crime. In many things, doubtless, Mr. Davis has suffered injustice. History will find the true verdict. There was an England that saw the bones of Oliver Cromwell hung in chains at Tyburn; there is a civilized world that knows how the Lord Protector wrought mightily for civil and religious liberty.

Of one injustice done Mr. Davis, and not infrequently in Southern circles, I wish to speak briefly. I confess that sometimes, for a passing moment, I have indulged the ill-judgment to which I refer. It has been asked, "Why did Mr. Davis continue the war so long? Why did he not treat for peace in 1863 or 1864, and save the country from the last eighteen months of the fearful struggle?" Looking backward is easy, and, looking backward, some say: "Mr. Davis must have known what the end must be." People grown up since the war, and people brought up elsewhere than in the South before the war, will not understand what I am going to say. Some who were in the swirl of that tremendous movement will understand me.

How could Mr. Davis know what the end must be? Who else knew? Call it lunacy, fatuity, judicial blindness, destiny; call it whatever one pleases, the truth is this: Our people, as a people, did not believe they were going to fail till they were absolutely falling into the abyss. The night Atlanta fell, while lurid fires lit the very sky, between midnight and day, I walked through this old town—my home behind me, and my family scattered; but I did not believe we were going to fail. "But that was only a boy's enthusiasm and folly," suggests a cool head of 1889. Not so. Our best people felt this strange and invincible confidence. Soldiers in the field, statesmen in the council chamber, ministers of God at the altar, old men and women sending their beardless boys to the front, soldiers' widows and orphans (though cold, hungry and houseless), the men in the trenches, half-fed and ragged—all felt that we could not fail. Such a passion of hope and confidence never dominated the heart of a whole people.

A weather-wise man there may have been here and there, who knew, even in 1863, that the war ought to stop; as a rule, a man feathering his own nest and making money while his people were bleeding to death, and cool enough to foresee events because he was too selfish to feel the throb of the breaking hearts of the Confederacy.

But the overwhelming mass of the people did not believe that the war ought to stop short of absolute independence. Mr. Davis could not, in 1863, have stopped the war. Had he tried, it would have cost him his head and plunged the South into convulsions worse than the war itself. As well speak of stopping a cyclone by incantations.

Let us be just to our heroic dead. He did just what we put him at the head of the Confederacy to do. If he thought the war should be pushed to the bitter end, or to independence, so thought we all. If not all, yet the most, and the best Southern men and women there were.

The heroism of the people of the South was only matched by their religion. Their perfect confidence was bottomed on an absolute conviction of the righteousness of their cause and a perfect assurance that Almighty God would vindicate them. And when their flag went down in black night and the Confederacy was dead, they accepted the providence that crushed their hope and shocked their faith, and utter failure did not breed unbelief in the South.

These things, concerning that time, I have said because they were true. And concerning this time, I say because I firmly believe: I devoutly recognize the wise and good hand of God in overruling our purpose and effort; thank him for the end of slavery and rejoice in a restored Union, as the best government in the world, and as the most potent instrument of Divine Providence in saving the human race.

Not at this time would I enter upon any minute analysis of Mr. Davis' public career or private character. His public career belongs to history. As to his private character, I did not know him as a friend knows a friend. Twice only I saw him, each time being only one of a nameless crowd. First, as he passed through Atlanta, in the spring of 1861, on his way to Richmond; second, as he rode through the streets of Atlanta, twenty-four years after, at the unveiling of Senator Hill's statue. I speak only of what the country knows.

1. The greed of money did not dwarf his soul nor canker his heart. His hands were clean. His worst enemy can not think of Jefferson Davis as lending his influence to corrupt practices. The most brazen obbyists could never have approached him. Had he been in the Senate a hundred years, the white light of his honest soul would have abashed the boldest of the bribe-givers. We can not so much as conceive the thing to be possible; that this clean and kingly man could have sold himself.

2. We honor his self-respecting independence. Pressed down by debts that were without dishonor, he toiled on till he died and would not accept charity from a loving people, who would have made him rich. He did not ask cash for patriotism. Now that he is gone, the Southern people will honor themselves in paying a debt of gratitude so far as money can pay. They will be responsible for his debts and his family, and in a way so honorable as not to shame even him.

3. Let our young men remember and emulate his knightly courtesy toward women. During our past history, this grace has characterized our best men. Let us cherish this feeling. There is no highest manhood or noblest womenhood without it.

4. I do not know enough to speak minutely of his religious character. It is common enough to make up verdicts about men's relations to God. I do not. But I believe Mr. Davis was a true Christian. He recognized God and his Son Jesus Christ, and died in the Christian Church.

While our cities contend in loving strife for the honor of his grave and when they build monuments to his memory they rightly honor a man who, thrown into the whirlpool of a world-shaking revolution, bore himself grandly, and who, when it was all over, accepted what came upon him with perfect dignity and unflinching fortitude.

All over the South to-day our people are trying to voice their gratitude and love. There will never be such a scene again. As the historian, Motley, writes of William, Prince of Orange, some may say this day of Jefferson Davis: "And when he died, the little children cried in the streets."

Letter from West Point, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: I enter upon my fourth year at West Point under most favorable conditions. Our house of worship is comfortable and neat; still other improvements should and will be made. Our parsonage is comparatively new, comfortable and neat. For the first time in four years we are out of debt. This would make any church or individual feel better. Our improvement here for many years was very slow, but perceptible. For a time we seemed to struggle for bare existence. But ours was a heroic band. When we numbered sixty, our Baptist brethren numbered 150. Now we number 231, and they 250. In three years our net gain in membership has been over 25 per cent., and that in the Sunday-school about 70 per cent. We have taken numbers into the church for the past three Sundays on which I preached. We closed a fine revival on Sunday night before Conference. The Rev. Jos. J. Jones was with us for about ten days, preaching in the spirit and power of the Master. I had shared largely in the prejudices against this brother as the result of what I had heard and read about him, and persistently declined to ask him to hold a meeting in my charge. Finally, such an appeal was made as I could not resist, and I yielded. I received him with many misgivings, and for the first few days, at times, at least, I heard him with actual fear and trembling. Some here, not specially noted for piety, refused to hear him at all; but their number was very small. Others, after hearing him, resolved to hear him no more; but they failed to keep their resolutions. After the third day the current was completely in his favor, and he managed with the skill of a master to the last. I am free to admit that he says some things which I think are not proper things to be said in the pulpit, and I so told him; but nothing half as bad as I had heard him reported as saying. But he says so many good things that I could well afford to condemn the others. I have rarely heard a man who more thoroughly convinced me of the soundness of his conversion, and of the fact that his heart is overflowing with the love of God and man. His treatment of a subject is unique, his grasp remarkable, and the tenacity with which he holds on to, and the skill with which he draws and applies, very striking. My people will hail with delight his coming at any time. He did much toward helping Christians to a better life, reclaiming the backslidden; and many, I trust, were savingly converted. We have a partial, almost positive, promise from him that he and his brother, "Sam," will hold a meeting for us between now and spring. We pray for their coming.

Pulpit Language.

Some time ago we published an article on the above subject, and we received many letters and verbal messages of approval. We herewith append some striking sentences from Prof. Hoss, of the Vanderbilt University, on the same subject. Prof. Hoss, writing in the Nashville Advocate, on "Evangelists—Good and Bad," takes occasion to say this, which we heartily endorse:

There must be a prompt and permanent stoppage of the flood of foul talk that in some quarters is streaming from the pulpit. That great plainness of speech is eminently becoming in a minister of the gospel is not to be denied. That the courageous denunciation of sin in all its forms is one of his highest duties, must be admitted without question. Thus far let us go, but no further. Our Lord himself has set us the great and perfect example. From no one else do we get so scathing a characterization of the evil doings of wicked men; yet all his words are as chaste as the mountain snow. Among merely human preachers of modern times, John Wesley is the highest type of rugged and unsparing honesty; but in all his sermons there is not a passage which could not properly be read aloud in a family circle. A message that is too dirty to be delivered to a promiscuous audience should not be delivered at all. I seriously doubt whether the practice of preaching sermons "to men only" is not radically wrong in principle, and pernicious in effect. Certainly there is no warrant for it in the New Testament.

Is it not an awful thing when the style of preaching is such as to incur the just reproach of decent people of the world? Are there not natural obstacles enough in the way of the church? Shall we multiply them needlessly? Shall we be guilty of the folly of creating difficulties, and of blocking up our own path? The worst of this whole business, as has already been intimated, is that its evil effects are not at once visible. They require time to show themselves. Sooner or later they are sure to come—a bountiful crop. If I have spoken with more than ordinary warmth, it is because there is occasion for it. To keep quiet while such tendencies are manifesting themselves would be recreancy to duty.

Nothing to Give.

So said a member of a city Church to one of the appointed collectors of foreign missions; and yet he professed to be a disciple of Christ—to be governed by the self-denying principles of his gospel.

Nothing to give! And yet he talked of the preciousness of the gospel to his own soul—of the hopes he entertained of his salvation through its blood-purchased provisions.

Nothing to give! And he sometimes attends the monthly concert, and prays that God will send the gospel to the ends of the earth. If dollars were as cheap as words, the treasury of benevolence would be full.

Nothing to give! And he wears decent apparel, lives in a comfortable house, sets a plentiful table, and seems to want for nothing necessary to the comfort to his family.

Nothing to give! And yet he indulges freely in little luxuries, gathers his friends sometimes around a well-stored board, in convivial enjoyment, and can well afford the expense.

Nothing to give! And the heathen are stretching out their hands in imploring petition for the bread of life; and warm-hearted Christian ministers, and even Christian women, are standing upon the shores of our own land, and looking across into the darkness, and weeping for the means to carry them there, that they may minister to the spiritual necessities of those perishing millions.

Nothing to give! Yet God, in his providence, is constant and munificent in his benefactions. God never answers to the claims of creatures upon his daily benevolence, "I have nothing to give."—Selected.

The simple truth is that any temptation may be too seductive for any one of us, except as we are upheld by divine aid. We may be, as we suppose ourselves, relatively stronger to resist some sins than others, but, absolutely, we are too weak of ourselves to conquer any of them. Here is another, and a more important, reason for our failures. We forget to depend upon the Holy Spirit. We try to overcome in our own strength alone.

Is not the moral plain? We can be strong, even in our naturally strongest points of character, only as we remember that of ourselves we can do nothing, and that all our sufficiency is of God.

THE DEATH OF THE YEAR.

A cloud came out of the golden west,
A bell rang over the silent air.
The sun-god hurried away to rest,
Flushing with kisses each cloud he prest.
And O! but the day was fair!

"How brightly the year goes out," they said;
"The glow of the sunset lingers long.
Knowing the year will be over and dead,
Its sad hours over—its sweet hours fled—
With service of Even song."

"How sadly the year came in," they said.
I listened and wondered in dusk of night.
To me no year that might come instead
Of the old friend numbered among the dead
Could ever be half so bright.

The sun-kissed clouds grew pale and gray,
The bells hung silent in high mid-air,
Waiting to ring the year away
In strains that were ever too glad and gay
For me—as I listened there.

O, hearts! that beat in a million breasts;
O, lips! that utter the same old phrase;
I wonder that never a sorrow rests
In words you utter to friends and guests
In the new year's strange new days!

Is it just the same as it used to be?
Have new years only a gladder sound?
Forever and always it seems to me
That no new face can be sweet to see
As the old ones we have found.

* * * * * * * *

There is no cloud in the darkened west,
The bell is silent in misty air.
The year has gone to its last long rest,
And how I loved and who knew it best
Shall meet it—God knows where!

Louisiana Conference Reports.

BOARD OF MISSIONS.

It is a matter of surprise, and food for thought, that the church, through assemblies like the present, has to urge its membership to the discharge of missionary obligations that should press as a burden, and whose performance should be regarded as a privilege.

Christ has died for sinners; sinners on this side of the sea, and on the other side; sinners in Africa and India, as much as in America. This good news of pardon, with the invitation to heaven and eternal life, has been committed to the church. If she does not deliver the tidings, who will? And who, indeed, can? Will the national government, or the great monied corporations of the land? As for the first, it is content with a Thanksgiving proclamation; and the second constitutes the great violater of the Sabbath which the gospel imposes upon us. If the message be ever given, the church must and will be the messenger. Through her holy lips the nations are to hear of free and full salvation. And she will yet do it.

But has it occurred to you that the church has had this gospel, or good news, nearly 2,000 years, and the world has not yet, in its wholeness, heard the tidings of pardon, peace and purity for the sinner?

Two thousand years! Tiberius Cæsar was living when the church first received this command from the lips of Christ: Go ye into all the world and tell the people I have died, and they can now live. Pompeii had not then been buried; England was filled with savages when Christ said, "Go." And now to-day England is hoary with records of history. Long lines of kings have come, achieved, died, and gone to ashes. Pompeii, after the burial of ages, has been uncovered, and travelers stand wondering in the midst of its hoary monuments. The Cæsars are now like shadows in history—they are so far removed; and yet, still the church has not yet delivered that message to the world.

Look at it, brethren! One-third only of the world to-day has been reached with the tidings of salvation. Livingstone has gone through and through Africa. Stanley has crossed and recrossed its broad dimensions, and has pierced its darkest and most tangled jungles. Scores of daring men have wrestled with icebergs of north and south, and gone beyond the habitation of man in the interests of commerce and science; and yet the church, with millions of men and countless millions of money, has not yet carried the message of Christ to the world, after the flight of twenty centuries. What is the occasion of this failure? It is not physical inability. The writer firmly believes that one reason God has pushed the Stanleys and Livingstones, and daring explorers and navigators in every direction over continent and ocean, was to show us what we could do. It is a picture-lesson. It is the cry to come on. Not that the church, in an individual sense, needed this (for Livingstone was a Christian, and the missionary in all lands has been a daring traveler, and has often preceded the man of commerce), but the church, as a body, needed to be stimulated by these spectacles.

Again, it is not for lack of money, for the church to-day is rich. Read Dr. Strong's book, and see how vast is the wealth of the religious denominations of this country alone. It is not that the land can not be taken. God gives the answer in the achievements of Bishop Thoburn in India, and Taylor in Africa, and Gen. Booth all over the world. This last-named man has sent thousands of workers, for Christ over the world.

One of the remarkable features of the age is the number of self-supporting missionaries in the world. What, then, is needed? Everyone who loves Christ and souls should ask that question. You may answer it as you will—you may offer different suggestions; but I firmly believe that prayerful thought will convince you that the vital and pressing need—the thing we must have—is the baptism of the Holy Ghost upon the church as it was given on the day of Pentecost. It was a blessing of expulsive driving power then, and will be so again when received. It turned God's people into flaming messengers of love and zeal then, and will again. It was so essential—that Christ said then, Tarry until you get it—and it is so essential now, that the church must not only tarry to obtain, but can do nothing else than tarry until she is filled with it. She comes into fullness of life and strength and highest activity only with this blessing. May God send it upon us! The baptism of the Holy Ghost on the pew will open the purses and hearts of the people, and the same baptism on the pulpit will give us men of holy fire and fervor, before whom sin and Satan and the world can not stand; and the nations shall be won to God.

Concerning the domestic mission work in the bounds of our Conference, we can say little, owing to the absence of reports which we solicited in the beginning of the Conference. Nevertheless, the work has been well manned, and faithful service has been rendered in the wide fields of our Conference.

At a meeting of the Conference Board of Missions, held on yesterday, it was resolved that, in consequence of much dissatisfaction expressed—and because of a better business system—that hereafter the treasurer of the Board will, on order drawn by president or secretary, pay the salaries of our home missionaries quarterly in advance. The presiding elders, in case of unfaithfulness, duly notifying the president or secretary of Board.

B. Carradine, Sec'y.

TEMPERANCE.

The subject of temperance is one that has come before us so often, and under such a variety of presentations, that your committee hesitate to offer anything beyond a brief summary of facts, setting forth the particulars in which it affects us and in which we may possibly affect it. It is a question vital to Christianity and good government. As a church, we are loyal to temperance; as the citizens of a great republic, we are pledged to the triumph of temperance principles. And it may be well for us, as a body of Christian ministers and laymen, for many reasons, to utter a new manifesto upon this subject at this time and place, and to declare ourselves, socially, politically and ecclesiastically, committed to the destruction of this common foe of mankind. There is said to be only one doctrinal mean upon which all men can stand, so various is the moral constitution of the race to which we belong, and that is the law of self-preservation. Upon this broad platform we may assemble with all the fragments of contending nations and municipalities of earth, and realize a federation of the children of Adam, a brotherhood of man. In this age of broadening franchises and of the extension of freedom's empire to North and South and East and West, we do not hesitate to align ourselves with all the moving hosts of temperance, black and white, free and enslaved, male and female, doctrinaire and fanatic, and declare ourselves the eternal enemy of this enemy of our eternal interests. Not that we commit ourselves for a moment to field campaigning against this stronghold of Satan, for that would prove a fatal weakness which this artful enemy would certainly employ to our disadvantage, and, perhaps, destruction; but to help those, as we are in duty bound, that helpus and to present an union of hearts against this triumphing Xerxes, strong as the three hundred that beat with a single pulse at Thermopylæ, and an union of arms as mighty as that which linked together the mailed members of the Pyrrhic phalanx in every conflict for popular freedom. That this enemy of all liberty, this ensnarer of men's consciences par excellence this arch-author of all devices, of pitfall and cunning ambuscade to enslave the bodies and souls of men, should have appeared recently in the sublime roll of a William Tell and of a George Washington and have declared himself the author and chief patron of our freedom as a nation, is or ought to be proof positive that in the great political-religious tilt, which is progressing in our country against intemperance, that we are not contending against an angel of light, but only his counterfeit, and that we should have, by fair means or foul, and certainly by all means, a sumptuary law, or something exceeding like it, to gag this Satan. But, however warm our patriotic incentives, and however passionate our resolve to serve God and country in this sublime warfare, let no minister of the gospel leave his fortress, his strong rock, his high tower to engage this consummate politician on ground of his own choosing. In conflict with this foe a word less than quick and powerful would be wasted rhetoric, and there could be no situation of encounter so favorable as that from which the Son of God and the apostles themselves thundered in the ages past. What is the wisdom of a man when matched against the infernal diplomacy that led a third part of the angels into rebellion, and in a myriad encounters has humbled the genius and pride and pomp of man? And who has not learned from the history of the second temptation that there is only one weapon which can parry the fiery darts which he voluminously employs both against nations and individuals—the two-edged sword of the Spirit, the Word of God. Whenever the cause of temperance shall, in the providence of nations and churches, become divorced from Christianity, Satan will find means to corrupt it, and whenever we enter the arena against him stripped of our armor of light, and without the trusty blade with which the Holy Spirit arms us for the fight, it will be to suffer defeat. The gospel of temperance, which is the gospel of Paul before Felix, and which, aided by the Divine Spirit, brings forth a blessed fruit of moderation in human character that is equal to all human purposes of reform and all offensive and defensive exploiting against the enemy of truth, is the most powerful auxiliary of human skill and eloquence in this warfare; and shall we resign it for the cold logic of statistical tables, or for dusty platitude, or vapid moralizing upon the endless wherefores of this and every other uninspired theme? Gospel grape and canister is the only thing this enemy fears, and the soldier of Zion who does not occasionally stun him with a volley has left out an important member of his commission, and is not more than one third, at most, a preacher of the unsearchable riches of Christ. The god of intemperance is all powerful on the hustings, and he is a mighty manipulator of ballots, and, for that reason, often prohibition does not prohibit; but the gospel prohibits. It prohibits with a vengeance, at least, equal to omnipotence; it prohibits the drunkard's thirst for drink, and the politician's lust for power, and it puts a hook into Satan's jaw and makes him as domestic in his views of law and order as a chained bear. It would seem upon gospel principles that a man is of little use in the world, except when under the influence of powerful moral intoxicants, good or evil. If the man can not be quelled, the devil can not rise, or the God can not assert himself; and, therefore, it is that, perhaps, by the grace of the arch-deceiver we live in an age of breweries and in a government of saloons; and, therefore, it is likewise that the Son of God ascended to his Father that the Holy Spirit might come to all nations and communities and homes and hearts. If we see a man drunk, as the apostles of Pentecost, it is important to know whether the agent of his insentiency be the evil spirit or the good spirit. Whisky is the semi-ethereal agent, with which Satan carries on his campaigning conquests against nations and men, and it kindles a hell in the breast of the sinner as readily as that Holy Spirit of God, by which Christian empire is established, causes a heaven to spring up in the heart of the Christian. Each in its sphere is a symbol of fire, and each burns unquenchably whatever of antipathetic substance to which its flame attaches itself. The spirit of evil, the demon of drink, burns up, as though it had a special commission from the Creator himself to do this work, the gold of human character; and the Holy Ghost, with more than crucible heat, its dross. All virtues of man's being are correlated with the ministry of the Holy Spirit, all the vices of his nature with the evil spirit of alcohol. But however instructive may be these analogies we can not pursue them further, and beg to cite you finally to the logical conclusion that as Spirit is more powerful than matter, and God than Satan, we can most effectively oppose the ministry of the latter by the ministry of the former, and to record the prophecy that the spirit of intemperance in the nation and church is doomed to extinction by that mighty agent upon which our Savior's kingdom of righteousness, peace and joy rests as an eternal foundation.

Resolved, That, as a body of Christian ministers, we pledge ourselves to the support of prohibition for the home, the church, and the nation, and at the same time that we regard with favor that Christian conservatism which views with jealousy any effort to accomplish a divorce between Christianity and temperance.

Resolved That we will, during the ensuing year, preach oftener upon the cardinal doctrine of the blessed gospel of the grace of God.

Resolved, That we are in hearty sympathy with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in their noble and self-sacrificing labors for the extension of their order and for the subjugation of their great foe and ours.

Resolved, That in view of the benign effect, both political and religious, of prohibition in those parishes of our State where it has been established by law, that we record a grateful sense of the benefit conferred upon this great cause by the wise legislation of our law makers in council, and that we urge them to still further efforts in legal campaigning against this deadly foe of our commonwealth's peace and liberties.

Resolved, That we are uncompromisingly opposed to the compromise with liquor manufacturers and dealers known as high license, regarding it a device of Satan to catch the unwary, and which will not fail to secure the support alike of the half-hearted friends of temperance and of its most inveterate enemies.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Several papers have been referred to this committee. Among them the report of the Publishing House at Nashville. We can not but note with gratification the marked growth and prosperity of its every department. We express ourselves pleased with the appearance, as well as character, of our recently published works.

The report of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is likewise before us. We have only words of strong commendation and approval to both publisher and editor. The increase upon the subscription list of two thousand names in a single year is significant. The thrill of a new life has been felt for over a year. The paper is improving in various respects. Its improved appearance is manifest. Among the entire family of the Advocates we know of none to-day that presents a more tasteful, agreeable and, we may add, solid appearance than our Conference organ. The publisher has been at great pains, and at the cost of much sacrifice of time, personal convenience and money, in advancing the interests of the paper. He has lately introduced into the business management Bro. D. L. Mitchel, a member of Carondelet Street Church, a man of business experience, zeal, and activity. Under this partnership of labor and wisdom we are justified in saying there has never been a more correct and satisfactory business system in the Advocate building than is felt to be established there now. Our publisher deserves the thanks of this body. The editorial management of the paper has been this year excellent. Besides this, we feel that it is nothing but just to Dr. Carter to say that, perhaps, no editor in our connection has traveled more among the District Conferences and various general church meetings than he has done this year. The result of this has been, beyond all peradventure, good to the church. Doubtless, it will be proper for the Conference to be informed at this time that the editor and this writer raised this year, by their personal exertions, money sufficient to liquidate a debt against the Advocate of twenty years' standing.

Our colporteur, Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh, has filed his report. We are gratified to see that his appointment was not a mistake. Over $10,000 worth of good books has been sold by him this year; 5,000 pages of tracts distributed, and $900 worth of Bibles. This is the sowing of good seed, indeed. A sowing that can only bring good to the people; a work that means blessings for individual, family, and community. We endorse the brother in his work, and bid him God-speed.

On motion of C. W. Carter, B. Carradine, S. S. Keener and J. M. Beard were elected as the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate from the Louisiana Conference. B. Carradine, Chair'n.

Letters from Japan.

Mr Editor: I have been absent from Kobe for some six weeks on a part of my work, some distance from Kobe, at the southwestern end of the great island of Shikoku. A part of my time was passed in Uwajima with our native church there, as many of them wanted to be more fully instructed in the truths of the gospel. Some who are not yet members of the church attended our meetings, and also invited us to go to their homes and hold meetings, which we did. After being there some two or three weeks, we visited several other towns and met with many who are anxious to know more of Christianity. In some of these towns they have invited me to return and remain some time with them.

While at one of these towns a government officer came from a town, some ten miles distant, to see me and learn more of Christianity. He said he wished to have his people hear about Christianity, and at some time he would like me to go and tell them of the doctrines of Christ. Said he himself was not a Christian, but had heard the gospel preached in Tokio. He bought a Bible, New Testament and some tracts and returned to his home. I hope to see him again on my return there this week, or next.

During my absence a letter came for me from several persons in the town of Tadotsu, in the island of Shikoku, on the Inland Sea, just one hundred miles from Kobe. The letter was forwarded to me at Uwajima, and I found it was from some friends in that town whom I met last May on two occasions and had meetings with them. They urged me to come to their town and open a church, as there were eight or ten who desired to join the church and become Christians. When I reached home I found they had written again, and not hearing from either of their letters, they sent a telegram, which Mrs. Lambuth answered.

In a day or two another letter came to Mrs. Lambuth, asking her to let them know where I was, and at what hotel, that they might send for me. After reading this letter, I felt it was the call of God and I had an intense desire to go and tell them the way of salvation more perfectly. I had met some of them twice; and I found that one of them, Mr. Mitane, had a son in America who was a Christian and a preacher to his people in San Francisco. He has been writing to his father and mother, urging them to embrace Christianity. They have been studying the Bible for some time, and now, with others, earnestly desire to be received into the church. I prayed that God would open the way for them, and I have urged some of our Presbyterian friends to go to their help, for I then could not see how it was possible for me or any member of our mission to go, our hands being so full of work. I wrote them that just now I did not see how we could go to them without neglecting other work. In a few days another letter came from them, saying, "There are some eight or ten persons who want to join the Methodist Church; and if you can not come to us, we will go to you and be received into the church." When I received that letter I felt I could not longer refuse to go to them. At once I wrote to them I would leave here on November 29, to spend several days with them while on my way to another part of my work. How could I refuse to go in answer to such an urgent call?

My dear brother, this is another Macedonian cry for help; and are there not young men willing to give their lives to this work of saving these perishing millions who earnestly implore Christian help? Are there not hundreds, if not thousands, in our church to whom God has given the gold and the silver of this world to use for his glory, who would be willing to send help if they can not come? Oh, for a baptism of the Spirit and of fire in the hearts of God's people, that they may be willing to go or send! Pray for us, brethren. Yours in Christ,

J. W. Lambuth.

Kobe, Japan, Nov. 26, 1889.

Mr. Editor: Though so far away, by your kindness I am now learning more about the work, the ministers and other zealous-minded ones within the bounds of your two Conferences than ever before.

The Advocate comes to our house regularly twice a month—two at a time—and by means of the hasty scanning of your columns, we gather names, facts and figures that serve to spread the work before us. One fact must be apparent to anyone who has read the Advocate—namely, that there are some people in Mississippi and Louisiana who have the true missionary spirit. Remember what a sum of money you raised more than two years ago for the purpose of sending out missionaries to foreign fields. I think I was one of the number sent out by that fund. I know not their names, but shall ever feel a tender affection toward the unknown donors. They live somewhere in Louisiana and Mississippi. May God bless them richly in all good things for life and godliness!

Again, see how the present fund for "another missionary to Japan" is steadily growing.

Another fact to be noted concerning the Methodists of your two Conferences, is their kindly interest in Japan. Not unmindful of other mission fields, your people are discerners of the times and movements in the kingdom of God throughout the world. From some cause, they think this is the day of the Lord in Japan.

Now, if a suggestion may be offered: why may not some young man from Louisiana or Mississippi be sent by that fund to Japan? Since your people are giving the money, let us pray the Head of the church to move some sturdy young preacher from your territory to offer himself. Dr. John and the Board and the Bishop would, no doubt, recognize the fitness of such a thing. If you will send us a young man who shall become another such a missionary as the Mississippi Conference has given us, and who shall be spared to labor for so many years in the East as he has, then, indeed, will the fruits unto eternal life in that day rise up in blessing before the eyes of those who have contributed to the fund for "another missionary to Japan." Sincerely yours,

J. C. C. Newton.

From the Work.

GRAND CANE, LA.

Mr. Editor: About fifteen years ago, the Methodists living around the present site of the pleasant and flourishing town of Grand Cane, realizing the necessity of a house of their own in which to worship, built a very neat little church under the ministrations of Rev. John Pipes. But as Methodism is aggressive and progressive, having an elevating and civilizing effect upon the human race wherever its doctrines are faithfully preached, that little church in the Beech Grove has given place to one of much larger dimensions, so that in style and beauty the latter has more glory than the former. Near two years ago, after deliberation, those people concluded that they needed and must have a better and larger house. A building committee was, therefore, appointed, and steps were immediately taken tending to its erection; so there now stands, conspicuous and towering high above the town, within two hundred yards of the old, one of the most beautiful little churches in Louisiana, speaking in unmistakable tones of the enlightenment and civilization existing among this estimable and devoted people. On the second Sabbath in December a large audience assembled to listen to an eloquent and instructive sermon by the venerable builder and dedicator of the former in this new house, and to witness the dedication ceremonies which consecrated this monument of praise and glory to God. The bell, chandeliers and carpeting for the aisles are still lacking; but with such men and women (and especially women) these are very small matters, and ere the close of the present Conference year, doubtless, all will be complete. Then, with its three churches and large and flourishing school, under the management of Professor Williamson, Grand Cane will be one of the most pleasant and inviting towns in all North Louisiana.

SALLIS, MISS.

Mr. Editor: Our welcome at the newly remodeled and much improved parsonage of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Sallis, December 19, by the Ladies' Aid Society, presided over by Mrs. Dr. Shiler, was hearty and in good style. The ladies made our safe rich and sweet with their free-will offerings. Such a welcome from such a people is very encouraging and inspiring. Our outlook is promising. Thanks to and blessings upon the entire community and charge!

Gratefully and hopefully,

R. M. and Lilly Evans.

New Light from Old Eclipses; or, Chronology Corrected and the Four Gospels Harmonized. By W. M. Page. Introduction by Rev. James H. Brookes, D. D. St. Louis: C. R. Barnes Publishing Company.

The author has taken great pains in the construction of this book. He has reconstructed and corrected all the solar and lunar tables, so as to determine the time of the eclipses mentioned in history and, applying these corrected tables to the New Testament record, he has reached conclusions quite different from those ordinarily held in regard to the birth, ministry and death of our Lord. For instance, he maintains that Jesus was born during Passover week, about the latter part of March or first part of April, B. C. 3; that his ministry lasted but one year, that his crucifixion occurred on Thursday, March 17, A. D. 29. He has also constructed a harmony of the four gospels on his theory. The book is one of great interest to all Bible readers.

The Life and Death of Jefferson Davis. Edited by A. C. Bancroft. J. S. Ogilvie, Publisher, New York. Price, 25 cts.

This book purports to give a full history of Mr. Davis' eventful life and death, together with an account of the funeral services and comments of the press from all parts of the country.

PERIODICALS.

—The Missionary Review of the World, for January, comes to us in a new dress, and with the whole mechanical appearance improved. This number begins a new year and the prospectus promises an "embarrassment of riches," a host of new writers, and progress along every line. The "Literature" department contains several noteworthy articles. Dr. Pierson leads off with a characteristic paper entitled, "Is There to be a New Departure in Missions?" which merits careful reading. Perhaps the most noted paper in the number is contributed by Rev. James Johnston, F. S. S., of England, secretary of the late World's Conference on Missions, on "Education as an Evangelistic Agency," an eminently timely subject, and one which at present greatly agitates the friends of missions, especially abroad. The other seven departments of the Review are full of missionary intelligence from all parts of the world-field, reports of societies, statistics, Editorial Notes and Monthly Concert matter. On the whole, the third year of this review of universal missions opens with, if possible, increased vigor and promise of enhanced power and usefulness.

Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; in clubs of ten, $1 50. Specimen numbers, 20 cents.

LESSON II.—January 12.

THE SONG OF MARY.

Luke i, 46-55.

GOLDEN TEXT.—My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.—Luke i, 46, 47.

TIME.—Possibly B. C. 5.

PLACE.—"A city of Juda," in "the hill country."

46. And Mary said—That a rustic girl like Mary should attempt poetry in any case has seemed strange to some minds, and the similarity of her song to that of Hannah (1. Sam. ii, 1-10) has been a stumbling-block to others. 'Familiarity with Oriental customs clears away both of these difficulties. In the East poetry has never been fenced off from prosaic life by as high partitions as in Europe and America. Rhyme is but slightly depended upon, rhythm is emphasized by few and simple rules, and stock phrases and venerable similes are freely used. There are few great poets or poems, but diluted poetry is everywhere, and improvisations are of daily occurrence. Before the civilization of Japan was modified by European influences, ladies and gentlemen were expected to make verses on every occasion of social compliment or pleasure; in Scheherazade's story of "Habib and Doratil-Gonse" (in the Arabian Nights' Entertainments) Amiraia sings over her newborn child a song of thanksgiving which may well be read as illustrative of the Magnificat; and common Bedouins in the present day are capable of taking high flights in the pervading poetical atmosphere. It was easy for Mary, a daughter of David's royal race, well acquainted with the lyrics of the Old Testament, favored by God and filled with the Holy Ghost, to become in an instant both poetess and prophetess. The Magnificat was first used in the church ritual in A. D. 507. It is so full of Hebraisms as almost to form a mosaic of quotations from the Old Testament.

47. Hath rejoiced—Rather, exults. God my Saviour—The title "Saviour" is often applied to God in the Old Testament. The Greek gives the articles: "The God who is the, or my, Saviour." Mary says, My Saviour: she is, then, a sinner, needing a Saviour like any other child of Adam. Undoubtedly Mary was looking for civil and political blessings through the birth of the Messiah; but we overlook the clearness of her views, and the depth of her mind, by thinking that her expectations were only, or chiefly, fixed upon these. The temporal salvation which she expected was in her eye only the type and symbol of that higher salvation which she desired above all things.

48. He hath regarded—Rather, he looked upon. The low estate—The word may be rendered "humiliation." The reader will notice in this hymn more than one anticipation of the beatitudes. All generations shall call me blessed—These words have, of course, been partly instrumental in bringing about their fulfillment; but what a vision of the future they must have implied then on the part of the village maiden who uttered them!

49. He that is mighty—The Almighty, the King of glory. Great things—It is the Creator's nature to make something out of nothing. When one realizes his nothingness, God will make something out of him. Holy is his name—Psa. cxl, 9. "Thou only art holy." Shem, "name," is often a reverent periphrasis in Hebrew for God himself.

50. Mercy—The word emphasizes the misery with which grace deals; hence, peculiarly the sense of human wretchedness coupled with the impulse to relieve it, which issues in gracious ministry. Grace takes away the fault, mercy the misery. From generation to generation—Rather, unto generations and generations.

51. Showed strength—Literally, made strength. With his arm—"Thou hast a mighty arm." The nearest parallel to the remainder of the verse is Job v, 12. The proud—Of whom the speaker thought as the "proud," we can not know. They may have been the potentates of the world in which she lived, Herod and the emperor of Rome. They may have been the men of Jerusalem, who despised Galilee; or those of the other towns and villages of Galilee, who despised Nazareth; or, though less probably, those of Nazareth itself, who despised the carpenter and his betrothed. In the imagination—The faculty of thought, understanding, especially moral understanding. Some prefer to render, "by the imagination," thus making the proud the instrument of their own destruction.

52. He hath put down the mighty from their seats—Rather, he puts down potentates from thrones. The thought is common throughout the Bible. Mary would have been no true daughter of David if she could have spoken these words without primary reference to Herod; but no believing Israelite if she had thought of Herod alone. The overthrow of all anti-Messianic power seems, in her imagination, to begin with the fall of the Idumean usurper. Exalted them of low degree—How Mary's Nazarene neighbors would have laughed and sneered had they heard her thus sing! An obscure girl, with the Galilean brogue on her tongue, and a peasant's awkward dress and manners, at the best only the betrothed of a poor carpenter, and hereafter to be his wife with a deep stain on her name, certainly her "exaltation" was not as visible as her "low degree." It took a seer's eyes to discern that the poverty-stricken peasants grouped about Jesus from his birth to his death would loom up as the most considerable figures of their century. But how true her foresight was! You never knew a baby baptized Herod, or Caiaphas, or Cæsar, or Cyrenius; but Marys and Johns and Elizabeths and Josephs are in almost every family. The names are equally foreign to our tongue; and the only reason for the universal rejection of the one set and the adoption of the other is that, by the help of the perspective of centuries, we see that those of low degree in Herod's day were really the most highly exalted of all generations.

53. He hath filled the hungry—It is interesting to note the manner in which the song of the Virgin anticipates the beatitudes as reported by St. Luke (vi, 21). The words, like those of the beatitudes, have both their literal and their spiritual fulfillments.

54. Hath holpen—Literally, took by the hand.

55. As he spoke to our fathers—As the sentence stands in English, the words "Abraham and his seed" seem in apposition with "forefathers," and to be added as explaining it. In the Greek, however, they are in a different connection, and belong to what had gone before, the construction being as follows: "To remember his mercy (as he spake unto our forefathers) to Abraham and his seed forever." The mercy that had been shown to Abraham was, as it were, working even yet. It is not without interest to remember that when the evangelist transcribed the words he must have known St. Paul's interpretation of the promises to the "seed" of Abraham (Rom. ix, 7). Mic. vii, 20, "Thou will perform...the mercy to Abraham which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old." Gal. iii, 16, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made."

Missionary.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: After an absence of three weeks, Mr. Weems came home to spend a day with me. During his absence I fully realized what it is to be the wife of a working missionary. For days I saw not a soul who could speak a word of English; but the days were filled with work. The dear children of Carondelet Sunday-school, who surrendered the pleasure of a Christmas tree to make the poor Mexican children happy, are a blessing to me now, as I trust they will prove to the children here later. I can, by my own work, make their money go farther and give happiness to a greater number; so I give my whole time in the day and until nine o'clock at night to this labor of love, which keeps me interested, and leaves no time for loneliness or idle fears for my husband's safety. Had you seen him when he left, I am sure it would have excited your risibles, as his Mexican sombrero, for the country journeys on horseback, is not the most becoming headgear I have seen him wear. With a traveling bag in one hand, a large shawl on his shoulder, an immense bundle of Bibles from the American Bible House in the other hand, another in his arms, he made his way to the street car, laden in regular peon style. Though not elegantly equipped for the journey, the dear Lord did not refuse his company, and he not only went with him, but abided with him. His first quarterly meeting, held in Spanish, was a success. Bro. Watkins accompanied him, following up each Conference with special services. The first resulted in thirteen members in the fanatical city of Toluca. From there they went to Rincon, an Indian village, forty miles in the country, making the journey on Indian ponies. After the first week they were afar in the country, where there were no mail facilities, and I could not hear a word. In Rincon it was so cold, and the people had to travel so far, they thought it advisable not to attempt protracted service; so they baptized six children and went to Tenango, many leagues away—part of the journey made in a diligence and the remainder on horseback through mountain fastnesses, where highway robbery is of daily occurrence. They had no use for weapons of defense, traveling safely under the watch-care of him they were trying to serve. In this village they received ten members; with three here, makes twenty-six. In this land this is most encouraging. They have been out a month.

Mr. Weems says he never saw such hunger for the gospel, and their pleading to open new work he will attend to to the extent of our ability. When he reached home, wearied and sore, having slept on Indian beds and eaten chili enough to warm him internally, at least, he found me with a stiff neck from cold, but happy in the reception of a letter from a friend in Alabama, who assured me that she and several other friends would support a Bible woman in Mexico district. This is a most important branch of work. Through her efforts the Catholics are induced to come to church and hear the gospel read. We sadly need one in Toluca, and will use the means to employ one for that place. If we had not been so blessed, and received so much sympathy and expression of interest from the friends at home, we could not now be so happy and hopeful.

I received a letter yesterday from Bro. Aguilar, who had heard of the contemplated Christmas tree in this city, beseeching me to share it with the poor children of Amecameca, appealing to my sympathies in such a way that if I could live and give it, I would go to Amecameca and give them a tree myself. Alas! my desires are greater than my ability; so I have written to him and explained my situation. I shall inform the superintendent and children of Carondelet St. Sunday-school of the result of their gift. I pray it may prove a great blessing to them, as well as to the poor Mexicans. The tree will differ somewhat from those at home, filled with ornamental and elegant gifts. Ours will have clothes for the naked, Bibles for those hungry for the Word of Life, and many other useful, as well as ornamental, things. I am sure it will bring joy to many dark homes, and brighten the lives of many desolate ones. May God bless all who help poor priest-ridden Mexico!

MRS. S. G. WEEMS.

CITY OF MEXICO.

Temperance.

The new State headquarters of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. were formally dedicated and opened December 10. The rooms are in a new and handsome building on Arch street, Philadelphia.

The work of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. in building a home for friendless women is actively progressing. Eau Claire has been selected as the location and the building and site are to cost between $20,000 and $30,000.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Independent Order of Good Templars and the Prohibition party of Nebraska have formed a triple alliance to work for the State prohibition amendment.

Mrs. S. F. Grub, superintendent of W. C. T. U. work among foreigners, is now publishing her tracts in fourteen different languages. She has begun to issue these tracts as semi-monthly temperance talks, ten thousand at an issue.

The Mid-Continent tells of a Tennessee judge of the criminal court who has created a sensation in religious circles by officially declaring a church raffle illegal and charging a Nashville grand jury to indict all persons buying or selling tickets.

Gus Kidder, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, has been fined $1,000 for violating the prohibitory law. W. H. Colby, a prominent business man, was also fined $1,000 for allowing liquor to be sold in a building owned by him, after an injunction was granted.

The Nashville Issue claims that the money that Tennessee pays annually to the whiskey shops ($15,000,000) would meet all the regular expenses of the State for ten years. Nashville saloon receipts alone would carry on the government.

The Chicago Daily News, which has lately stood out so bravely against the saloon, uses 375 tons of paper a month, this being more, by twenty-five tons, than the Tribune, Inter-Ocean, and Staats Zeitung, the three strongest anti-prohibition papers, use all combined.

A wealthy gentleman of large business experience who was an interested visitor at the national convention of the W. C. T. U., said he could not understand how this great organization was able to do so much for the temperance cause with so little money, and incidentally remarked that the sum of $25,000, more than the entire amount which passed through the National W. C. T. U. treasury last year, would hardly be sufficient to buy the beer for a political convention!

Ohio W. C. T. U. never, with the exception of the "amendment year," organized so many new societies. The reports show sixty-nine W. C. T. Unions, and twenty-five Y's, total ninety-four. The Y's have effected organizations in thirteen counties which last year had none. Seventy-five new Loyal Temperance Legions are also reported. There are now but five counties in the state having no organization of the W. C. T. U. This does not look much like disintegration.

Senator Blair has introduced in the Senate a bill to provide for a commission of inquiry on the alcoholic liquor traffic, with a joint resolution to amend the Constitution by prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors as a beverage. This bill is especially supported by a petition from the national temperance society, praying for the institution of such a commission of inquiry and asking the adoption of an amendment to the national Constitution prohibiting the manufacture, importation, transportation and sale of alcoholic liquors as a beverage, throughout the entire national domain.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 2, 1890.

The New Year.

We have come again, dear reader, to the beginning of another new year! How many New Year Days can we count? Some of us can count many; some of us but few. Each year, whether many or few, has brought its sunshine and shadows, its joys and sorrows, its pleasures and pains, its victories and defeats, but through them all the "Lord hath brought us by his love." It is fitting that we should pause on the threshold of the new, and look back and recall the past and gather up wisdom from experience, before we pass into the year of our Lord 1890. We might study our successes and failures to profit. We might meditate upon our blessings and crosses to spiritual edification. Even the memories of past enjoyments and disappointments might be made fresh starting-points in the journey of life. The Psalmist says: "We spend our years as a tale that is told;" and now is the time to read carefully and seriously and prayerfully the "tale" that our former years have told. It may with some be a sad tale, with others a tale of joy; still let it be read with the light of present position thrown full upon it. We might ponder, with usefulness to ourselves, the question, "What is the meaning of my life?"

But whatever may have been the past, we, to-day, look out upon a future such as the world never looked forward to before. The age is characterized by an intense and earnest activity. Men and women are toiling and scheming and thinking and pushing ahead with an intensity of purpose and a buoyancy of expectation that has no record in all the annals of our race. No seer dares to predict to-day what to-morrow will bring forth. Wonders come forth with such frequency that they have ceased to be wonders. The marvels of yesterday have come to be the commonplace things of to-day. The possibilities that are now hidden in the womb of time will become the actual experiences of every-day life as the year rolls along. A gentleman said to the writer the other day: "If you live twenty years, you will see the coming of the Lord." Who knows? The present condition of the world means something more than any other condition has ever meant. This new year begins its round with the added momentum of six thousand years of human history pouring its tide upon it. And who can tell what will be the result a twelvemonth hence. Surely it is a time for girding up the loins and keeping the lights burning.

There is more thinking, more planning, more work, to be done this year than in any year past. The Christian must be the busiest man in his community. Of all the men in the world, he can least afford to "eat idle bread." He is in touch with the whole world, and the world is waiting and expecting to feel that touch for its uplifting. Steam and electricity have laid the needy and helpless of earth at the door of the church, and every Christian hears the cry of distress, unless he has deliberately stopped his ears. Now is the time to take on a fresh supply of sympathy and love and liberality. Now is the time to meditate on the divine love as incarnated in Jesus, and find the full meaning of that great transaction as it lies hidden in the words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

The new year imposes new obligations, because it has brought us into new relations. Heavier responsibilities have been added to those already heavy. We stand upon the threshold of 1890 weighted down with the most solemn obligations. But God has promised help, and we may go forth to the future trusting him to keep his promises and to supply every need. Oh, when we remember his grace, trials and troubles and duties and responsibilities but become helps and efficient aids in our work and life. Seeking the "wisdom that cometh from above," and leaning upon his almighty arm of love, we may go forth with hope and encouragement; we may lead brave and helpful lives; we may fight successful battles; we may grow stronger in virtue; we may conquer selfishness, "endure hardness," and march from victory to victory. Having faith in God and faith in ourselves, we may each move along our several lines of duty with the firm tread of one conscious of moving in the right direction under the impulse of a right motive and toward a right goal.

Our Three Conferences.

We have been able to attend all our Conferences, spending nearly a whole Conference week with each. We observed the routine of business, mingled freely with the brethren, joined in their songs and prayers and preaching, and enjoyed the generous and Christian hospitality of men and women of God. It has been a three weeks of continuous pleasure of the purest kind. We have never known such a mellow spirit to pervade our Conferences. There was not a jar anywhere. There was less debate on the Conference floor than we have ever known. Every member, layman and preacher, seemed to be in a good humor with everyhody else. The business moved on from beginning to close without a jostle. The spiritual condition of our churches is very fine. The financial reports are better than ever before. The church has moved forward on all material lines and upward on all spiritual lines. Methodism in Mississippi and Louisiana was never so strong as it is to-day. It never held so good a position. It never was so well equipped. It was never so well officered. It never had as many loyal soldiers as are marching under its banners now. It never presented such a formidable line of battle to the enemies of good as it makes to-day. One hundred thousand members is no mean army, and, if properly handled, it may win many decisive victories. Our preachers are going out into all the "by-ways and hedges" and gathering recruits for the Lord's army in every place, and if every preacher and layman will be prompt in the discharge of duty to the cause of Christ, a year hence this great army will be increased by thousands. Let the watchword of everyone for this new year be, "Every one to his work!"

Mississippi Methodist College.

The work of endowing our Mississippi Methodist College moves on grandly. The readiness with which our people have responded to the call can not but be gratifying to every friend of the cause of education. It is an expression of their intelligent interest in the enterprise and a prophecy of the successful establishment of the institution. The raising of the first $50,000 ought to be but a stepping-stone to the accomplishment of more generous things, and the interest already manifested shows that all that our people need is that a proper presentation of the cause be made to them and an opportunity of subscribing be given. The willingness with which subscriptions are converted into notes and the promptness with which these notes are paid upon, and often before, maturity show that the college has taken a strong hold upon the hearts of the Methodists of the State.

The converting of notes into cash is the only solid foundation of the enterprise, and the only basis of intelligent operations, and it is to be hoped that there will in no case be delay in paying the notes as they fall due. The money as soon as paid in is invested by the treasurer of the Joint Committee, Major R. W. Millsaps, in interest-bearing bonds, and thus begins at once to work for the cause for which it was paid. These bonds are as good as gold, and are deposited to the credit of the Joint Committee in a "safe-deposit" vault. I have to-day seen $5,000 of such bonds placed to the credit of the committee.

Send in the money at once that it may work night and day for this great enterprise. Let every Methodist in Mississippi take advantage of this, the grandest opportunity in the history of Mississippi Methodism.

Remit as heretofore to Major R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, Miss., and for any information upon the subject write to the agent at Jackson, Miss. Correspondence is invited and will receive prompt attention.

"Newspaper Poachers."

The Southern Christian Advocate has an article on this subject, which we transfer to our editorial columns with our unqualified endorsement. Here it is:

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is the official organ of the Conferences in Mississippi and Louisiana. The paper is owned and controlled by these Conferences, and it represents their interests with marked ability and fidelity. It seems, however, that some of the other church papers wish to come in and share the patronage of that territory with our New Orleans contemporary. At any rate, at the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference representatives of quite a number of church papers were present, some of whom, at least, were pressing the claims of their journals upon the North Mississippi brethren. This leads the editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE to remark:

"Judging from the number of newspaper men at the session of the Conference, one would suppose that its territory was lying around loose, and that one paper had no more right there than another. Why is this thing thus? Have the papers all worked up their own territory? Is our territory better picking than their own? In the nature of things is such a procedure exactly right to all concerned? However, the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE carried the day over all the 'poachers.'"

So far as The Southern is concerned, we are quite willing for any of our church papers to seek patronage in our territory, provided they will stand on their own merits, and not attempt to take any undue advantage of the home paper. But when a paper a thousand miles from us sends out circulars and prints advertisements making extraordinary claims and offering extraordinary inducements, in order to build up its own circulation at the expense of that of the home paper, its course can hardly be commended as fair or honorable. And this is just what the St. Louis Advocate has done in the past and is doing to-day.

Some years ago the publisher of that journal sent circulars to Methodist preachers throughout the connection, urging them to take new subscriptions at fifty cents a year, we believe, and offering large commissions. The result was that thousands of new names were added to the subscription list, but with what result? At the end of the time paid for, the paper was not discontinued, but continued to come in the absence of an order to the contrary. Many of the subscribers overlooked the matter; others allowed the paper to come on, thinking that they would only have to pay the cut-rate price of the first year. But at the end of the second year bills were sent to these delinquent subscribers charging them two dollars and a half a year!

The St. Louis Advocate now makes another proposition, and it has the cheek to ask the Southern Methodist press to advertise it in their columns. We have nothing to say now of the extraordinary claims it sets up for itself as the "General Conference reporter," except that the same may be said in behalf of every other connectional paper. They will all contain full and interesting reports of the General Conference proceedings, and in this particular the St. Louis Advocate will not be one whit ahead of its contemporaries. But is it fair to the other religious journals of the church to enter their territory and seek subscribers on a specious plea and at half the usual rates? We do not think it is, and we do not believe there is another publisher in Southern Methodism that would attempt it. We believe in competition, but let it be fair and honorable competition. The St. Louis Advocate offers no such special rates in its own territory and for the benefit of its own people. It throws out this as a bait to secure patronage that belongs legitimately to other church papers. And when our people are induced by these flattering offers to send on their subscriptions, the paper will be continued even after the expiration of their subscriptions, and they will be called on to pay for the next year at the rate of two dollars and a half per annum! This may be "business"—catching subscribers by guile, as it were—but it does not impress us as a very honorable method of conducting the business of a religious newspaper.

The St. Louis Advocate is heartily welcome to all the subscribers it can get in South Carolina at the regular rates. We have no fears of an honorable competition with that or any other church paper. But we do protest against its effort to build up its circulation in other Conferences at the expense of the home papers.

Bible Studies for 1890.

There are unmistakable signs of a new interest in the study of the Bible. It can hardly be called a revival, for it is of different character from the Bible study of the past. The Bible is being examined as a key to history, a fountain of thought, as the supreme literary product of the ages. Schools and classes are being formed to take it up, not primarily as a book of spiritual instruction, but as a library, treating of the historical development of human character and of its ideals. An enthusiasm for this study is spreading in colleges and communities, which may become not less important than the revivals of learning in the sixteenth and seventeen centuries.

For with whatever motive men approach the study of the Bible, their interest must come to center in its one hero. Jesus Christ foretold, prepared for, manifested, preached, glorified, is its one theme, which will command and enchain the student's attention. And to those who do not study the Bible, he is becoming more and more the pre-eminent subject of thought. Socialism is feeling after the same ideal which Christianity seeks, and which the Christian religion presents—the highest welfare of each from each, making the best good of all the aim of his life. But Christianity is an unsolvable riddle without Christ. He made, and is, Christianity. He is ever re-creating it; is its cause, its explanation, its inspiration and its ideal. A sympathetic study of Christ, and nothing less, will lift the churches above sectarian jealousies and rivalries into real unity and resistless influence; and in such study they will draw after them, and into them, the restless multitudes who can find rest only in him.

The coming year will afford an opportunity to stimulate and guide this study such as has never occurred before. The Sunday-school lessons for 1890 will concentrate the attention of ten millions of people on the life of Christ, as recorded in the Gospel of Luke. The abundant literature of recent years on this subject will be called into service. The best thought upon it of the best minds will present its facts and interpret its lessons for all classes. The way is open to urge men and women in the churches, who are not connected with the Sunday-school, to organize themselves into classes for this study and to take advantage of this growing popular interest to invite those quite outside of the churches to give attention to this most important subject. Classes may be formed in the week, as well as on Sunday, in private houses, as well as in church buildings. It is not necessary that the outlines of the Sunday-school lessons should be followed in all cases. The courses of study may be pursued which are prepared by the American Institute of Sacred Literature, or by the Chautauqua Normal Union. Pastors may increase the interest by courses of lectures running through the year. The writer once led his congregation through the Sunday evenings of an entire year, in a series of studies in the life of Christ—following his journeys on the map, picturing the scenes, paraphrasing the conversations, leading their thoughts from the angelic pre-announcement of his birth to his ascension, opening the kingdom of heaven to all believers. There was a constantly increasing attendance, and sustained interest to the end of the year.

No work can be so important for 1890 as to enlist as many as possible in this study of the life of Christ, and to make that study as effective as possible. In him will be found the only satisfaction for the social unrest which characterizes this age; the only solution of the great problems which are individual, but also general, which concern the world because they concern each person in it. Let every Christian use his influence to make the coming year memorable by the enlistment of the world in the study of its King.—Congregationalist.

Cranky Good People.

A writer in the Advance gives two opinions in regard to the genesis of crankiness among Christian people. We do not know if he is right, but the subject is worth thinking about. He says:

Often I wonder why some of the best men are so cranky. Some of the most devout, earnest, spiritual and zealous Christian men are so unbalanced, singular and peculiar, that they seem to possess as great a variety of efficiency and inefficiency as a certain image mentioned in the Scripture that had head of gold and feet of clay. The fact I suppose is one which all admit. The reason of the fact is open to question. I suppose the reason really is that the goodness of such people is pre-eminently of the emotional sort; and men are so made that if the emotional element is too large, the intellectual element is relatively too small. Therefore, the apparparently best men are cranky. But some one has sought a more recondite explanation. This theory is, I believe, that the origin of these peculiarities is of the devil. The devil endeavors to keep the Christian from being thoroughly consecrated; but when the man has circumvented the devil and does become thoroughly consecrated, the devil causes him to be unbalanced, and thus injures his influence. I have always felt that the devil had too many burdens laid upon him, and I think he should not be obliged to bear this. I think my psychology of the case is more true.

La Grippe, or Russian influenza, prevails, to a large extent, over all Europe and over a great part of the United States. It is, therefore, a general epidemic, and, in many cases, proves fatal. Prof. Bartholomew, of Jefferson Medical College, says: "Influenza comes suddenly, goes as quickly. The least robust, at any age, and women, seem to be the first victims. It is a question of bodily condition, not of the sex. The large number simultaneously attacked attracts general attention, and thus those most impressionable are seized, the onset being facilitated by any depressing emotion like fear."

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate:

Miss Anna Muse will take a course of study in the theological department of Vanderbilt University before her return to China. Her request to be admitted into the University has been granted by the faculty. So it is stated in the dispatches to the press. It ought not to require any special application from a lady devoted to missionary work as Miss Muse is, to obtain the advantages of the University. But there may have been some mistake in the wording of the dispatches.

Notes.

In the death of Henry W. Grady, of Atlanta, Ga., the country and the church have lost, perhaps, the most promising man of this age. As a journalist, he exhibited the most brilliant talents and aptitude for that great profession. As an orator, his magnetic utterances were listened to with growing wonder and glowing enthusiasm. He had come to be an acknowledged leader in all the great enterprises of the day and an authority on all the questions that are agitating the public mind. Besides this, he was an humble and consistent member of our church, and she mourns over another star blotted from her galaxy of "bright, particular stars." His early death is a sad reflection on the fulfillment of earthly hopes, and reminds us that many brilliant men before were cut off as he, just as their years were ripening into golden fruitage.

The missionary spirit is growing continually. Missionary lectureships in colleges is the movement now. W. F. Graves, of Syracuse, N. Y., has endowed such a lectureship in Rutgers College, and Dr. Pierson is announced as the lecturer for 1890.

There are in the United States twenty woman's missionary societies, having 29,670 auxiliaries and bands, and supporting 850 missionaries in the field and having a yearly income of $1,157,032. The first one of these societies was organized in 1861 and the second in 1868.

This is so pertinent that we print it for the benefit of parents who read the ADVOCATE:

The Christian Standard made this good point on the elect-infant question: "We have known parents, controversially hot against the Calvinistic doctrine, horrified at the thought that their infants dying should go to perdition, but carelessly permitting them to go that way while living."

Be sure and read the two letters from Japan. Bro. Newton is the missionary sent out by the first thousand dollars raised by the readers of the ADVOCATE. And now we have another thousand ready to send another missionary. Surely the readers of our paper are in earnest in their efforts to extend the Lord's kingdom, and the Lord is rewarding their efforts with success.

Dr. A. T. Pierson: "We have often said what we now calmly and deliberately repeat with emphasis, that with one tithe of the "dash" and "push" with which all worldly enterprises are carried forward, the thirty millions of Protestant church members now on the earth would not let ten years pass without belting the globe with missionary effort, and hearing the good tidings of the gospel to every family of man."

It seems that Dom Pedro, after he arrived in Europe, repudiated and refused the subsidy granted him by the new republic of Brazil, because it was an act of the revolution, but accepted the civil list as a right based upon law. Whereupon the Brazilian government cut him off both from the subsidy and the civil list, "as an act of mere common sense." This leaves the ex-Emperor stranded high and dry, with no visible means of support.

The North and South Georgia Conferences have adopted a "plan of publication of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate." Hereafter the paper is to be under the management of a Board of Twelve Trustees, six from each Conference. Members of the Board may be either clerical or lay, or both, and are elected by ballot of the respective Conferences. The Board is empowered to elect editors, publishers or business managers as they may see fit. The editor is to be elected for four years. The Board is to meet for organization in Macon, Ga., April, 1890.

The church work of these days is the most wonderful chapter in current history. That the church is making marked progress no man in his senses, and who reads, can gainsay. In many places in the bounds of our Conferences that progress is "hampered by illiberal giving and lack of holy enterprise," and our leaders are called upon to infuse enthusiasm and liberality into their followers, and also to see that the church is not fettered by too conservative methods. These things accomplished, we shall see marvelous exploits and wondrous progress during this year of our Lord 1890.

The New York Sun gives an account of the man who started The Sun. His name was B. H. Day. He began publishing the Sun two years before Bennett began the Herald and eight years before Greeley started the Tribune. The Sun says that Day did not know how big was the idea that possessed him when he made that start. It further says that Day "led the way in the establishment of a low-priced paper;" that he "set a new standard of news interest," and that he "invented the American newsboy." The size of the paper was so small that the Sun of to-day contains about fifty times as much matter. The first paper was printed December 23, 1833.

Personal and Otherwise.

Rev. D W. Dilehay, a superannuate of the Mississippi Conference, died at his residence in Newton, Miss., December 28. The old soldiers pass away, one by one.

Rev Sam Jones begins his meetings in this city, Sunday, January 5, 3 P. M., at Artillery Hall, on St. Charles street.

A note from Rev. G. D. Anders informs us of the death of Mrs. Sarah Petty, wife of Rev. P. S. Petty. "She was ready to go."

Some of our church papers are advocating the plan of our Mission Board holding its annual sessions in "the various centers of our Methodism" instead of at one place continually. We think the suggestion wise, and, if adopted will do a great deal toward bringing our mission work to the front. Let the sessions also be held in public, like a Conference.

We are indebted to E. B. Treat, 5 Cooper Union, New York City, for a superb photogravure of the celebrated picture, "L'Angelus."

The papers published last week a sermon purporting to have been delivered at Cana, of Galilee, by Dr. Talmage. We believe this whole business of Talmage sending sermons by telegraph from the East is but one other phase of the celebrated Doctor's "sanctified clap-trap."

A letter from J. M. Weems, our preacher at Ventura, Cal., says: "Our Zion is entering upon a career of unprecedented prosperity on this coast, there being nearly, or quite, thirty-five per cent. net gain in our membership last year, and a corresponding increase in material interests." We are glad to chronicle such advance as that.

A writer on missionary work asks, "What reason is there why every church of average numbers and resources may not have its missionary abroad as well as its pastor at home?" That would simply come up to the ideal church of Christ.

Dr. A. G. Haygood has removed to Sheffield, Ala., and henceforth that will be his postoffice address.

Dr. A. T. Pierson is in Scotland stirring up the Scots on the subject of missions. He is one of the editors of the Missionary Review, and foremost in all missionary enterprises.

The Louisiana Journal, of Homer, La., has published the resolutions adopted by the Louisiana Conference on the Lottery!

Quite a number of brethren, en route to the new fields of labor, called upon us last week. Among them were the venerable B. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, and B. F. Alexander, the full presiding elder of Louisiana.

The councilman who introduced a bill before the City Council to prohibit smoking in all the street cars deserves and has the thanks of every lady in town. We hope he will push it to a success, and so abolish one abomination.

The Christmas tree at Louisiana Avenue Church, last Friday evening, was a great success. The house was packed with rejoicing little folks and their glad parents and friends, and the presents handed out by venerable St. Nich. added greatly to the general joy.

In receiving the class of young preachers into full connection in the Texas Conference, Bishop Key said: "I welcome you to toil, to privation, to hardship, to suffering; I welcome you to the cross and to the crown."

George F. Wharton, No. 5 Carondelet street, has brought us under special obligations for a splendid copy of Owen Meredith's celebrated poem, "Lucile," beautifully illustrated by F. M. Gregory.

Be sure to read the "Letters from Japan," on the second page. They will show you how much your contributions to missions are accomplishing, and give you encouragement for future giving.

The new grand organ in Rayne Memorial Church was opened last Saturday evening by a sacred concert under the direction of Prof. Eckert. The instrument is a fine one, adding greatly to the appearance of that beautiful house. Our friends there are to be congratulated on this improvement in their appointed means of worship.

A brother writes: "I see that the subscriptions to the Japan Missionary Fund have reached $987 75. Let me commemorate this sweet Christmas-time by putting on the cap-stone to the $1,000 with the enclosed check for $12 25." That is the way to do a handsome deed!

Our new church in Gretna will be dedicated next Sunday, January 5, at 3:30 P. M. Everybody is invited to this opening of a new house of worship in our city.

Persons willing to sing at the Sam Jones' meeting will please present themselves at Mr. Phillip Werlein's store, 135 Canal, on Thursday, January 2, at 7:30 P. M.

North Mississippi Conference Report on Spiritual Interests.

We, your committee, to whom was referred the spiritual interests of the church, would report as follows:

The reports coming before the Conference by the pastors have not been full enough to get therefrom material for such a report as we would offer; hence we have seen nearly all the pastors personally and gotten all the information we could from them. We are pleased to be able to report to you an improved spiritual state of the church. There have been about, if not quite, five thousand conversions in our charges during the year. The increase in our membership is considerable.

It is matter of rejoicing that many more of our young people than usual—especially our young men—have come into the church. Also that there has been a giving down of worldliness that is general.

Again, that more of our preachers are preaching to the negroes than heretofore in their own churches, and that many of the negroes attend our protracted meetings. Especially is this true in the Greenville district. These are matters whereof we ought to be glad. JOHN W. BELL,

In behalf of Com.

Home Missions.

MR. EDITOR: Apropos of the remarks of Bro. S. S. Keener, in a recent number of the ADVOCATE, I desire to make some inquiry:

1. To what charges in our Conference did the Board of Missions make appropriations at our late session?

2. How much to each of these.

3. What new territory are the charges to embrace in consideration of these appropriations?

4. What number of Methodists are in these charges, and how long have those people constituted a pastoral charge?

The church has a right to know all that the answers to the above questions can reveal. Let the secretary of the Conference Board of Missions gives us this information.

I hope all information touching these questions will be published in the Minutes. Respectfully,

J. A. PARKER.

BATON ROUGE, Louisiana.

Our Mississippi Methodist College.

MR. EDITOR: We will soon be able to report the full $50,000, secured in notes and cash, necessary to complete the first $100,000 of endowment. Only a few thousand more will be needed. But to increase this sum largely, and especially to collect the notes, take charge of the business, which has become burdensome, and look after the varied and urgent details of the proposed enterprise, it was found necessary to have the entire time of one man, and I have appointed Rev. A. F. Watkins as agent. By this arrangement the endowment fund will be collected more speedily, the canvass conducted more systematically, the correspondence answered more promptly, and the opening of the college next fall more perfectly assured.

Missionaries for China.

Over six months ago we called for two men for China. One has been accepted and sent; another is needed. Our work in China is expanding. Our missionaries are overworked. They have been pleading for reinforcements. Who will go? Will the church pray that God will call workmen for this field, and put it into the hearts of our people to send them?

A young lady is needed to take the place now filled by Miss Lipscomb, in the Anglo-Chinese College. Dr. Allen calls earnestly for help. Who will go?

Applicants for either place will please write to Bishop Wilson or the undersigned. I. G. JOHN,

Sec. B'd. of Miss., M. E. C., S.

Notice.

To the Preachers and Members of the Brandon District.—

DEAR BRETHREN: We have made large advancements in some departments of church work over any previous year. We are not up to the measure of our ability. God has blessed us abundantly. Let us do better this year. We can and must advance; God requires it of us. I ask especially that the stewards see that the preachers are comfortable in their homes. God bless you more and more this year!

Fraternally, P. A. JOHNSTON.

Premature gray whiskers should be colored to prevent the appearance of age, and Buckingham's Dye is by far the best preparation to do it.

Dr. Pierson: "In many a church enough money is spent on a quartette choir to sustain three missionaries in the centers of heathenism!" Maybe the choir is more important than sending the gospel to the perishing!

Catarrh is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood, and is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and enriches the blood and gives the whole system health and strength. Try this "peculiar medicine." It is prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

"Advertising is to a genuine article what manure is to land—it largely increases the product. Thousands of persons may be reading your advertisement while you are eating or sleeping or attending to your business; hence, public attention is attracted, new customers come to you, and if you render them a satisfactory equivalent for their money they continue to patronize you and recommend you to their friends."—P. T. Barnum.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the Insurance to those worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

To those wishing roses, hardy plants, bulbs and seeds for home planting, we cordially recommend the old reliable house of The Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa. They are admitted to be the largest rose growers in America, and their roses and plants are well and favorably known all over the United States and Canada. Their New Guide, 110 pages, handsomely illustrated, describes and tells how to grow more than two thousand varieties of the newest and choicest roses, hardy plants, bulbs and seeds, and is sent free to all who write for it. See advertisement in this paper, and address The Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove Pa.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cuudurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

People Wonder

WHEN they find how rapidly health is restored by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The reason is that this preparation contains only the purest and most powerful alteratives and tonics. To thousands yearly it proves a veritable elixir of life.

Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brockway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself along. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggist.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his foot. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a sugar mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attewell, Sharbot Lake, Ontario.

THE CHILD'S PRAYER.

BY E. A. CURRY.

God of wisdom, love and might,
Bless a little child to-night,
Hear my humble, feeble prayer;
Ever let me be thy care.

Gently guide me through the day,
Take all sin from me away;
Keep, O keep me in thy grace,
Show me, Lord, thy smiling face.

When the shades of night come on,
And I bow before thy throne,
May I say "Thy will be done!"
For Christ's sake, thy blessed Son.

The Royal Children of Germany.

The young Emperor of Germany, William II., has five little boys. The eldest is seven years old. He is the Crown Prince, and the heir to the throne. He will some day be Emperor of Germany. He is a fine, manly little fellow.

Germany is a very military country, and the Emperor William is such a thorough soldier that strict military discipline is the order of the day in the nurseries of his little people. As soon as the petticoats are left off, the tiny boys are dressed in baby uniforms, and the young Crown Prince looks quite like a little soldier.

When their father visits them in their own quarters (as I suppose I ought to call such a military nursery), the Crown Prince commands his smaller brothers to "fall in." Then Frederick and Albert, who are scarcely more than babies, "fall in." Little Prince Albert is such a mite that he is not able to keep his position for long, and he soon trots away to his nurse's side. But the Crown Prince, and Prince Frederick, stand stiff and starched like real soldiers till their father returns their salute in proper fashion.

When the little Crown Prince was six years old he was given a bed-room to himself instead of sleeping in the nursery with the others. He was very pleased, and said, "Oh! that is nice; now I need not be with the children any more."

In the summer of 1888, all five boys had a charming holiday with their mother at the beautiful castle of Oberhof, in the forest of Thuringia. Their father was away. A little fort was built for them in the corner of the gardens, with a tent and two small cannon. The eldest three, dressed in officers' uniforms, paraded in front of the fort. Then while the Crown Prince beat the drum, an old soldier showed the other two how to attack and defend the fort. Little Prince Augustus William, who was only a year and a half old, was dressed in white and wore a tiny helmet. He looked on and clapped his hands.

In Germany every boy, whether he is the son of the Emperor or of a peasant, has, some day, to be a soldier.

The Emperor is very fond of his five boys. Almost his first question is, when he returns home, "How are the boys?"—Little Men and Women.

Other People's Boys.

"It is strange, considering you have never had any boys of your own, that you should be so interested in other people's boys," said a man in a tone of inquiry to another noted for his interest in young people.

"Ah," came the cheery answer, while a look of yearning shone in his eyes, "it does not seem strange to me that I should care for other people's boys even if I have none of my own. Every boy upon God's footstool is somebody's boy and is dear to somebody, either in this world or the other; somehow I'm interested in everybody's boy."

"Yes, yes, of course you are, not a doubt of it," laughing. "You put yourself out more than I'd care to please everybody's boy—I wouldn't bother so."

"But I get a blessing every time. Isn't that worth the effort? I read a little story in one of the papers I'd like to tell you, my friend."

"About somebody's boy?"

"Exactly."

"Go on with your story."

"It is this: Through Rochester runs the Genesee river, between steep and rocky banks. There are falls in the river and dark recesses. One time a gentleman who lived in the city had just arrived on the train from a journey. He was anxious to go home and meet his wife and children. He was hurrying along the streets with a bright vision of home in his mind, when he saw on the bank of a river a lot of excited men.

"'What is the matter?' he shouted.

"They replied: 'A boy is in the water!'

"'Why don't you save him?' he asked.

"In a moment, throwing down his carpet-bag and pulling off his coat, he jumped into the stream, grasped the boy in his arms and struggled with him to the shore, and as he wiped the water from his dripping face and brushed back the hair, he exclaimed: 'O God, it is my boy!'

"The writer then commented on the incident thus:

"'He plunged in for the boy of somebody else and saved his own. So we plunge into the waters of Christian self-denial, labor, hardship, reproach, soul-travail, prayer, anxious entreaty; willing to spend and be spent, taking all risks, to save some other one from drowning in sin and death; and do not know what a reflexive wave of blessing will come to our own souls. In seeking to save others we save ourselves and those most dear to us, while others, too selfish to labor to save other people's children, often lose their own.'"

"That's a good tale."

"Yes, so it is; the blessing is sure to come with every duty done. While there are other people's children to save, I shall always lend a hand."

And he always did. The days sped on—the months rolled away—even the years had counted up to the last, and over the body of this noble man, the heart-broken pastor sobbed out the words: "He sleeps as he lived, in Jesus."

"Other people's boys!" how they flocked about him as he lay on his white couch, pale and still, with a smile upon his lips. How they moaned and sobbed and wrung their hands in grief unutterable!

"He watched beside me when I was sick and suffering!" said one, tearfully.

"He took my hand and led me away from the pit toward which I was reeling, and pointed out the way toward the Rock," sobbed another poor fellow.

"He gave me a word of cheer when I was so discouraged I couldn't see my way," remarked a third, with quivering lips.

"I never in all my life loved anyone as I loved that man," a boy yet in his teens said brokenly. "My heart was bleeding when he came to me, but his goodness and tenderness healed the wounds."

Sweet life! Precious life! Life of sweet revealing! when it passed it left its perfume in the souls of other people's children.

A Little Girl's Creed.

Not long ago a little girl in a Christian family died. She was only six years old. About a year before her death she had a small writing-desk given to her. After she died her mother unlocked it and found this writing:

"The minute I wake up in the morning I will think of God.

"I will mind my father and mother always.

"I will try and have my lessons perfect.

"I will try to be kind and not get cross.

"I want to behave like God's child."—Religious Telescope.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. I am now on a visit to my grandpa, Rev. D. W. Dillehay, who is very sick. He has been sick four weeks, and I wait on him every day, and I do hope God will reward me for it. My grandpa is a worn-out minister. I will close, as this is my first letter.

Rest.

We know well enough that if trains are run at fifty miles an hour over roads built to endure only a speed of thirty miles an hour, everything, in a short time, begins to give way and to wear out, and the whole road and all the rolling stock gets into a dangerous condition. Every rail, every tie, every joint, every nail, every wheel and bit of machinery feels the strain and wear.

The human mechanism is not less sensitive than are railroads and locomotives. The tendency of the time is to increase the speed of individual movement and progress. The over-driven human needs constant rest and repairs, as do railroads and locomotives, and a thousand-fold more, for his mechanism is infinitely more complicated and delicate. Instead of adding more fuel to a disordered engine to make it go, we would send it to the repair shop, and let it be restored by skilled workmen to soundness. So when the mind and body are worn and weary, send them to the repair shop for rest. Sleep, quiet, nutritious food, the absence of all stimulants and whips and goads—these skilled positive and negative workmen of nature will restore (if anything can) the wasted vitality, and bring back health and strength and soundness.

Such are the demands or seeming demands on many men and women that they feel compelled to work all the time that they are not eating or sleeping. In order to do this they drink strong coffee or strong tea, or beer or bitters or brandy, or use tobacco or opium or quinine or cocoa, or something that will keep up muscular and nervous tension. In all these there is not one particle of nutrition; they are poisons slow and sure; they are spurs and goads, or destructive tranquilizers. They drive the blood to the brain; they quicken the beatings of the heart; they tighten nervous tensions or relax them. For the moment they may give relief, seeming strength, concentration of mental or physical energy; by and by, under continued applications of these various stimuli, the brain breaks down, the heart becomes diseased, the nervous system is prostrated, the digestive organs mutiny, and general debility paves the way for easy victory for any disease that may come in the way.

Sleep and rest, if taken regularly and in time, will prevent and cure a great many diseases and disorders that otherwise will become incurable.—Christian Advocate, N. Y.

What to Teach Boys.

A philosopher has said that true education for boys is to "teach them what they ought to know when they become men."

1. To be true and to be genuine. No education is worth anything that does not include this. A man had better not know how to read—he had better never learn a letter in the alphabet, and be true, genuine in intention and in action—rather than be learned in all languages, to be at the same time false in heart and counterfeit in life. Above all things, teach boys that truth is more than riches, more than earthly power or possessions.

2. To be pure in thought, language and life—pure in mind and in body.

3. To be unselfish. To care for the feelings and comforts of others. To be polite, to be just in all dealings with others. To be generous, noble and manly. This will include a genuine reverence for the aged and for things sacred.

4. To be self-reliant and self-helpful even from childhood. To be industrious always, and self-supporting at the earliest proper age. Teach them that all honest work is honorable, and that an idle life of dependence on others is disgraceful.

When a boy has learned these four things, when he has made these ideas a part of his being—however poor, or however rich, he has learned the most important things he ought to know when he becomes a man.

WEST BROOK, N. C., Sept. 6th, 1886.

DR. A. T. SHALLENBERGER, Rochester, Pa.

Dear Sir—The two boxes of Pills you sent me did everything you said they would. My son was the victim of Malaria, deep-set, by living in Florida two years, and the Antidote has done more than five hundred dollars' worth of other medicines could have done for him. I have had one of my neighbors try the medicine, and it cured him immediately. I now recommend it to everyone suffering from Malaria.

Respectfully yours,

W. W. MONROE.

Light and Heat.

Our present teachers tell us the molecules of all bodies, whether gaseous, fluid or solid, are in constant vibration; that in proportion as their vibration is increased, heat is developed; that at a fixed increase of heat—a fixed increase of motion—this heat becomes luminous. Heat then is motion; light is luminous heat. The molecules that compose the sun and stars vibrate with extreme rapidity; they strike against and thus set in motion the molecules of ether. The same may be said of all forms of heat and light, since the heat and light of terrestrial things originate from the sun. Solar light travels at the rate of one hundred and eighty-six thousand miles in a second of time; that is, the molecules of ether struck by the molecules of the sun, are set into such intense vibration that their waves travel at this rate. These ether waves break against our eyes like waves on a sea-beach; we receive the sensation of light; objects are made visible by its reflection. Longer, that is slower, waves of ether fall on our bodies; we receive the sensation of heat.

We learn a wholesome lesson as we look over our text-books and re-examine the conclusions that have been accepted and rejected from century to century, from decade to decade; we see the truism exemplified, "There is nothing final in science." The way is cleared of certain obstacles, the path is found. But at the next step some sudden turn shows that we have mistaken our bearings; that although we are progressing, we have deviated farther than we imagined. Thirty years ago the seven colors of the solar spectrum were separated into three classes, according to their supposed differences, as heat-rays, luminous rays and actinic or chemical rays. It is now understood that all the rays have the same powers; their seeming difference is due to the prism, which makes an unequal distribution of the ether waves. And now, as the latest suggestion, we are warned not to conclude too hastily that radiant heat and light are identical though both have the same source—radiant energy; because the waves which affect the sense of touch as heat are much longer than those which affect the eye as light; because many substances, like glass, for example, are transparent to light but opaque to radiant heat; others, like iodine, are opaque to light but permeable to heat; in fine, because radiant heat does not heat at all, becoming sensible heat only when the waves by which it is propagated are absorbed.—Home Journal.

A REMARKABLE CLOCK.—The most remarkable clock in America, if we consider the place in which it was built, is the one which was made by a miner in the Hallenbeck colliery at Wilkesbarre, Pa. This clock was made out of bits of wood and iron, and with the roughest tools that can be imagined. It was made nearly half a mile under ground, and it occupied the maker nearly nine years before he could say it was done. The clock is nine feet high, and there are sixty-three figures that move by machinery. There are only twenty-one moving figures in the Strasburg clock. On the front of the Wilkesbarre clock—the one we are speaking of—there are three shelves or balconies. Along the lower balcony, a mounted general leads a file of Continental soliders. The Liberty bell rings, and the sentinel salutes the procession. A door in the upper balcony opens and shows Molly Pitcher, who fires her historic cannon, the smoke of which is blown away from the interior of the clock by a fan. Then the portraits of the first twenty Presidents of the United States pass along in a kind of panorama, the Declaration of Independence being held aloft by Thomas Jefferson. On another of the balconies the twelve apostles go by, Satan comes out, and the cock crows for the benefit of Peter. When Christ appears a figure of Justice raises a pair of scales, while a figure of Death tolls the minutes upon a bell.

TALLEY—Died at his home, in Hattiesburg, October 24, 1889, JOHN TALLEY, Sen., aged fifty-five years. Mr. Talley had been a soldier of the cross and a follower of the Lamb thirty-seven years; so that when the cry was made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," his lamp was "trimmed and burning."

He obeyed as nearly as possible the Scripture which says, "Pray without ceasing;" and in his last days, though his sufferings were great, he often prayed long and earnestly. When asked by his pastor if afraid to die, his reply was, "Oh, no, I am not afraid to die; if there is anything between me and my God, I can not find it, and I have prayed for God to show it to me."

While we sympathize with the bereaved family, we feel assured that their loved one is "safe in the arms of Jesus."

May the daughter who sang so often at his request, "Meet me there," with all the other members of the family so live that they may meet him there where parting is unknown!

MRS. J. C. H. MCKINNEY.

WALKER—ELIZABETH WALKER (nee Guess) was born in the State of Tennessee, November 16, 1811, and died at the residence of her son, T. J. Crawford, in Rapides parish, La., November 4, 1889. The deceased joined the Methodist Church in 1828, and was for sixty-one years a faithful member of the church she loved. It was the writer's privilege to be her pastor for three years, and I can witness to her strong faith and trust in God.

Sister Walker had not been able to attend upon the public service of the sanctuary for some time; but I preached occasionally at her son's house, where she has long resided, and conversed with her, and, though "in age and feebleness extreme," I found her strong in faith, and constantly rejoicing in hope of her heavenly home. Truly a mother in Israel has fallen; but her pastor, her children and friends "know where to find her."

J. I. HOFFPAUIR.

BULLARD—Mrs. BETTIE BULLARD was born in Ouachita parish, La., March 22, 1858. Her maiden name was Moore. Raised by religious parents, she was early taught the doctrines of Christianity. She joined the Methodist Church, and was happily converted to God in 1872, under the preaching of N. S. Craven. She took up her cross and started on her Christian journey toward the city of God. On November 16, 1881, she was married to W. N. Bullard, by whom she had six children. As daughter, wife, mother and friend, she was ever faithful and loving. As a Christian, she was devoted. It was no surprise to her, November 11, 1889, when she met the angel of death. She was near the holy city with rapture; she exhorted love ones to meet her and raise her children to do the same. She awaits them on the other shore.

C. T. MENHOLLAND.

TILERY—Mrs. EUGENIA TILERY, daughter of William L. and Moriah Hutchingson, was born October 1, 1850; was married to J. A. Tilery, July 22, 1874, and died at Greensburg, La., of consumption, November 14, 1889. The deceased joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. J. S. Parker, August, 1879. During these ten years she lived a consistent Christian life, and though she clung to life to the last, cherishing a hope of recovery, yet she met death with a quiet resignation to the will of God, assuring us that the Lord was with her, regretting only the leaving of her dear children and loved ones.

She leaves a kind and much afflicted husband and four children, with many friends and relatives, to mourn her loss, whose comfort is in the assurance that their temporal loss is her eternal gain.

CARRUTH—On Thursday evening, October 31, the great Father of missions called from earth to heaven our beloved sister, Mrs. JOSEPHINE CARRUTH. We regret that she was so situated as not to meet with us often in our society; but she was ever ready to assist with her means and her prayers, reminding us of a quotation from Colossians ii, 5: "For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying and beholding your order and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ;" therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of the Adams Woman's Missionary Society, in Lincoln county, Miss., in the death of Sister Carruth have lost a faithful and earnest member.

Resolved, That while we sorrow for the loss of her bright Christian example, her prayers and words of comfort and encouragement, yet we thank God for the many lessons taught by her beautiful life of patience and resignation, of peace and joy even in trials.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also a copy be sent to the bereaved family.

MISS MATTIE WOOD, for Com.

FEARN—The angel of death has visited us and taken from us our loved BESSIE FEARN: a devoted sister, a charming woman and an efficient officer. Our hearts are bowed down in grief when we think of our great loss; but we rejoice in her triumphant death, which assures us that she was ready for the call; therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Conference Society has sustained the loss of a faithful, consecrated worker; society, a bright, useful member; her home, a precious loved one.

Resolved, That the Natchez Auxiliary—where she so recently mingled her sweet voice with ours in prayer and praise to God—tenders to her brothers and sister tendcrest sympathy and condolence.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, for publication; also to the family of our beloved recording secretary.

MISS REA NEWMAN, for Com.

COLQUHOUN—Our dear Bro. and Sister A. Colquhoun are sorely bereaved in the death of two of their little children. Little A. CATHERINE died first. She was born January 4, 1888, and died September 2, 1889, being about one year and eight months old. Little THOMAS P. was born August 28, 1885, and died September 16, 1889, being a little over four years old.

Little Tommie and Kate were sweet little children, loved and petted by their parents and brothers and sisters and all that knew them. They were too pure and good for this world, and God took them to heaven.

May God by his grace sustain the parents and friends!

A. D. MILLER.

STAPLES—Miss MARY WALKER STAPLES was born August 29, 1849, and died at the residence of Mrs. E. L. Young, near Port Hudson, La., August 20, 1889. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church at an early age. She was a true Christian, relying on the merits of her Lord and Savior. She was a constant and faithful reader of God's holy Word, and loved the hour of prayer, from which she derived comfort and peace. She lived in sweet communion with her Savior. Dying to her was but going home; she longed for the sweet rest of heaven. She leaves a mother, brother and sister and many friends to mourn their loss.

SISTER.

JONES—Died, at his residence, in Amite county, Miss., JOHN JONES, aged seventy-eight years three months three weeks and five days. We trust that God had a wise purpose in letting him live so long, and when that purpose was accomplished, he took him to himself. He passed away like a gentle summer breeze; he died without a struggle. He left a number of children and grandchildren to mourn his loss. Kind friends and willing hands laid him away and left him in his last resting-place in the family graveyard, until the resurrection morn, to meet at the bar of God. The writer was not permitted to see him in his last hours.

W. N. JONES.

ROBINETTE—EDGAR, son of C. E. and S. K. Robinette, was born November 14, 1888, and died November 20, 1889. Little Edgar's stay on earth was short. Just budding into life, God plucked the bud from the earthly home and removed it to the heavenly, to bloom above and emit its fragrance in the paradise of love.

May God comfort and sustain the grief-stricken parents, and may they at last meet their little one in the home above!

T. S. R.

BROWN—Little EMMIE A., infant daughter of Bro. A. F. and F. M. Brown, was born March 10, 1888, and died September 12, 1889, being at her death about one year and a half old. She was a sweet little child—too sweet for this sinful world, and God took her to live with the angels.

May God abundantly sustain by his grace Bro. and Sister Brown in their sad bereavement! is the prayer of their pastor.

A. D. MILLER.

"Quack Nostrum" is a term not at all applicable to Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

Rollo Kirk Bryan, in one of his chalk talks, illustrates three popular methods of working for prohibition. He first represents two rocks rising out of the sea, one the national constitution, the other public opinion. On the summit of the granite rock, constitution, was planted the small flower of prohibition. The rock of public opinion was made to rise rapidly until it was on a level with the constitution. A child representing the prohibition movement, was reaching across the gulf (high license) endeavoring to grasp the flowers of prohibition. Failing in the endeavor, a non-partisan bridge was erected, but this, like all bridges of the kind, had a parting in the middle, and the child fell through. Then the easel was whirled round and the child was seen climbing up the constitution rock. It was on the right side of the gulf and nearer than ever to the coveted flower.

COMPENSATION.

BY HORACE M. RICHARDS.

If you lift from some heart its burden of care,
As you journey o'er life's dusty road,
You not only are garnering treasures up there,
But you lighten your own earthly load.

If you cheer some soul on its wearisome way,
Or drive from some brow its shadows and gloom,
Your burden will lighten each hour of the day,
And you are strewing with flowers your road to the tomb.

If you come as a helper to a soul that's in need,
Or lend to the weary your strengthening hand,
You are filling God's garden and sowing the seed
For a harvest of love, in the soul's summer land.

If you have but a word, a smile, or a tear,
Don't hoard it, give freely, 'twill solace some grief.
Take the pain from some heart, some weary one cheer,
And bring to the pain in thine own heart, relief. —American.

Work for the General Conference.

BY REV. J. A. PARKER.

Now that the "smoke of the battle" has cleared away, and we begin to see where our itinerary paths lead to, some moments are allowed to look to the papers. Here I find what I do not find—somebody firing from ambush. Please call out across the woods, and say to that gentleman over there that I can not afford to turn from an open fire and waste time and ammunition on a hidden opponent. The General Conference elections are over now, and he need have no further fear of his doctrines as a factor in that important contest.

However, there are some views advanced in my former letter upon which I desire to insist, because I think I see a vast improvement over the old order of things. I believe a transfer of the more important work of the Quarterly Conference to the District Conference would be greatly helpful to both of these bodies. The Quarterly Conference is not a delegated body, but is, on the contrary, practically a creature of the preacher in charge. It is composed, in many instances, entirely of creatures of pastoral selection. Stewards, trustees, class leaders and Sunday-school superintendents comprise the majority of all Quarterly Conferences. In an experience of twenty-nine years I have never known the nominees of the preacher in charge for these offices to fail of confirmation by the proper authority. But whether a pastor can make a Quarterly Conference or not, it is composed entirely of officers whose duties are strictly under the administration of the pastor, by reason of holding an office which is under his control.

Here, then, is the case. All license, and all orders in the local ministry, are dispensed by the appointees of the preacher in charge—by stewards and class leaders and trustees and Sunday-school superintendents of the appointing of the pastor, simply confirmed by others of like appointing. It represents the pastor in charge, and nobody else. I believe it would be better to get a little further from a pastoral oligarchy with the more important affairs of our church. A pastor would be less likely to influence the selection of a Quarterly Conference in the election of representatives to a District Conference than in the vote on a purely local question, in which the pastor is the principal actor. Besides this, if the District Conferences were recognized as the starting-point in all ministerial orders and offices, more thought and more preparation would be bestowed on these questions, and less of local prestige would be seen.

I once filled a charge in the Alabama Conference, having a Quarterly Conference composed of fourteen members, twelve of which number were related by some ties of kinship. It was a body of good men. Suppose, however, that other qualities had obtained beside goodness. Who can estimate the power such a body could exert for evil? In our more compact rural charges in the older Conferences such a state of things is by no means unnatural. Hence a Quarterly Conference may be no more and no less than a family meeting for the transaction of church matters. There ought exist no possibility of a family, related as such by ties purely and solely fleshly, passing on the qualifications of one of its members as a preacher, etc., in the church of God. The church is not without its feuds; and while its members are men, and not angels, feuds are likely to continue to mar its quiet and beauty. A license to preach the gospel as a Methodist, or parchments granted by a Bishop, ought to be removed from the possibility of nepotism. In our Quarterly Conferences such may, or may not, be the case. In a District Conference I see not how such a thing could be possible, especially if our districts are enlarged as they should be. A president over every body of ministers, numbering twelve or fourteen, indicates one of two things: a very liberal supply of executive talent, or a dearth of administrative ability. That every twelfth or fourteenth man, as you take the rank and file of the clergy, should possess fine administrative talent, is unnatural, not to say unusual; and that eleven or thirteen, out of every twelve or fourteen, should be incompetent to manage the affairs of a pastoral charge, is preposterous. Why, then, so many presiding elders?

Suppose my neighbor, having a protracted sickness, by reason of which his corn had got badly in the grass, should invite myself and hands over to give him a few days' work, in order to "clean out" his field. I am a large-hearted sort of man; so I take all hands and march over to my neighbor's field. We take his plows, hoes, and mules, and begin operations. Presently he comes out and finds no more hands at work than were engaged the day before. "How is this?" he asks. "I do not see that I am to gain much by this operation. True, I have your help; but you are simply in my place, and my own force is idle." "Yes," I reply, "it is a great help for you to see us work, and hear us sing. This is the way to get you out of the grass. You run around and wait on us—bring us water, fetch us hame-strings, keep up the hoes, kill a pig for us to eat, and you will all feel so much better to-morrow." "Well," says my neighbor, "you double my expenses; but do no more work than was done before. I do not see how I am to get out of the grass by this kind of work."

The circuit is the field, the preacher in charge is the man in the grass, the presiding elder is the good man who comes to help. The class meeting, love-feast, Sunday-school, preaching, etc., are the mules and implements of farm work. This thing occurs six times a week in the Louisiana Conference, and much oftener in some others.

They have in newly settled countries what are called "log-rollings." These are occasions on which the neighbors come in to help one do work too heavy for his "force." Each man brings a "hand-stick," so that none are idle. This is well; but I do not like a log-rolling every three months. There is, ordinarily, no use for it. If moral cyclones come quarterly, we would need quarterly log-rollings; but, fortunately, such is not the case. I do not see the law of conservation of energy in our present system.

This is not against our presiding elders. No man enjoys the visits and preaching of his presiding elder more than the writer. "'Tis bliss without alloy;" but I do think it a right expensive bliss when we come to count the loss of labor resulting from it.

Not long ago a brother, meeting my objections to our present system, said that instead of being idle when the presiding elder came, he was more than ordinarily busy. But I found his rush of business resulted from his having to straighten out matters for record in his Quarterly Conference journal. Wonder if such preachers would ever straighten up matters if the presiding elder was not to come at all? For brethren of this kind I will suggest the organization of a Laches Conference, and a quadrangular presiding eldership, together with a Lynxinal Episcopate, as a probable means of keeping things in shape.

If our boundary question passes this session of the General Conference, the needed change can not be made short of four years to come. By that time it will be seen whether I am correct in my opinion as to the effect on Centenary College. It is only my opinion; but here it is: You will never identify the Louisiana Conference with an institution outside of its bounds; at least, not to such an extent as to enlist the individual sympathy and co-operation of the members. It has been tried for years. Now, let somebody else try it for a time. There is something in this view of the case. The college has some strong friends in Mississippi; but their friendship grows out of former associations, and is not to be destroyed by a mere question of Conference autonomy. As to the majority of the Louisiana Conference, such is not the case. The question of Conference bounds enters largely into the make-up of their appreciation. There is an absurdity, it seems to me, in the idea of having a Conference school located in another Conference. To say that the joint patronage will continue as heretofore, is to prophesy the downfall of the new college being established in the Mississippi Conference. Life for these two schools means a godly rivalry between them—not antagonism. It is Louisiana vs. Mississippi on the school question. Can you make it so, and both schools in the Mississippi Conference? I do not think so; hence I plead for a change of boundaries. I do not prophesy: I read a business matter in the light of business principles.

Where must Centenary look for support? To Mississippi or Louisiana? At home or abroad? Answer, and let the next four years witness.

BATON ROUGE, Louisiana.

The Spread of Popery?

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

Giordano Bruno, a celebrated scholar of philosophic turn of mind and habit, was born in Naples about the middle of the fifteenth century. He was a writer of note, and did not always consult the Pope as to what he should write, or how he should write it. He supported the Copernican astronomy, wrote on The Sole Cause of Things, on the Infinity of the Universe and of Worlds, and pronounced an impassioned panegyric on Luther, but did not join the Reformer. In 1598, after traveling considerably in France, England, and elsewhere, he was arrested in Venice by order of Pope Clement VIII., and carried to Rome; and after two years' imprisonment, and refusing to recant, he was burned at the stake as an obstinate heretic.

At that time, and long before—centuries before—and for many years afterwards, no man on earth possessed or exercised the civil or religious power of the Pope. No monarch of Europe dared oppose the will of the Pope. His power over life and death was absolute. He was literally king of kings.

In 1861 Victor Emmanuel II. was declared King of Italy; but it was not till 1870, the French army having withdrawn from Rome, that the imperial city, with the rest of the papal territory, was reunited to Italy, and became the seat of Victor Emmanuel's court.

In 1871, quoting from memory, Victor was sick, confined to his bed. The Pope thought, Now is the time; so, selecting one of his chief cardinals, sent him to the king to confess. Preparatory to the ceremony, the priest gently intimated that the Pope expected that among other matters of less importance, Victor would incindo the great political sin of invading the papal dominions. As soon as this suggestion was understood, King Victor addressed the legate substantially as follows: "I am a sick man, and know not what may be the issue. If you come to see me as a sick man, to minister to me the consolations of religion, I am glad to see you, and will like to see you often; but if your visit relates to any civil or political matters, anything about the government of Italy, you will find my ministers in the buildings just below." Thus ended the religious interview in King Victor's sick-chamber on that occasion.

Now, the burning of Bruno for the heresy of refusing to believe and adopt the infallible pronunciamento of His Holiness, that the earth was a flat plane and not a globe, took place in Rome two hundred and eighty-nine years ago the sixteenth of February of this year. Anticipating the anniversary of the event, some Italians prepared a marble statue of Bruno, which was unveiled in Rome, and erected on the very spot where he was burned, amidst great popular demonstrations, and most defiantly near to the chamber windows of the Pope. And so, in order that this popular insult to the Pope in Italy spread no farther, and especially in this country, Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, anticipating a Roman Catholic Congress, or General Assembly, to be held in that city in November next, has issued a circular letter to his clergy, to be read in the churches, denouncing the erection of the Bruno statue in the strongest terms, and loudly warning the people of Maryland against something, it does not very plainly appear what.

Now, the animus and intent of erecting the Bruno monument, calling fresh attention to a mere piece of not uncommon church murder that happened nearly three hundred years ago, is very apparent, and that is the noteworthy point in it.

Before Victor Emmanuel, the Italian Liberator, took charge of the government of beautiful Italy, nearly thirty years ago, the Italian patriot and reformer, Gavazzi, had set on foot the Free Church of Italy, and the people began to read the Bible; though for this great offense against the "Church," many were sent to prison by His Holiness Pius IX. Among these was Gavazzi himself; but he was rescued by force by an indignant populace, but was forced to leave the country for a few years, during which time he visited England and the United States, where, in many addresses to crowded assemblies, he related the outrages the Italian people received at the hands of an upstart pretender who foolishly and wickedly claimed to commit such crimes by direction of Jesus Christ! As soon as King Victor could afford him protection, Gavazzi returned to Italy, and both civil and ecclesiastical affairs straightened up wonderfully, leaving his usurped Holiness master of his private residence so long as he obeyed the laws of Italy. These momentous disturbances and unpunished crimes of "His Holiness" were, and still are, fresh in the minds of the Italian people. Many of them were the descendants of thousands who were cruelly murdered by fire and torture in various ways, and now, being free to express their views and feelings, it was rather natural that they should do so.

The erection of a statue to the memory of Bruno was by no means a religious movement. He was not understood to be a religious man, but opposed the Pope on the broad ground of manhood, common sense and general truth. So an anniversary of his murder coming round, and the Pope being shorn of his instruments of cruelty, the people—not the religious people—took it into their heads to hurl their wronged and insulted indignation back into the face of the Pope, to show or remind him something of the rights, privileges and amenities of manhood. The movers in this enterprise were themselves surprised to find that it took such large grasp on the public mind. On the unveiling of the statue the streets were thronged with teeming multitudes, and the shouts and huzzas answering from street to street, and especially around the Vatican, gave pretty clear notice that they did not approve of burning men for differing with the Pope in opinion. This was the exact question. It was not a question of religious popery against religious Protestantism, but one of civil enlightenment and humanity—a simple question of popish burning and anti-popish burning.

The side of this question, espoused publicly and officially by Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, is plainly seen by his circular letter recently issued by him in obedience to this citizen of Italy, "His Holiness." This circular letter, "to be read in all the churches," is plainly significant. And it ought not to escape the notice of any American citizen.

While this whole matter does not largely indicate much spread of popery, it does indicate the animus, spirit and temper of popery in the absence of Luther, Gavazzi, Victor Emmanuel and the United States. But for these simple agencies, some of us would burn before the next full moon.

Louisiana Conference on Questions of State Policy.

BY REV. T. J. DUNCAN.

I am not a transfer man—in the eyes of the Bishops—nor have I any inclination at present to leave my native land; but the Louisiana Conference is enough to tempt a saint. Your people have strange, true, out-from-the-shoulder methods of dealing with sin. To them it matters not whether that sin hides itself behind political parties and legislative assemblies, and dons the habiliment of "a question of State policy;" they lay hold upon the evil. Brave men! Loyal to God and country!

The Louisiana State Lottery has been for years a question of State policy. Legalized, it has been doing its deadly work. Second, perhaps, to nothing save the legalized liquor traffic, it has been working ruin among our people. In one instance in my own acquaintance it has alienated some of the best families in our country; produced, at least, one perjurer, and, perhaps, blighted the religious prospects of two young men forever. Enough of that. Its victims are everywhere. The Louisiana Conference makes bold to lay its mighty hand upon it, and enter its solemn protest. Its whereas and resolves have the ring of men of God. "As a Conference," it "pronounces officially" upon "a question of State policy," and says: "We most earnestly urge our State representatives—members of the Senate and House of Representatives—to do all in their power to crush out this shame and reproach to our State." Why, sir, if you should erase "State Lottery," and write "liquor traffic," and offer that resolution in some of our Conferences, they would amend, and tinker, tinker and amend until the whole thing would be frittered away into airy nothing. But, they go on:

Resolved, That, as members of this Conference, we will never knowingly cast a vote (italics mine) for the election of any man to any State office, or to membership in the Legislature, who is in any-wise in sympathy with, or under the influence of, the Louisiana State Lottery.

Aye, aye! "in sympathy with, or under the influence of." I wonder if this question of State policy has actually handicapped that august body! But the church and ministry has "pronounced" upon it. How dare you? How can you "pronounce upon a question of State policy," and resolve, in solemn and official body assembled, how you will vote upon this or that question, or for this or that class of men? The church to which you belong, through its agent, buys and pays a royalty of ten per cent. for, and publishes with the money of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a book which declares: "Whenever the church, in her struggles against the crimes and wickedness of the times, falls back from her intrenched position behind the Word of God, and calls on the State for reinforcements, the world derides her faith in God." Then, taking the preacher to task for the same effort to remove these great evils ensconced behind "a question of State policy," the same book proceeds: "No matter what evil he desires to remove by inducing the State to pass laws for its suppression, he can not pursue the course indicated without an impairment of ministerial character and influence. He has not been appointed to fight sin in that way, and men of the world know it, if he does not."..."If the political question has a tinge of morality upon it, this seems ample warrant to them to enter the lists and display themselves as politicians, just as a few animals attached to the circus sometimes the show,"..."If he could see himself as others see him—which he can not, as he is blind in that eye—the 'Rum, Romanism and Rebellion' actors upon the political stage would become more conspicuous for their absence." This book is not unwittingly bought or sold, for the agent himself declares that he endorses the book from lid to lid, and that "a Christian minister who pronounces officially upon a question of State policy, violates the previsions of his high commission, and degrades both himself and the kingdom of Christ, which he represents." I am a stockholder in that book, and hold myself ready to donate my stock to the Louisiana State Lottery, or Liquor Dealers' Association of Tennessee. I certainly have no use for such a book while called to fight sin in all its forms, and "declare the whole counsel of God," to men, protecting the worst vices of the nation under cover of law.

All hail! ye noble heroes of the Creole State! I extend my hand and heart to you in friendly overture. God is with you. "Render, therefore, unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's." General and Annual Conferences are with you. Brave and true brethren from the Baltimore to the Columbia and Pacific are with you. Holy men and women in the laity are with you. General Assemblies, Synods and Conventions are with you. Above all, God our Father, Christ our Savior, and the Holy Spirit our Comforter, will be with you while you hold that no "question of State policy" can be forced upon you, to the ruin of your boys and wretchedness of your people, and forbid you meanwhile to "pronounce" upon it, or use every means in your power to put the evil away from you.

General Conference Work.

BY "RECTUS."

Others have written, "pro and con," as to what is the proper things for our coming General Conference to do for the well-being of our great and greater growing church. On this New Year's morning I greet you and your readers with a few suggestions; simply as suggestive of thought on the part of those who will represent us in our great law-making Conference.

First, I think it well to reflect much, and pray more, before any change whatever is made. I think you and your co-members of the General Conference occupy, by far, the most important posts of duty known in our church. To change or amend the "book of Discipline" requires far more mind and grace than to administer its laws or teach its tenets. I would say, "Hands off!" unless the most consecrated wisdom guide. From the fact that our General Conference is becoming so large and unwieldy, and so few are really competent to its work, I suggest a great reduction in representation. I believe one each (clerical and lay) from a Conference is full enough. The suggestions of some of our brethren to still increase the number of charges in a presiding elder's district, I believe to be exceedingly unwise. I think it far better to reduce them to only five or six. Let the presiding elder be a regular pastor; and, as a presiding elder, only visit his quarterly meetings to hold the Quarterly Conferences, except when it is proper to protract; then let him remain to assist and direct. His charge will support him, except that his traveling expenses will be paid by the Quarterly Conferences as he holds them. With five charges in close proximity to his own, he will only be away from his pastoral work twenty times for one or two days each, except when holding a protracted meeting. A presiding elder now is in a "cold middle," almost without sympathy, unless he happen to be a man of very attractive manner and talents. I think this plan will be better than as we now have it; not only in giving us more pastors, but in giving our Bishops more assistance in determining the appointments. By all means, do not ordain novices, either as deacons or elders. I have a long experience, and I am sure that I err not when I say that no man (I care not for his age, his learning, and his consecration) is competent to the management of a charge until he has served as junior preacher for two entire years. You may emphasize the above to the highest possible point. Wrecks, both of men and works, are strewn all through our Conferences, for the want of sticking to the old apostolic plan, of sending us out two together to till the Lord's vineyard.

I think it very important to amend our "baptismal service," so as to get rid of all appearance of fostering baptismal regeneration. May infinite wisdom inspire our General Conference!

THE BEGGAR AND THE LORD.

BY REV. PHILIP S. STRONG.

There's a legend I long shall remember
That I told in the nurse of Wales,
That country so famed for its fairies,
So rich in its proverbs and tales.

A lord very wealthy and courted,
One night, on retiring to bed,
Heard a Voice in the darkness declaring
This message, which filled him with dread:

"Ere morning the richest and greatest
Of all in this parish shall die."
Three times was the prophecy uttered,
Then the Voice sank away with a sigh.

"Who else," thought the lord, "is intended
Than myself? Sure no other so great
And rich can be found in the parish—
None else of such station and state."

So he summoned his household about him,
That all might be fully prepared.
Watched, waited and wept they, till daybreak;
Lo! his life, to their joy, had been spared.

But at sunrise the church bell was tolling,
And the lord, in surprise and in pride,
Sent to learn for whose death it was ringing;
A blind beggar it was who had died.

Then the nobleman knew by the warning
A timely rebuke had been given;
The beggar was richer and greater—
His riches were laid up in heaven.

And the lesson he humbly accepted
From the beggar he often had spurned,
And to aiding the suffering and needy
His long-hoarded treasure was turned.

When, years after, the noble lay dying,
The beautiful legend relates,
The angels were heard singing welcomes
Far off from the heavenly gates.

And they buried the lord as he wished them—
For so he had given decree—
In the grave where they'd buried the beggar,
Who had been so much richer than he.

Is This the Day of Our Visitation?

BY REV. J. W. TARBOUX.

Now is the appointed time. The golden opportunity is just before us. The time so long and earnestly prayed for by your missionaries and by you has come. The door to Brazil, to Brazilian homes and hearts, is thrown wide open. The old barriers are gone. The gospel can be preached as it never has been preached before. The prospects of success are exhilarating to every preacher of every denomination on the field. The crisis of missionary operations in Brazil is at hand. Will the churches open their eyes and see? Will they arouse and throw such forces in the field as will insure victory for God and truth? The thinking men of this young republic, born in a day, will look around them for support, for safety. The cry has already gone forth from one of the leaders that the only safe foundation for the new order of things is morality. It is a fact that the Catholic Church has not the confidence of the thoughtful people of Brazil. They will not expect much from it. We know, and some of them know, that morality separate from religion is a very "vain thing for safety."

More than that, they have been forced by sickening scenes in their own midst to see that a form of religion without the power and truth of God's Word and Spirit gives no guarantee for virtue, but rather cultivates dishonesty and hypocrisy. The Protestant work in Brazil, though as yet on a comparatively small scale, will bear inspection. Some of the present leaders have a personal acquaintance with it, have seen with their own eyes its sound, healthy fruit.

What is necessary to be done now, is that the church put enough men into the field to form a sufficiently broad basis for recognition by the people as a strong and reliable factor in the working out of their country's moral redemption and social and civil prosperity. Let them do this at this providential moment, and I believe the success of the gospel in Brazil will be secured.

Various letters from our brethren in the field, just received, contain the same sentiments, echo the same cry. They beg me, being at home, to do all I possibly can to gain the attention of the church. God knows I would do it, for I think as they do.

Bro. Lander writes me from Juiz de Fora, State of Minas: "Everywhere there is the expectation of perfect liberty of conscience. Our night is ended; the day dawns without a twilight. How sudden! How quiet! We Americans, accustomed to noise, etc., can hardly realize the momentous fact.

"The open door for which you have so often prayed and wrestled has noiselessly swung wide almost as if by the hidden hands of a miracle-working angel, and we stand face to face with pregnant, mighty possibilities. Oh! that the Board would arm us to enter and conquer!

"What could not forty or fifty contos (twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars) do now for our school! And the importance of the enterprise grows as I contemplate. It seems to me now that next July our faculty should have three effective men; one of them dean of the Theological Department, one a good Brazilian, like Prof. Braga. I think you are fully alive to our school interests, and hope you will do what you can to secure its success. As Bishop Walden says: 'A trained and consecrated native ministry is our hope here as elsewhere!'"

Bro. Tilly writes: "Now the important matter for us. Our church should send at least one dozen men to Brazil next year, even if she has to neglect other mission fields to do so. A dozen men now will do more good than thirty-five would years from to-day. Don't you think so? I am so glad that you are in the States now so that you can present the matter not only before the Board of Missions, but even before our General Conference. Now is the time to lead Brazil to Christ—to make Methodism a power in this country. Will our church take advantage of her great opportunity? Will she enter the open door? Brother, I know you will do your best to bring us a goodly number of laborers. My advice is to take the field for Brazil, and even try to get Conferences to send men and pay them their salaries. Don't think I am too enthusiastic on this point. If you were on the ground at this writing you would feel as I do—the time to strike is when the iron is hot."

Bro. Mattison writes: "Up in the State of Sao Paulo a procession of citizens passed the Presbyterian Church and gave 'vivas' (hurrahs) to 'liberty of worship' and to the 'Protestants.' The orator of the occasion said: 'Catholic as I am, I am for liberty of worship for our Protestant brethren in this State.' Some of the preachers rushed up and were embraced in regular Brazilian style."

From the other brethren I have not heard since the revolution, but, knowing them as I do, there will be but one voice on this subject.

The present Minister of Finance is a broad, liberal-minded man, who has written and done much in the past for liberty of conscience. The Minister of Foreign Affairs is the recognized and quoted exponent of liberty and brotherhood. Both of these were strong editors of leading dailies in Rio de Janeiro. Many missionaries are personally acquainted with them. The governor of the State of Sao Paulo has been the firm friend of our school work at Piracicaba. His children have been educated in the girls' school there. These are significant facts. They mean much.

Brazil has a vast and very fertile territory. Its natural resources are very probably equal to, if not superior to, those of the United States. It has now a population of twelve millions. The physical conditions of the country are such as to offer great inducements to the crowded, distressed millions of Europe. The tide of immigration for the past few years has been quite large, notwithstanding the intolerant, unpopular government. Under the new regime the present tide will almost certainly swell into a torrent. The republic of Brazil is destined at an early day to be filled with a mighty mass of active, prosperous people. She is now following the example that we set the American peoples some hundred and more years ago. Her Constitution will be fashioned largely by that under which we live. Her leaders are now reading its pages. Our success is not only an inspiration to her, but puts us in a position from which we can extend a neighborly hand to help her in solving the great problems of her social and religious life. Now is the time, very probably the best time, the future will ever offer, for the church to make a decided, positive, strong move to win this great American people for Christ and holiness and heaven.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."

I do not consider it necessary to say more in order to prove to the church at large, the importance of this moment in regard to Brazilian affairs, looking at them from a missionary standpoint. The church certainly does see it, and will respond.

I hereby, in the name of my brethren in Brazil, in the name of the Brazilian people that need so much the help we can give, in the name of the souls that will perish unless we carry them the light, in the name of our solemn duty to them, in the name of the blessed Savior who bought them and us with his most precious blood, do appeal to the whole Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to the College of Bishops, to the Mission Boards, to every Annual Conference, to every preacher, to every Christian, to do this year all that can possibly be done for the United States of Brazil. I especially appeal to every young preacher of strong body and mind to ask himself on his knees before God if this call is meant for him. Do it, brethren, and if God says to you, "Yes, I am calling you," and you offer positively and bravely for this providential work in Brazil, I believe hearts and purses will fly open to support you. I do hereby solemnly put this matter upon the heart and conscience of the whole church. God help it to be faithful and brave.

There are a number of men in Southern Methodism who are able financially—and what a glorious work it would be!—to support entirely, each one of them, a missionary in the foreign field.

Will not some of these "five talents" men say to the Mission Board: "Above the men that you find you can support from the general fund select one and send him out at my expense?" Brethren, the Savior is coming to call us to an account for the use we are making of our talents. Let us, as a church and as individuals, be up and doing. Let us, with hearts full of gratitude and love, break and pour out our "alabaster box of ointment" at the feet of our dear Savior. His heart will be gladdened and our earth will be full of the precious perfumes.

North Mississippi Conference Report on Bible Cause.

Your committee, having surveyed the work of the American Bible Society, have to say that while there has been great diligence on the part of colporteurs and superintendents, there is yet great room for advancement in the general work of disseminating the Holy Scriptures. We see that a very small amount has been contributed in our State for the destitute; and we believe that it is because the great cause has not been presented to our people. In no case where collections have been taken, have the people failed to respond to the call. It seems that the time should come when the old sections of Christian civilization should cease to be recipients of charitable distribution, and give the whole strength of the Bible work to the heathen world. This could be done if all Protestant Christendom would co-operate in their prayers, labors, and gifts in this great enterprise.

The American Bible Society has distributed in our State in the past seven years not less than $30,000 worth of Bibles. About one-fourth of the families in the State in the past two years have been destitute of the Bible, and this principally in river counties; and yet from all sources in the State there have been contributed less than two thousand dollars. This should not be, when the Methodist population of the State is more than 70,000, not to say anything of the other churches. The Bible Society says that it will require $400,000 to meet the necessities of the home and foreign work for the ensuing year. Shall they have it? Protestants should shout, Yes. For the Bible is the foundation and corner-stone of Protestant security and progress. In view of these facts, we offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That every pastor during the ensuing Conference year raise a collection among his people for the spread of the Bible.

Resolved, That we commend the earnest efforts of the superintendent of Louisiana and Mississippi in his labors among us—Rev. J. W. McLaurin, of the Mississippi Conference.

C. H. OWEN, Chairman.

Work for the Annual Conferences.

I see many things suggested through the ADVOCATE, under the head of "Work for the General Conference." Now, with your permission, I want to suggest some work for the Annual Conferences. I do not claim exclusive originality for these suggestions, but experience and observation for fifty years have impressed me that something might be done and ought to be done, to promote devotional and spiritual exercises and influences at the sessions of the several Annual Conferences.

In other years our Conference sessions were occasions of true spiritual improvement among the members, and often resulted in the conversion of many souls, and a widespread religious influence went out from them. It was truly a benediction to any people to entertain a Conference.

But in these latter days the Conference is resolved into a business meeting purely. No preaching during the day, and only platform speeches at anniversary meetings at night, except on Sunday. While the regular Minute business of the Conference is being conducted, many of the preachers are engaged in one corner of the room, or in some adjoining room, counting and paying out money collected for various purposes in the circuits and stations, or making out reports which should have been arranged before they came to Conference. Sometimes a presiding elder has to be called or sent for, to represent his district. I am aware that some think that business meetings and anniversary exercises are means of grace—and so they may be; but if such they be, why restrict them to Conference seasons and to the preachers mainly, or to only a few generous layman? Why not allow all the churches and all the laymen in all the circuits and stations to have the like benefit? It is notorious that the preachers at our Annual Conferences give more to the various benevolent enterprises of the church than anybody else. It occurs to me that systematic arrangement for anniversary meetings in each pastoral charge during the year, conducted by the pastors with the assistance of the presiding elder, at some one or more of the quarterly meetings, would effectually secure the amounts assessed for various objects, and greatly facilitate the business of an Annual Conference, obviating so many settlements, so much money changing, and so many anniversaries, attended with collections for each object from a community who are supposed already to have paid their assessments.

Precedent, and as a remedy for what I regard as an evil (and am not alone in this sentiment), I suggest:

1. That at each session of the Annual Conference, just prior to adjournment, the presiding elders, who generally appoint the standing committees, make the appointments for the next ensuing Conference and announce them.

2. Let the chairman of these standing committees, to whom any moneys are to be paid, notify the preachers of his address, so that they can communicate with him.

3. Let the preachers in the recess of Conference, as soon as they are advised of the assessments by the district stewards, proceed to subdivide the amount among their congregations, or take the collections in any way most convenient, and remit the amount collected to the chairman of such committee as to whom, of right, it may belong. This can be done readily through the mail, by postoffice money order or bank check or express.

4. Let each pastor forward to the statistical secretary the statistics to be reported in due time, so that they can be tabulated and reported readily when called for, without the delay we know occurs frequently at Conference, and the necessity for calling repeatedly for these reports.

5. Let all settlements, as far as practicable, be made for books obtained at the Publishing House, with the House direct, and all subscriptions for our periodicals be collected and paid directly to the editor or publisher. On the last point named let no preacher order a book for anyone, nor send the name of any subscriber for any periodical, without accompanying the order with the cash. "A burnt child dreads the fire." I am a sufferer to this day on account of not having pursued this course. Ordinarily, the preachers have no money to spare, and the layman or other individual who wants a book or periodical ought to be able and willing to pay for it.

Mr. Editor, if you think these suggestions worth printing, give them a place. If not, you know what to do with them. I think if they were carried out, we would have more time at Conference for religious exercises and spiritual profit. H. J. HARRIS.

In Memoriam.

HON. AND REV. J. H. MUSE.

The Hon. and Rev. James H. Muse was born May 28, 1811, and died in peace and hope of immortality at Greensburg, La., September 24, 1889.

Being left without a father in early childhood, he was apprenticed to a tailor in Winchester, Tenn., where he served for two or three years, and learned something of the trade; but finding his lot very hard, indeed, he (using his own words) "absconded," and after several years of rather a rambling life, working here and there at his trade, he made his way to Jackson, La., where he began his education, paying his way with his scissors and needle, until, by his studious and moral habits, he won the favor of some men of means, who, of their own accord, extended to him financial aid, as well as moral encouragement, which, together with his own native energy, enabled him to complete his education, and he was licensed to practice law by the Supreme Court of Louisiana before he was twenty-one years of age—the time when his apprenticeship would have ended, had he remained with his master. He was afterwards licensed to preach the gospel, and for a time was a member of the Mississippi Conference. But, as he said with great regret, "circumstances compelled him to retire to the local ranks," which he honored with his great talents and zeal. While he made his living at the bar, he preached extensively in town and country on the Sabbath, and at camp and protracted meetings, greatly to the delight and comfort of the people.

Bro. Muse was a man of a strong, impulsive nature, ever obeying, to the letter, the Bible injunction, "What thy hand findeth to do, do with thy might." Whether at the bar, prosecuting the criminal, or defending his client, or in the pulpit denouncing sin under the terrors of the law, or inviting sinners to Christ under the pathetic appeals of the gospel, this prominent trait was ever to be seen, which often was to him both the hate of his enemies and the love of his friends. He served the public at the bar, in the pulpit, in the legislative halls, and in other capacities.

While in the Legislature, he was the author of the bill that repealed and abolished the law of imprisonment for debt, and thus merits the love and esteem of every poor man in the State.

Our personal acquaintance with Bro. Muse was short, but very pleasant and, I trust, profitable. He had all the elements of a great and true man. He loved the service of the church, and seemed to be ripening for the better world. His last illness was brief, and his death sudden. His last words were: "All is well; God bless you!"

Events of a Year.

In making a catalogue of the events of 1889 which it will be worth while to remember after the year has closed we shall find that by far the larger number and the most important are events that have taken place on the American continent, yet we shall follow our usual course, and first take a survey of what has happened abroad.

Great Britain has been occupied with the affairs of Ireland, but has made little or no progress toward a settlement of the long-standing difficulty. Public attention has been concentrated to a great degree upon the proceedings of the Parnell Commission, which has been, in the popular mind at least, charged with the duty of ascertaining whether or not the politicians of the Land League have been responsible for the crimes and violence that have been rife in Ireland.

For France the history of the year includes two most important events: the emphatic approval of the republic by the people in the general elections involving the probable political extinction of Gen. Boulanger, and the wonderful success of the great exhibition.

Scarcely anything of a general character worthy of record has taken place in Germany. The empire has been quiet, and the young Emperor has occupied himself largely with a round of visits to other countries, and with receiving the visits of foreign sovereigns at his own capital.

Nor, with a single exception, has there been any remarkable event in any other European country. There have been political disturbances and some rioting in both Italy and Hungary, and the Nihilists of Russia are never idle; but these are occurrences of almost every year. Little Servia has been perturbed by the abdication of King Milan and the dynastic intrigues that naturally followed that act, but the peace of Europe has not been broken.

One great event is to be recorded as having occurred on each of the continents of Asia, Africa and Australia. A new liberal Constitution has been proclaimed in Japan; the Soudanese province of Emin has been captured by the Mahdists, and Emin himself has arrived at the eastern coast of the continent in the company of Mr. Stanley, who rescued him; and the project of a confederation of all the Australian colonies of Great Britain on a plan similar to that of the Dominion of Canada, has made great progress, and will probably be carried out.

Turning now to our own hemisphere, the first and greatest event is the change in Brazil from an empire to a republic, which leaves no monarchy among the independent states of America. But hardly less important is the reunion of the small and frequently mutually hostile states of Central America in one republic.

Then, too, we must mention the total collapse of the Panama Canal enterprise, and the beginning of work upon the rival canal of Nicaragua. And, almost within sight of the shores of the continent, has taken place the Haytien civil war and revolution.

At home, a new administration has succeeded to power; four new States have been added to the Union; and the extensive interests of the country in the world at large have been illustrated by the controversies in regard to Samoa and the seal fisheries of Behring Sea, and in a more pleasing manner by the meeting of the Maritime Conference, and of the representatives of every independent country of both American continents, at Washington.

Business has been fairly good throughout the world. The harvests of Europe were below the average, but those of the United States were large. There have been several great commercial disasters, of which the most important was the failure of the French copper-speculating syndicate. And one calamity stands out distinct from all others—the Johnstown flood.

A very long list of deaths of the year might be printed, but we give a few names only. John Bright's death is a loss to the whole world. Among royal personages, the Kings of Portugal, of Annam, and of Abyssinia, and the Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria, have died. Ericsson, the inventor; M. Chevreul, the centenarian chemist of France; Father Damien, the heroic priest and missionary to the Hawaiian lepers; Maria Mitchell, the astronomer; Laura Bridgman; Tolstoi, the Russian Minister of the Interior; Archbishop Ledochowski, primate of Poland; Justice Stanley Matthews; the poet Tupper—these are a few of the names of the dead of 1889.—Youth's Companion.

TITHES.—And let us not now lose sight of this broad and unabrogated principle—I might say, incapable of being abrogated, so long as men shall receive earthly gifts from God. Of all that they have his tithe must be rendered to him, or in so far and in so much he is forgotten: of the skill and of the treasure, of the strength and of the mind, of the time and of the toil, offering must be made reverently; and if there be any difference between the Levitical and the Christian offering, it is that the latter may be just so much the wider in its range as it is less typical in its meaning, as it is thankful instead of sacrificial. There can be no excuse accepted because the Deity does not now visibly dwell in his temple; if he is invisible it is only through our failing faith: nor any excuse because other calls are more immediate or more sacred; this ought to be done, and not the other left undone. —Ruskin.

The star stood over the land of the Jews, and over their heads, and they saw it not; so ever since as to the light of the gospel. The only monarch who ever deserved that man should fall down before him was a child of poverty, whose life was spent in teaching, and who died an ignominious death.—Luther.

PAMPHLETS.

—Refutation of Erroneous Views in regard to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by Rev. J. E. Godbey, D. D. This little pamphlet was written at the request of the Denver Conference, and goes over the whole ground of controversy which eventuated in the separation of the Methodist Church in 1844. The author has produced a book of interest on an old subject and one calculated to do good in many sections of our church. It is published by the Southwestern Methodist Publishing Company, Kansas City, Mo. Price, 20 cents.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

First Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON III.—January 19.

THE SONG OF ZACHARIAS.

Luke 1, 67-80.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways.—Luke 1, 76.

TIME.—B. C. 5.

PLACE.—The residence of Zacharias and Elisabeth, in Judah.

67. Filled with the Holy Ghost—These words we must interpret by the well-established usage of Luke, the historian of the Pentecost. He has consecrated this phrase to express the richest and fullest inspiration of truth and of holy emotion. Prophesied—All inspired utterances are called prophesying. Here are the pent-up thoughts of the months of silence. The fire had long been kindling, and at last he spake with his tongue. The hymn consists of two parts. Part first (68-75) predicts, under Jewish images, the power and safety of Messiah's kingdom. Part second (76-79), in an address to the infant John, predicts his preparatory office as herald of the Messiah's manifestation and his glorious kingdom of human salvation on earth and in heaven.

68. The Lord God—The ancient covenant-God of the peculiar people. Visited—For about four hundred years the chosen people seemed to have been abandoned and forgotten. Redeemed—Literally, wrought out redemption. He might have visited to punish.

69. Raised up a horn—The explanation must be found neither in the horns of the altar on which criminals sought to lay hold, nor in the horns with which they ornamented their helmets; the figure is taken from the horns of the bull, in which the power of this animal resides. It is a natural image among an agricultural people. The term, "hath raised up," is properly applied to an organic growth, like a horn. Just as the strength of the animal is concentrated in its horn, so all the delivering power granted to the family of David for the advantage of the people will be concentrated in the Messiah. House—Family lineage; as we say, The house of Bourbon, or of Brunswick. Of ... David—This shows that Mary must have been known to be of the royal line, independent of Joseph, of whom Zacharias, if he knew anything, could hardly know that after this he would recognize Mary.

70. As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets—Zacharias is here taking up the golden thread which had dropped from Mary, ver. 55. Since the world began—Even in the Garden of Eden the first prediction of the Savior was given.

71. That we—The true church of God, consisting of all faithful believers, whether of the old or new dispensation. Zacharias, as an individual, doubtless understood the words in a Jewish sense, of the Jewish theocracy, or State Church alone. But the Holy Spirit knew its future application. Should be saved—Undoubtedly the political element was chiefly present to Zacharias. The priest is at the same time the patriot in the best sense of the term, deeply moved by the sight of Roman tyranny. But he chiefly prizes this political liberation as the means to a higher end, the reformation of divine worship.

72, 73. To perform—God would show mercy toward the patriarchs, in showing mercy to their descendants. Mercy ...remember...oath—These three words have been thought by some to be an allusion to the three names, John (Jehovah's mercy); Zacharias (Jehovah's remembrance), and Elisabeth (God's oath). Such paronomasiæ, or plays on words, are exceedingly common in the Bible.

74. Serve him—The word signifies religious service distinctively, "the priesthood of the New Testament." Without fear—Not the fear of God, which is rather the Old Testament token of piety, but the fear of enemies, which had often made Israel incapable of serving the Lord with joy. How many times had the Macedonians, especially Antiochus Epiphanes, and the Romans, hindered the Jews in the exercise of their worship!

75. This verse sufficiently proves that the song of Zacharias looks by no means simply to the temporal greatness of the Messianic kingdom, but to the spiritual also. All the days of our life—The saints' perseverance is grounded on the covenant of God and his perfect work, and not on our inherent stability.

76-79. Here are the dying echoes of this song; and very beautiful are these closing notes—like the setting sun, shorn, indeed, of its noon-tide radiance, but skirting the horizon with a wavy and quivering light—as of molten gold—on which the eye delights to gaze, till it disappears from the view. The song passes not here from Christ to John, but only from Christ direct to Christ as heralded by his forerunner. And thou, child—From the height to which he has just attained, Zacharias allows his glance to fall upon the little child at rest before him, and he assigns him his part in the work which has begun. The prophet of the Highest—As "the Most High" is an epithet in Scripture used only of the supreme God, it is inconceivable that inspiration should apply this term, as here undeniably, to Christ, unless he were "God over all, blessed forever." Go before the face of the Lord—As advance-courier. Knowledge of salvation—Why was the ministry of the Messiah preceded by that of another divine messenger? Because the very notion of salvation was falsified in Israel, and had to be corrected before salvation could be realized. Men had lost sight of the true nature of salvation. They were, wrapt in dreams of deliverance from outward enemies, and needed to be taught that it consisted in forgiveness for the sins of the past, and power to overcome sins in the future. Through the tender mercy of our God—Literally, Because of the bowels (or, as we would say, the heart), of mercy. The bowels, in Scripture, are the seat of all the sympathetic emotions. Dayspring from on high—The beautiful English word dayspring is taken, we suppose, from the conception of the spring or fountain of light, from which day is conceived to be poured upon us from the morning sky. The Greek word here used signifies rising—namely, of the sun at dawn; and thence it signifies the east, or region of sunrise. To give light to them that sit in darkness—The people are sitting in sullen darkness, the darkness even of death, and the dayspring pours down its splendor from the eastern sky upon them. The way of peace—The means of obtaining reconciliation with God, the chief of all temporal and spiritual blessings.

80. The child grew, and waxed strong in spirit—The Baptist was no Lamb of God. He was a wrestler with life, one to whom peace does not come easily, but only after a long struggle. His restlessness had driven him into the desert, where he had contended for years with thoughts he could not master, and from whence he uttered his startling alarms to the nation. He was among the dogs, rather than among the lambs, of the Shepherd. Waxed is an old English word for "increased." In the deserts—The idea is that of a wide open space, with or without actual pasture. John lived in the desert—the Arabian desert—that great sand-ocean that laved the hill-country of Judea on the south, and came up so near to Hebron that it was as natural for the boys of Hebron to go down there as for boys living in sight of the ocean to go to sea. Born as a sign unto Israel, the child of the old priest was safest in the black tent of some kindred or friendly emir of the desert. Shewing really denotes the installation of a servant into his office, his official institution into his charge. The author of this act, unnamed, but understood, is evidently God. It follows from iii, 2, and from John i, 31-33, that a direct communication from on high, perhaps a theophany, such as called Moses from the desert, was the signal for John to enter upon his work. But we have no account of this scene which took place between God and his messenger. Our evangelists only relate what they know.

Missionary.

Six Hundred Millions and More.

We are called upon at this season to consider foreign missions, as they are called. Suppose we take one or two nations of Asia and consider them.

The new census of India gives in round numbers a population of 270,000,000, of whom less than 2,000,000 call themselves Christians. Some 210,000,000 unable so much as to read, and contented with ignorance, caring for no light, and worshiping idols or nothing. There are one hundred and nine different languages spoken; Hindoo by 82,000,000, Bengali by 40,000,000, Telegre by 17,000,000, Mahratti by 17,000,000, with Punjabi, Tamil, etc.

China has an area of more than 4,000,000 of square miles (more than the United States by 400,000), with some 400,000,000 of inhabitants, with its religions of Confucianism, Buddhism and Taoism. The morals of Confucius are beautiful and true, and they represent the intelligence of China. Taoism its superstition, and Buddhism its ritual and idolatry, while it acknowledges no God. In these two countries there are some 670,000,000 of men, and there are a few thousand or a few hundred thousand Christians, and Christian Europe, to impress them with Christianity, is sending them opium! And the poverty and ignorance of most of these millions! We stand outside China and India, holding nearly half the population of the world, and say, as we think of Christ—what?

Strange, is it not, that Christianity beginning in Asia, did not turn East, but rather West? But so it was; west and further west the heroic Paul journeyed, led thereto by the man of Macedonia. West and further west, until it reached our shores, with larger wealth and more of everything than any country in the world; and we—well, there are heroic souls among us who have gone forth into this tangled forest, blazing their way as best they could, and they turn to us, their own fellow-citizens, and say, Forget us not, O American brothers!

The millions of this fair country care nothing; but the thousands? There are many of such, who forget them not, but whose thoughts and prayers and money are liberally bestowed, whom God will bless in his appointed time.—Southern Churchman.

Missionary Facts and Principles.

1. The heathen are conscious of sin. Their religious works contain affecting confessions of sin and yearnings for deliverance.

2. The heathen feel the need of some satisfaction to be made for their sins. They have devised many penances, asceticisms and self-tortures. These fail to break the bondage. They do not give the conscience peace.

3. The heathen need a divine Deliverer; One who can make the satisfaction and inspire the peace.

4. There is a command in the New Testament to go and disciple all the heathen nations in the name of this Deliverer.

5. This command emanates from the supreme authority. It is from the lips of Christ himself.

6. This command is addressed to all Christians, in every age, until every human being is converted. He who said, "Go, preach to every creature," added, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The command and the promise reach unto the end.

7. The missionary spirit is the spirit of Christ. The soul, or the church, that does not possess it, is dead.

8. If we love the person of Christ, we shall desire that his glory shall fill all lands.

9. If we love the truth of Christ, we shall be intent upon its proclamation, till every false religion is vanquished by it.

10. We are not Jews, but Gentiles. Our lineage is heathen. The missionary enterprise rescued us from paganism. Gratitude for our own emancipation and love for our brethren, the heathen of all countries, should move us with a mighty impulse to engage in the missionary work.

11. Success is certain. The Lord has promised it. The apostles illustrated it. Those twelve men were missionaries. In their time Rome, with her military force, ruled the bodies of men; and Greece, with her philosophy, ruled their spirits. Both arose in enmity to the Cross. The little band of apostles did not fear or falter. They conquered both.

12. We ourselves are the offspring of the missionary enterprise. To turn against it is like a man's turning against his own mother.

13. Duty, love, success: these are three magic words. Let us grasp the ideas they suggest, and pray and work for all men, at home and abroad, until the church absorbs the whole world, and rises up into the millennial glory. —Rev. H. M. Scudder, D. D., in The Advance.

Temperance.

North Dakota's rigid prohibition bill was signed by Governor Miller, December 19, and will go into effect July 1, 1890.

It is encouraging to note that in Chester county, Pennsylvania, the temperance men of all parties—Republican, Democrat and Prohibition—recently united and signally defeated the candidate for judge who was supported by the liquor interest.

A California judge who became intoxicated a few days ago and created a scene in a drinking saloon afterwards lectured himself in court, imposed on himself and paid a fine of fifty dollars, and pledged himself to resign his office if the offense should be repeated.

Dr. Kraft-Ebing, of Gratz, the eminent alienist who was recently added to the list of professors of the University of Vienna, in his opening lecture on mental diseases, stated that in twenty per cent. of all cases intemperance is the sole or chief cause of insanity, and in thirty per cent. more, one of the causes. He attributed sixty per cent. of all cases to the influence of heredity.

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, secretary of the American Sabbath Union, and Mrs. J. C. Bateham, national superintendent of the Sabbath observance department of the W. C. T. U., are both in Washington, working to secure a Sabbath law for the District of Columbia. Mrs. Bateham has spoken nearly every day since the national convention and soon goes to California to assist the work for a Sabbath law in that State.

Prohibition is to be tried in East Tennessee. A great land company, recently organized, with Clinton B. Fisk at its head, has purchased 300,000 acres of agricultural, mineral and timber lands in East Tennessee and proposes to establish a manufacturing valley city and upland health resort, placing in every title deed and lease an absolute prohibition clause. This feature they declare to be based, not upon moral or political sentiment, but upon the wisest business policy.

Eli Perkins has been lecturing in Kentucky. At Petersburg three distillers were on the lecture committee. Upon being asked by the lecturer if he might say a few words that evening for temperance, they answered, "Do so by all means," and declared that although distillers, they were emphatically for temperance in Kentucky, saying, "We want you to understand that we don't make this whiskey for our Kentucky boys; we make it to poison the Yankees and the Irish!"

An open secret.—The unparalleled merit and popularity of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

A specific for all bodily pain is Salvation Oil. It cures all pain instantly and costs 25 cents.

Pundita Ramabai's Saradasadan has at present twenty-five pupils, of whom twelve are boarders. Of the twelve boarders six are widows, three married and three unmarried girls. Pundita intends to give some of these boarders special instruction in the embroidery of caps, making of cane baskets and chairs, drawing, painting and modeling in clay. For this purpose she is planning to secure another assistant from America.

Letter from Bishop Wilson.

MR. EDITOR: Most cordially do I reciprocate your kind wishes, and pray God to make the incoming year the most fruitful of your life.

I congratulate you and your readers upon the contribution of $1,000 to our Japan work. May the Lord recompense the donors!

I am now carrying three male missionaries and two ladies, for whom the Board made no provision, besides my undertaking to build a house where the women, as well as girls, of Japan may be accommodated and taught. It will tax my resources to the utmost to do it. Please send draft for the amount to our Treasurer at Nashville, instructing him to put it to the credit of "Bishop Wilson's Specials."

With many thanks and prayers for God's blessing upon you.

Yours very truly,

A. W. WILSON.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 30, 1889.

To the Work.

We suppose that our preachers have all reached their appointments and have surveyed the fields and are girding themselves for the year's work. Many find themselves in new places, where the surroundings are different and where they see new faces. Let not the strangeness discourage any heart. Behind many of those new faces are Christian souls glowing with true sympathy and earnest prayerfulness. Many are among old and true and tried co-workers, and the hand-grasp of welcome back has already infused into them the noble ambition to work for God during this year A. D. 1890 as they have never worked before.

The conditions are all favorable for the beginning of a most successful year of work. The successes of the past year have given a momentum to church progress in the right direction and on right lines. The spiritual and material advancement made by our church in 1889 is simply the harbinger of a larger and more rapid progress for the present year. In the good providence of God, we have come to a point of view whence a wide domain of hitherto unoccupied territory spreads itself out before us and invites us to enter and take possession. What is needed now is to remove some obstacles which yet remain, and by a wise and judicious use of our wonderful means of grace to accelerate the forward movement of all the great enterprises of our church. As preachers, we need "the Spirit of Wisdom" for our work. The work is so great in its nature—so vast in its outreaches—so tremendous in its results for the future of the church and the country, that no preacher can afford to enter upon it without a special baptism of the "Spirit of Wisdom." As preachers, looking out upon the extent and variety of the work assigned us, let us "tarry in Jerusalem until we are endued with power from on high!" Then only shall we be prepared to appreciate the conditions into which our appointments have brought us and be qualified to meet those conditions in such a manner as to insure success in building up the churches and in leading sinners to our Lord. These two things comprise all our work—building up the churches and saving sinners. Let no preacher show disloyalty to his Lord by turning his attention, for one moment, from these two great matters. Rather let every preacher concentrate his thoughts, and "draw all his cares," and center all his hopes, and urge his ambition, and rally his energies, and turn all his prayers for the accomplishment of these two things. Our people need to be led into the larger experiences and higher joys and profounder peace of our holy religion. They need to "know the Lord" in those wonderful manifestations which he has made of himself in his incarnate Son. They need to have in the preaching and in the every-day practice of their ministers an exhibition of that grace which wisely regulates every action of life, which sweetly sanctifies every sorrow of time, which lovingly dominates the whole being to the blessed rule of Christ. And they look to their pastors to lead them into such a state of living. Who is the preacher that will, by unfaithfulness or carelessness, disappoint such hopes and expectations?

Besides this, there are the "lost sheep," men and women in every station and on every circuit, lost to God and the church. Our duty is to go out after them and bring them into the fold. The tenderest picture our Savior drew was that of the good shepherd seeking the one, lone, lost sheep. The great heart of the Son of God throbs with pity for the lost ones. His whole mission on earth was the one purpose of seeking them, hunting them up, in order to save them. No minister can afford to remit efforts in this direction. No man with the "mind of Christ" in him can cease to follow them in all their wanderings with the invitations and warnings and promises of the gospel! Oh, those lost souls, battered and bruised by sin, how much of loving patience, how much of divine tenderness, how much of gentle pity, how much of resolute perseverance is needed in treating them so as to save them! The example of our Lord in this respect is before us, and the more closely we imitate him the more closely we shall get to them and the more help we shall be able to afford them.

We shall not have an easy time in this great work. There will be still "fightings without and fears within." But we are in reach of the infinite resources of divine grace, and the gospel we preach and live is as powerful to-day as when its trumpet notes shook down the walls of the Roman empire. We have had discouragements, and they will come again. Sometimes in the past we have said,

> Oh, it is hard to work for God,
> To rise and take his part
> Upon this battle-field of earth,
> And not sometimes lose heart!

and we may feel like saying it again before the year closes, but if we have the true spirit, the discouragement will be but for a moment. Our own faith in the gospel we preach will raise us above this low condition, and the bright and beautiful promises of a good heavenly Father will fill us with a new and enthusiastic devotion, and we will move on to our work with the triumphant cry,

> But right is right, since God is God;
> And right the day must win;
> To doubt would be disloyalty,
> To falter would be sin!

Letter from "Gilderoy."

It becomes young men—particularly young preachers—to apply themselves diligently to study while they are young, for the time will come when they can not, or, more likely, will not, learn how to study. The average dead-line in a preacher's life is about the age of forty. If this is passed without the habit of study being well formed and fixed, the average preacher will begin to decline, begin to grow flabby, and pretty soon he will not be wanted anywhere. The objection, and apparent opposition, to old preachers is not nearly so great as some people suppose. Indeed, it is not a question of age at all, but one of interest, of preaching ability and preaching power. Men ought to be more interesting and more acceptable and useful at sixty and seventy years than at thirty and fifty. Some men are. They are men who continue to study, whose minds are young, fresh, vigorous and elastic, beyond three-score and ten. They are men who have formed and keep up habits of study, even down to old age. Their minds continue to grow. They keep abreast of the best and freshest thought of the age in which they live. They are not supernumerary, nor superannuated in mind. They do not grow morbid, nor bitter, nor sour towards the church, nor towards the age. They are vigorous, independent, original men. Their age, their gray hairs, gives them an influence and power for good they could not otherwise have. They have power with God and with men. This comes of the life they have lived—the use they have made of their time. They live in the present and have no time to brood over the past. They are not at all disposed to say, "The former days were better than these," nor do they curse and berate the days in which they live. This comes mainly from having kept up with the age.

Men who lag behind soon get out of sympathy with everything and with everybody. Nothing, and nobody, is right because things are not as they used to be. The degeneracy of the times, in both Church and State, is a hobby with this class. They mouthe and growl and complain until their presence and their company is an affliction. Nobody wants them about—particularly if they are preachers. The only cure for this disease is to quit growling and to get up and go to work. Strike a trot and catch up, and then keep up. The world, the age, the church, is not going to turn back and "poke" along with a man of this kind, nor sit down by him on a mile-stone and help him whine.

The only preventive of this disease is hard study on fresh, live subjects. Things move rapidly now. This is an age of progress—of progress such as the world has never known before. There never was a time when there was such a stimulus to mental, and, I may say, to physical, activity as the present. A year now, to a live man, is more than a half century one hundred years ago. If Rip Van Winkle were to sleep twelve months now, he would find the changes greater when he awoke than at the end of twenty years when he slept before. The rapidity of the movements going on ought to keep every man wide awake and industriously employed to keep up, and to lend a helping hand in the world's progress. It is useless, yea, it is madness and folly, to say this progress is all wrong. We had as well try to stop the sun in his course. The devil will capture and use and utilize these mighty forces and agencies for evil if we do not lay hold of them for God. The antediluvians might have whined and might have complained at progress, as, perhaps, some of them did, when the ark was a-building. They lived long and things moved slowly; but, now, when a railroad is built and equipped across a continent in a year, there is no time for repining and complaining. We must marshal our hosts and our powers and keep pace with this spirit of progress and use these agencies for evangelizing the world. The fact is, we can do for God and for the salvation of men, in twelve months now, what could not have been done in any century, except this, since the days of Christ. The spirit of progress in other things has made this possible. If things continue to advance and to improve at the present rate, I dare not say what we may not accomplish in the next ten years. When I begin to think of it, in the light and progress of the past ten years, the thought almost smothers me, and the prospect fills me with the brightest hopes, and makes me long to live that I may share a part of the coming glory. How any man can be idle or indifferent is more than I can understand. It is enough to stir a heart of stone and to put life into a fossilized mummy. How any man can sit and whine at the spirit of progress, and long for old Methodism and old ways, with such a glorious future within his grasp, is a problem too deep for me. Such men are a clog and a dead weight on the wheels of progress, and a curse and a burden to the cause of God.

GILDEROY.

The Quarterly Review.

This magnificent Quarterly of our church lies upon our table full to overflowing with the best thoughts current in the minds of our people. We like exceedingly the mechanical make-up. It is handy, ready-cut and in splendid type, with wide margin. The House certainly deserves the thanks of the church in this instance at least. There are in this number eleven contributed articles and seven by the editor. J. Thomas Pate contributes an excellent article on "History of Sunday-schools," and J. R. G., a kindred article on "The Child and the Church." Rev. G. G. Smith writes on "The Georgia Life of the Oxford Methodists." The period embraced in the life of Wesleys in Georgia can never be anything else than interesting to the student of Methodism, and Bro. Smith has given an exceedingly interesting paper on the subject. Our Mississippi brother, Rev. D. G. W. Ellis, gives a paper on the "Unity of the Human Race," which will be found a readable, thoughtful contribution to that subject. W. F. Sanford, L.L.D., gives his "Reminiscences of the Olden Time," while Layman discusses "The Value of a Well-Defined Belief." Rev. L. Leitch writes on "The Prophecy of Joel." "Some Incidents in Female Education" is by Harry Stillwell Edwards. Our correspondent, Rev. Dr. Chapman, gives a very fine article on "The Rationale of Missions." Dr. Harrison, the editor, discusses several very important subjects, among them "A Wesleyan Irenicum," "The Finances of a Great Church," etc. Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Price, $2 50 per annum.

Another Church Dedicated.

Our new church in Gretna was solemnly set apart to the worship and service of God last Sabbath evening. Our young pastor, Rev. H. H. Ahrens, has shown a commendable zeal in this enterprise, and, with his Boards of Stewards and Trustees and "elect ladies," has so pushed the work that now they have a most beautiful and attractive house of worship consecrated to God without a dollar of debt to be provided for. A large congregation witnessed the impressive ceremony of dedication. The opening prayer was offered by Dr. J. B. A. Ahrens, the sermon was preached by the editor of this paper, the collection, for the furnishing of the house, was taken by Rev. J. T. Sawyer and resulted in about $220, and the sentence and prayer of dedication were pronounced by the presiding elder, Dr. C. F. Evans. Thus another temple stands as an evidence of the growing power of religion in our land.

The Texas Christian Advocate has donned a new dress with the new year, and we rejoice in its prosperity. It is among the best of our church papers.

Sam Jones in New Orleans.

This celebrated evangelist began his labors in this city last Sunday, at 3 P. M., at Artillery Hall. A large audience greeted the evangelist at his first service, there being at least 1,500 persons present. For an hour the speaker pressed the gospel truth home to the consciences of his hearers and clinched it by aptest illustrations. The varied emotions exhibited by the hearers under the word of the speaker showed that they were in his hands, "as clay in the hands of the potter."

At the night service the congregation, in the same place, had grown into, at least, 2,500 persons. Taking Joshua's resolution as his text, Bro. Jones gave a New Orleans audience a sermon such as they had never heard before. Church members and sinners came in, each for their share of plain-dealt truth. The keen blade of the speaker flashed in circles of terror, and its point was felt probing many a careless or sleeping conscience.

Monday morning, at ten A. M., Bro. Jones held service in Carondelet Street Church. The audience was not large, but the hearers were edified and interested and delighted by a talk on the first verses of I. Thessalonians. At 3 P. M., in the same church, service was held, when Bro. Stuart, Mr. Jones' companion, gave a most stirring exhortation to prayerfulness. It went to the hearts of all present, and must result in untold good.

At night the large hall was crowded. The service was a most interesting one. Prof. Excell, the leader of the choir, is getting his singers under good discipline, and, by his superb voice, is training them to sing in a style that will add immensely to the success of the meetings. Bro. Jones preached to a large and attentive audience a fine sermon on "Conversion," and at the close quite a number asked for prayers. We believe Bro. Jones is getting a firm grip on the people here, and we expect to see wonderful results before he gets through. He gives Christian people to understand that he can do nothing without their co-operation and their prayers.

At the Tuesday morning service in Carondelet Street Church, the congregation was, at least, one-third larger than that of the previous morning. The topic of Bro. Jones' sermon was "Committal," and by a few plain illustrations he showed every one present what is meant by "committing thy way unto the Lord." It was just simply giving God the reins and being obedient to the gentlest touches of his hand.

The number of hearers is increasing with every service. The church members are being awakened to the necessity of lending all their help, and we expect to see great times. We ask the prayers of all our readers for this meeting!

Holiness.

The Wesleyan Methodist pastoral address contains the following on the subject of practical holiness:

And, dear brethren, you will remember that Christian holiness is to find exemplification in the practical world, and in daily life. The mint and anise and cummin reappear in successive ages, in curious forms, to the prejudice of the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and truth; and in some directions to-day we discern a tendency to treat holiness too much as if it were a question of definition, of sentiment, of phraseology, of acts and observances which, whatever may be their precise ecclesiastical value, have no moral quality or Scriptural obligation. Let us in attempting to reach the highest life beware of wasting power in eccentricities of fellowship, in freaks of worship, in controversies about words, in acts and observances of voluntary obedience. The holiness of the New Testament finds its expression in practical honesty, veracity, fairness, temperance, pureness, meekness, gentleness, forgiveness, and patient love; and they who carry out these practical qualities in the highest and most delicate manner know most and reveal most of the mystery and sublimity of holiness. Christian goodness has in it a divine element that lifts it far above and beyond all natural virtue; but the sphere for the manifestation of such goodness is still in commonplace life, in the daily deeds and duties of the million.

Notes.

The New Orleans correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, in that paper of December 21, devotes nearly three columns to matters pertaining to the Louisiana Lottery. He brings out some startling revelations in regard to the use made of the mails by the lottery company. The daily average of letters received in the New Orleans postoffice is 12,000, and the lottery is credited with 6,000. The company receives 30 per cent. of all ordinary letters, two-thirds of all registered letters and two-thirds of all postal orders. Of all out-going letters two-thirds are from the lottery. The government has to handle all this, and yet the government has actually prohibited the lottery company the use of the mails. The government aiding the lottery in defrauding the government is a beautiful spectacle—"a sight to behold." The writer further says these 6,000 letters represent $67,500 daily, or $2,025,000 monthly, or $24,687,500 yearly. Is it any wonder the company wants to hold on?

An article, in the January Popular Science Monthly, by Benjamin Reece, on "Public Schools as affecting Crime and Vice," presents some very "disquieting facts." It is true that statistics may be twisted and distorted so as to produce wrong impressions, and even to create false facts, but that such impressions are possible is a sad state of affairs. The "fact" which this writer gets out of his statistics is that a large proportion of our prison population is of the educated class. With the decade ending in 1880, the population increased thirty per cent., the illiteracy increased ten per cent., while the criminals increased eighty-two per cent. Everyone knows that education is more general now than ever, and yet the ratio of prisoners, which was one in 3,442 inhabitants in 1850, rose to one in 837 in 1880. In 1886 there were in the New York State prisons 2,616 convicts; of these 1,801 had a common-school education, 373 could read and write, 19 were collegiates, 10 had received classical and 78 academic training, 97 were just able to read and 238 had no education. The tables which the writer presents show that where the "extremes of poverty and wealth meet, as in the Eastern States, there is found the maximum of crime." The tables show that in the South, where there is the greatest percentage of illiteracy, there is less crime. While these figures show a state of things unpleasant to contemplate, they emphasize the fact that the only salvation for the country is in a genuine Christian education. We believe the church, so long asleep on this all-important question, is awaking to a proper appreciation of her duties in this matter. God speed the day when she shall arise and assert her power and go earnestly to work on this line!

Dr. Pierson has given, in the January number of the Missionary Review of the World, a ringing article in which he brings forward the evidences that the church is entering upon a new departure in missions. Dr. Pierson sees signs of awakening to new zeal and new liberality in many directions. Among the evidences that the church is really rising up to her grand privileges and possibilities, Dr. Pierson notes the infusion of a new spirit of enterprise into missionary work. The quickened pulse of daily life is affecting mission work. There is an awaking to search for the best methods to be put to immediate trial. The whole world is on the run, and the church is aroused to the fact that she must quicken her pace or be left behind. Another evidence of a new departure he finds in the unparalleled uprising of our young men and women. The number of these offering themselves voluntarily for mission work is one of the most significant facts of current history. The "Students' Uprising," which took definite form only a few years ago, has now enrolled nearly 4,000 volunteers for the foreign field. Another evidence of a new departure the Doctor finds in the "independent effort on missionary fields, and the tendency to establish a more direct tie between the churches and the missionaries." This latter we think a most important point, and predict that the time will come when every church of average numbers and resources will have its own missionaries.

These are, in our view of the case, all good signs. The year opens hopefully, the cause of God is everywhere gaining ground, and victories promise to come "thick and fast" to the faithful. So may it be!

Personal and Otherwise.

We are indebted to President G. W. Wilson for an invitation to the Florida International and Semi-Tropical Exposition, which opens at Ocala, Florida, January 15, and closes April 1.

Now is the best time to begin the year's work for the ADVOCATE. Find out every family where it does not go, and determine that it shall go there. There is nothing equal to persevering perseverance.

The following, received New Year's Day, is appreciated by all connected with this paper:

As I have no other gift to present you, I wish you, your family and the ADVOCATE a happy, happy New Year, and may you prosper, spiritually and temporally, the coming year, and with better health than ever before.

The Youth's Companion announces its circulation as 430,000. If the count is made as some other papers make it, that means 2,150,000 readers!

Rev. P. T. Stanford, born a slave in Virginia in 1859, is now pastor of a Baptist Church in Birmingham, England, speaks English correctly as well as five other languages. So says the Advance.

During 1889 ninety ministers of the Congregational Church died, and their average age was sixty-nine years.

The address of Rev. W. W. Hopper is still Jackson, Miss., where his friends may communicate with him.

The City Council of Frankfort, Ky., has passed an ordinance prohibiting the sale of cigarettes within the city limits. Good for Franfort!

Our City Council has passed, by a vote of sixteen to eight, the ordinance prohibiting smoking in the street cars. That is a blessed thing! One more nuisance abated!

Now is the best time to subscribe for our missionary papers—the Missionary Reporter and the Woman's Missionary Advocate. They are only fifty cents a year each, and will give you a useful fund of information.

We call the attention of our readers, especially district stewards, to the presiding elders' calls for district stewards' meetings. These are very important meetings, and every member should attend.

We regret to learn from the dispatches of the death of Louis Austin, of Jackson, La. We knew him in our boyhood. He was a prominent member of our church. He reached the age of eighty-five years!

The Nashville Advocate has appeared in its new dress and enlarged form. We think it is improvement in every respect, and trust that it is the beginning of a long day of the very best things for our Zion.

Speaking of Dr. McCosh, the venerable ex-president of Princeton College, the New York Christian Advocate says:

In a communication to the New York Tribune, dated December 10, the venerable doctor says that he is not only favorable to revision, but also of such changes as may be necessary to establish a federation of all the Evangelical Churches similar to the union of States in our country. He would have the whole land divided into districts, and a gospel minister, together with a lay agency provided for each, and the obligation imposed on these laborers to preach the gospel to every creature.

The reports at the preachers' meeting, last Monday, not only showed that all were at their posts, but that all had gone to work with a resolute will and were trusting only in him who alone can give the increase. We expect New Orleans Methodism to accomplish greater things this year than ever before.

Our friend and brother, Dr. H. M. Smith, editor of the Southwestern Presbyterian, of this city, was surprised on New Year's Day by the presentation, on the part of friends, of an elegant office chair. The Doctor says: "We doubt whether a more elegant and comfortable chair is to be found on this section of our planet." We offer our congratulations. We know the value of a comfortable chair to a big man!

A note from Prof. Wiley, of Centenary College, says: "I think our college is more prosperous than at any previous time since the war." Our readers are glad to hear that!

Mr. Gladstone is reported to have said recently: "If you will repeat the first line of any page in Homer, I could continue the quotation to the end of the page." That is a remarkable memory!

One of the significant facts of to-day is that nearly four thousand pledged volunteers are being educated in colleges and theological seminaries to be missionaries!

Bishop Hurst says there are in India about two hundred newspapers, the most of them being dailies. The newspaper is making its way over all the earth. It ought to be a promoter of good as it goes.

Rev. Wm. Hart, who withdrew from our church and ministry at the last session of the Louisiana Conference, is assistant rector of the Episcopal Church in Monroe, La.

During the continuance of the Sam Jones' meeting, there will be held a special prayer meeting every morning, at seven sharp, at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, 15 Camp street, to invoke the divine blessing and the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on all those engaged in saving souls, and especially upon the Rev. Sam Jones, that thousands in this city may be converted and led to the foot of the cross of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Dr. Price, presiding elder on the Grenada district, says: "We have made a good start on this district. The outlook for the Conference year is full of promise."

Cardinal Newman is the oldest member of the College of Cardinals, having been born February 21, 1801.

—Rev. R. P. Howell writes from Floyd, La.: "I am back to my work of last year, and the good people have given us a hearty welcome. I preached here yesterday, the first sermon for the new year, and took a collection for church building, raised $52 50 in a few minutes, and sung the Doxology with a right hearty good-will. I reported at Conference $50 on hand at this place for church building. I want to report now $157 75 more. We hope to have a new church to worship in by April 1. Among our Christmas presents was a fine turkey (a real live one) on a postal card. God bless you and the dear ADVOCATE!"

—Rev. W. M. Young writes from Lula, Coahoma county, Miss: "I came to my new field of labor a little more than a week before Christmas. It is situated in the Mississippi Delta, the parsonage being at Lula. It is a beautiful country and the finest lands I ever saw. After having served the people of Corinth circuit for four years, it seemed a little unusual to move one hundred and fifty miles; but we have met a generous people. The parsonage (for which Bro. N. G. Augustus has much credit) not being quite finished on our arrival, we were conducted by Dr. R. B. Shelby to his residence. Here we had a good home, and Thursday, December 26, we moved into the new parsonage, which is built on the church lot, with four rooms, a pantry, and they well furnished. So you see we are ready for work. Hope to send some subscriptions to the dear old ADVOCATE soon."

A Correction.

In my "Letter from West Point," in last week's issue of the ADVOCATE, where I wrote, "We have taken members into the church for the past three Sundays," the printer makes me say numbers; and where I wrote, "But he says so many good things that I could well afford to condone the others," he makes me say "condemn the others." I do not blame the printer, but shall be glad if he is able to make the correction.

A Change Suggested.

MR. EDITOR: I am once more at work. The field is white unto the harvest, and much do I feel my inadequacy to the labor that has been assigned me. Many things combine to make this to me a very arduous pastorate. Of necessity I have some burdens to carry that are foreign to the work itself, foreign to me, and yet enter into and exercise an influence in my daily labors. Charity is not the normal condition of the world, and a man has to die before the world can forget his faults, and appreciate whatever he may possess of good.

It was not, however, my intention to trouble you with an exegesis upon human depravity. But to ask your attention to a suggestion that I would make relative to a change in the Discipline in regard to the Sunday-school. Ans. 3. ¶106—"The Quarterly Conference of each circuit and station shall be a board of managers, having the supervision of all the Sunday-schools within its bounds. It shall elect,... on nomination of preacher in charge, a superintendent.

Now, I would suggest that after the words, "superintendent for each Sunday-school under its care," add, "who is subject to the preacher in charge, and may be changed by him."

The reasons for this are many and varied. Under the law, as it now stands, the Sunday-school is virtually independent of the preacher. The Quarterly Conference is the board of managers, and the superintendent is responsible alone to them, and the preacher, as far as the law goes, has but to nominate at the fourth Quarterly Conference a superintendent, and then his power has ended for twelve months. Again, under the existing law, circumstances may arise that will make the preacher in charge amenable and under the control of the Quarterly Conference, which is clearly against the trend and spirit of the Discipline. The preacher's hands must be strengthened with regard to the control of the Sunday-school. They are, year by year, becoming more and more alienated; especially is this the case in our large city stations.

Now, don't call me a crank, but think about this matter, and try and put on the brake before the washout is reached. The last General Conference made the same provision in regard to class-leaders, as you will see ¶105, Ans. 1, etc.

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Yonker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

MASON & HAMLIN

The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since and including that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers, of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated $22 to $900 catalogues free.

ORGANS

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity GRAND & UPRIGHT, for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

"THE SWEETEST MOTHER."

Little Carl was helping mother
Carry home the lady's basket;
Chubby hands, of course, were fitting
One great handle—can you ask it?
As he tugged away beside her,
Feeling, O so brave and strong!
Little Carl was softly singing
To himself a little song:

"Some time I'll be tall as father,
Though I think it a very funny;
And I'll work and build big houses,
And give mother all the money.
For," and little Carl stopped singing,
Feeling, O so strong and grand!
"I have got the sweetest mother
You can find in all the land."

Don't Read Them.

"There's a tip-top book, Ellis, you can take to read if you want to. I've just read it, and its a splendid story."

"Then I should like to read it. I don't very often get a chance at a new book. But I think books are the best of anything, and when I'm a man I mean to have stacks of them. Mother and I read together, and then we talk over what we've been reading about; so its twice as good as if I read it alone."

"Is that the way you do?"

"Of course it is. Why shouldn't I? Mother and I are all the family there is left, and we do everything together we can. I tell you, my mother is the best company I ever had. She is just jolly, besides being as good as she can be. She goes singing round the house, making a fellow feel rich, no matter what he has for dinner."

"Ain't she old?"

"No, and it wouldn't make any difference if she was; she'd be my mother all the same."

"To be sure she would. But if you take this book you must keep it out of her sight and read it on the sly."

"Why must I?"

"Because she won't like it. My mother'd make a great fuss if she knew I read such a book."

"Then what do you read it for? What's the matter with the book? You said 'twas splendid."

"So it is, but your mother wouldn't think so."

"Then it ain't so, for I tell you mother knows. I won't read anything on the sly. I don't do business that way, and I advise you not to. My mother knows best."

"If you think so, I don't suppose it's any use to try to make you think different."

"No, sir, it ain't; and I advise you to do as your mother wants you to. You've got a bad book or you wouldn't talk about it the way you'd do, and you'd better burn it up.

So one boy was loyal to his mother and his own higher nature. But two others were found who were more easily influenced.

They read the book, thought and talked of the exciting scenes described in it, and were thus prepared for further reading of the same kind. Lessons were neglected and occasionally there was a day's truancy from school. The evil did not stop there. Absolute falsehood followed fast upon deception; and then a petty theft was committed in the village. It was charged at once to the three boys, who were constantly together and who were known to be habitual readers of highly sensational books and papers. They were suspected of reading even worse books, and all this told against them.

For their parents' sake they were spared the disgrace of a public trial. Upon acknowledgement of their guilt and promises of amendment the prosecution against them was withdrawn and every effort was made to reclaim them from their evil ways. But the die was cast. Vile books had done their work of pollution. These boys grew up to be reckless, dissipated men, with low tastes and gross manners, while the boy who trusted his mother was honorable and honored.

Don't do anything on the sly, for he sure your sins will find you out. Don't look at a picture you would not be willing to show to her.

The boys tried in our courts for the commission of crimes are those who have read bad books. The boys who are serving out sentences in houses of correction and State prisons are those who have read bad books. Don't read them. Don't trust yourself to read one.

"Evil communications corrupt good manners," and evil words upon a printed page corrupt both soul and body. Don't read them.—Selected.

Self-Made.

A wealthy business man not long ago made a short visit in his native town, a thriving little place, and while there was asked to address the Sunday-school on the general subject of success in life.

"But I don't know that I have anything to say, except that industry and honesty win the race," he answered.

"Your very example would be inspiring, if you would tell the story of your life," said the superintendent. "Are you not a self-made man?"

"I don't know about that."

"Why, I've heard all about your early struggles! You went into Mr. Wheelright's office when you were only ten—"

"So I did! So I did! But my mother got me the place, and while I was there, she did all my washing and mending, saw that I had something to eat, and when I got discouraged, told me to cheer up and remember tears were for babies."

"While you were there you studied by yourself—"

"O no, bless you, no! Not by myself! Mother heard my lessons every night, and made me spell long words while she beat up cakes for breakfast. I remember one night I got so discouraged I dashed my writing-book, ugly with pot hooks and trammels, into the fire, and she burnt her hands in pulling it out."

"Well, it was certainly true, wasn't it, that as soon as you had saved a little money, you invested in fruit, and began to peddle it out on the evening train?"

The rich man's eyes twinkled and then grew moist over the fun and pathos of some old recollection.

"Yes," he said slowly, "and I should like to tell you a story connected with that time. Perhaps that might do the Sunday-school good. The second lot of apples I bought for peddling were specked and wormy. I had been cheated by the man of whom I bought them, and I could not afford the loss. The night after I discovered they were unfit to eat, I crept down cellar and filled my basket as usual.

"They looked very well on the outside," I thought, "and perhaps none of the people who buy them will ever come this way again. I'll sell them, and just as soon as they're gone, I'll get some sound ones."

Mother was singing about the kitchen as I came up the cellar stairs. I hoped to get out of the house without discussing the subject of unsound fruit, but in a twinkling of an eye she had seen and was upon me.

"Ned," said she, in her clear voice, "what are you going to do with those specked apples?"

"Se—sell them," stammered I, ashamed in advance.

"Then you'll be a cheat, and I shall be ashamed to call you my son," she said promptly. "O, to think you could dream of such a sneaking thing as that!" Then she cried and I cried, and—I've never been tempted to cheat since. No, sir, I haven't anything to say in public about my early struggles, but I wish you'd remind your boys and girls every Sunday that their mothers are doing far more for them than they do for themselves. Tell them, too, to pray that these dear women may live long enough to enjoy some of the prosperity they have won for their children—for mine didn't."—Youth's Companion.

GRUMBLING JIM.

BY A. M. BICKY.

He sat at the dinner table.
With a discontented frown;
The potatoes and steak were underdone,
And the bread was baked too brown;
The pie too sour, the pudding too sweet,
And the roast was much too fat;
The soup so greasy, too, and salt;
Sure, 'twas hardly fit for a cat.

"I wish you could eat the bread and pies
I've seen my mother make;
They are something like, and 'twould do you good
Just to look at a loaf of her cake."
Said the smiling wife, "I'll improve with age,
Just now I'm but a beginner;
But your mother has come to visit,
And to-day she cooked the dinner."

"Ye Have Need of Patience."

TO PARENTS.

Have patience with—
The questions of childhood.

Here is a child to whose recently opened eyes and active senses a world is exposed, but not one of the manifold wonders before it can it understand. Education must, therefore, guide and explain observation. This begins very early: long, indeed, before the first efforts at speech. The aimless thrusting out of a limb, by contact with some external object, excites a double sensation; that of muscular action, and that of the external object; and the two, in future, suggest one another. The lips and tongue may be said to be the first inlets of knowledge, in that they are the first vehicles of sensation. As it is natural for a child to carry all objects, of which it wishes to form a judgment, to its mouth, it in this way receives impressions not otherwise open to it. The great limitations of its knowledge, at this time, may be inferred from the fact that it is very long before it can locate the sensation of pain. If a pin gets askew and pricks the delicate skin, it makes no attempt to cry out. Through such considerations as these we may understand the mental position of the child, as it develops, in regard to external nature. With the gift of speech, the urgent desire for knowledge breaks into verbal expression. Happy is that mother who, appreciating her mission as the one divinely commissioned to guide this little one, sees in the eager questioning nothing but a desire that urges the child on in spite of himself. It is a healthful impulse, but one that can be checked by petulance, irritability, and indifference.

Have patience, then, with—
The noise of children.

It is unreasonable to expect children to cease importunate questioning; it is quite as much, if not more so, to ask them to keep their restless bodies quiet. Development and growth come through exercise. Muscles to grow must, therefore, be used, and the stimulus to this is constant. In the same manner are the lungs developed, and a due rate of chest expansion preserved. The noise attendant upon this process is at times discordant, and grates upon the nerves; but it is a conservative process, and within judicious limits should not be interfered with.—Babyhood.

However opinions may differ as to what constitutes a woman's "sphere," it is generally admitted that it is her province to give the key-note in social matters. We hail it as a good omen that at afternoon teas, and similar gatherings, it is customary to redeem the time from mere social gossip by introducing readings, music, and even some branch of study. It is reported that Mrs. Harrison, and other women occupying high positions in Washington society, will make an effort, the coming winter, to substitute—to a certain extent—discussions on literary topics, readings from popular authors, etc., in place of merely fashionable dinners and balls. If the Christian womanhood of this nation can shape and control social life, it will be far more influential for good than it could be with the power of the ballot in its hands.—Congregationalist.

The World's Supply of Fuel.

At the present rate of consumption the known anthracite of America will be exhausted within a few decades, the known bituminous coal fields of the carboniferous within a few centuries, and the vast bituminous coal beds of the Cretaceous in the Rocky Mountain region within a millennium or two; and since the rate of consumption is ever increasing, the entire available stock of fixed carbons in this and other explored countries must melt away within a few centuries. Some coal fields in this and other countries unquestionably remain to be discovered; magnificent possibilities lie within the little-explored areas of South America, Africa, and Asia; but the surface and sediments of the earth have been examined so thoroughly as to prove that the final exhaustion of the coals can not be far off. To the geologist, who regards each coal-forming period as an epoch, the immeasurably shorter period of coal consumption is but a fleeting episode in the history of the earth—an episode so brief as to require multiplication by millions in order to be made commensurable with the terms of geochrony. With the growth of population and the ever-increasing control of natural forces by human intelligence, food sources multiply, while the sources of mineral fuel remain unrenewed; and were there no other fuel source than the fixed carbons of the coal seams and lignite beds, the prospect for the future would be gloomy indeed. But while the stock of fixed carbons is so limited that its exhaustion is becoming a serious menace, the stock of bitumens in the rocks of the earth is practically unlimited. It is true that gas and oil are but sparsely disseminated through the strata; it is true that under existing commercial conditions they can be successfully exploited only where accumulated in exceptional volume; but, despite the extravagant waste of gas accompanying the process, oil was economically extracted before the great natural reservoirs were discovered, and with the increasing values following exhaustion of these reservoirs, the limits to improvement in methods of extraction and to material extractable are indefinitely remote. The rocks are as inexhaustible a source of hydrocarbons as the soil is of carbohydrates, and other suitable stimuli bountiful nature will probably give forth the one as lavishly as the other. Rock gas and related bitumens are the fuels and illuminants of the future; upon them, in conjunction with the foods extracted from the soil and the waters, we must depend for the energy by which the wheels of future progress will be kept in motion. —The Forum.

OCEAN DEPTHS.—How deep is the ocean? This is a question often asked. It is answered by the following statistics, given by a recent scientific observer: The greatest known depth of the sea is in the South Atlantic Ocean, midway between the island of Tristan d'Acunha and the mouth of the Rio de la Plata. The bottom was there reached at a depth of 40,236 feet, or eight and three-quarter miles, exceeding, by more than 10,000 feet, the height of Mount Everest, the loftiest mountain in the world. In the North Atlantic Ocean, south of Newfoundland, soundings have been made to a depth of 4,580 fathoms, or 27,480 feet, while depths equaling 34,000 feet, or six and a half miles, are reported south of the Bermuda Islands. The average depth of the Pacific Ocean between Japan and California is a little over 2,000 fathoms; between Chili and the Sandwich Islands, 2,500 fathoms; and between Chili and New Zealand, 1,500 fathoms. The average depth of all the oceans is from 2,000 to 2,500 fathoms.

That which makes hell so full of horrors is that it is below all our hopes; and that which makes heaven so full of splendor is that it is above all our fears. The one is a night without the return of day; the other is a day free from the approach of night.—Secker.

HOKE—MATTIE DUHERRY HOKE was born at Water Valley, Miss., March 25, 1873; professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, May, 1886; died October 21, 1889.

Miss Mattie was a girl of fine intellect, and was in the senior class in our city school. Her school and classmates loved her, and she was one of the leading spirits among them. Her home life, as I have gathered it, was beautiful. She was a faithful and affectionate daughter, tender and loving sister. There was much sunshine in her life, and she freely imparted it to others. She manifested, during her sickness of three weeks, great faith in Christ and the utmost confidence in prayer. The closing scene was remarkable. She fervently prayed for God to forgive all her sins from childhood, and expressed some desire to shout as her mother had shouted. Said that she was young to leave earth, but was willing, if it was God's will to take her. When reminded by one present what had been taught her in a moral way—to be honest and upright—she replied that she believed her "mamma," who had instructed her in the doctrines of experimental religion. When the darkness of physical death came upon her she asked for the lamp to be raised higher; then, with seeming joy, spoke of the beautiful light and folded her arms across her face, (her accustomed way of going to sleep) and left this world. Her fond parents and kind brothers and sisters are truly bereaved. God bless them and help them all to be consistent, active Christians and finally all get to heaven. J. M. WYATT.

SMITHHART—MARTHA ALLEN, daughter of J. H. and T. C. Stafford—born in Warren county, Miss., July 6, 1818; married to S. D. Smithhart, November 15, 1864—died August 29, 1889, at the residence of her son-in-law, M. P. Kemley, near Sunnyside, Ark., after several days of extreme suffering, ending suddenly in congestion of the lungs. She rejoiced in her religion, having been a member of the Baptist Church for years.

So "the silver cord is loosed, the golden bowl is broken," and the spirit of our dear sister has flown where hands—her children's hands—have beckoned her within the pearly gates, in her turn to wait. Brave and true, kind and generous, she has passed from life's checkered path, leaving a bereaved husband, an only daughter, an aged father, a beloved sister, two brothers and a host of friends still "pressing on."

—A TRUE FRIEND.

BEASLEY—Departed this life, November 14, 1889, after a painful illness of six years' duration, Bro. JOHN N. BEASLEY. Bro. Beasley united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1855, and lived a consistent Christian until he was called to his better home. His last words were "Going to rest forever. The ship is in sight and nearing the port. Good night to this suffering body."

Bro. Beasley leaves a wife (to whom he was married in 1853), two sons and one daughter to mourn his loss. I have known Bro. Beasley about three years as a patient sufferer, always trusting in the Lord. God help us to meet him in heaven! HIS PASTOR.

MOORE—On November 10, 1889, the summons of death came and plucked out of the little family circle of Bro. N. C. and Sister A. A. Moore, their eldest daughter, aged ten years and five days. She was called by one sweet name, and that was MATTIE. She was sick about fifty days with typhoid fever. The writer visited her, and can say she was not heard to complain. Mattie told her mamma the day she began to feel unwell that she was going to be sick, and that it would result in death. As she was sinking she would beg for the little infant babe of the family to be placed by her, and she would kiss it and give all who were present to understand, as God loves little children, so ought we. Mattie was heard, when playing with her little sister, singing that sweet hymn, "Precious Jewels," and as her schoolmates stood around the corpse and sang that beautiful hymn they were made to weep, knowing that little Mattie's voice was hushed in their little hand.

Sing on, little children, and live right. Mattie will join you in the hand around the throne of God. Papa and mamma, little sisters, grandmamma and uncles and aunt, I know you feel lonely without little Mattie's presence; but the struggle of temporal death is over with her. God had a greater mission for her to fill, and as our work is not finished let us live so that we may meet Mattie in that sweet by-and-by. L. J. JONES.

KLEIN—On the afternoon of November 13, very unexpectedly to her family and friends, the spirit of Mrs. MARY T. KLEIN was summoned to join the assembly of the sainted ones in heaven. Therefore we, as members of the Woman's Missionary Society, Vicksburg Auxiliary, wish to express, in some slight degree, the sadness that fills our hearts at the loss of so valued a co-worker.

Resolved, That in the death of our sister, this society has been bereft of one of its most efficient officers (vice-president at the time of her decease, and for many years previously its honored president.) Her habitual attendance at the monthly meetings was a test of her love and devotion to missionary enterprises, and her heart and means were ever ready to respond cheerfully to any call in the interest of this work.

Resolved, That the church where she worshiped for so many long years has been deprived of one of its most consecrated members. The ministers of the gospel have lost a true helper and adviser, and to them specially was tendered the generous hospitality of her delightful home.

Resolved, That her family, so sadly bereaved, has the sympathy and prayers of every member of this society, and may this seemingly dark providence work for good to them! May it be another voice from the spirit realm calling them and us "away to the better land!"

LEA—Mrs. MARY G. LEA (nee Kinchen) departed this life March 3, 1889, in the triumphs of a faith which is born of perfect love—a blessing she professed to enjoy for many years. She was born, raised, married, converted, and died at the great age of eighty-three years, in the same parish—St. Helena, La. She was left a widow in 1853, and had many hard struggles against the cold winds of adversity, yet she ever kept the fire burning on the family altar. She leaves two sons and three lovely daughters in the vale of tears. Much more could be said of my dear aunt, who was next to our precious mother in the affections of five motherless children, who ever sought her counsel and sympathy in times of trouble. Often has the anxious request gone up: "Aunt Polly, pray for me." All knew her prayers were available. She is sleeping until the resurrection near the spot where sixty-three years ago she became a happy bride.

MARY E. KING.

CORDILL—STEPHEN H. CORDILL, Jr., was born near Como, La., November 25, 1886, and died of congestion September 28, 1889.

Little Stevie, as he was familiarly called, was the youngest of the family, and the center of attraction and affection. His Christian mother preceded him about two years, and this tender bud quickly yielded to the cold touch of death. His brothers were gone to Jefferson College, Mississippi, and his sisters, Irma and Allie, left the week of his death for Salem College, North Carolina. A sad and scattered family! Father at home, brothers and sisters away at school, and mamma and baby in Heaven! Sad ones, you may all meet again where death and separations are unknown.

H. ARMSTRONG.

FLANAGAN—Mrs. LUCY M. FLANAGAN was born July 13, 1864; was married to J. T. Flanagan, December 23, 1884, by Rev. H. E. Smith. She joined the Methodist Church in Greenwood, Miss., in May, 1886, under the ministry of the writer. She passed away December 18, 1889, leaving two children—one an infant and the other not quite two years old.

She was a kind mother, a devoted wife and a trusted friend. She possessed a good judgment, and her home was always a model of neatness and comfort. Sister Flanagan was one of the best women I ever knew. To her grief-stricken husband and motherless children we offer our tenderest sympathies and promise our earnest prayers. T. W. LEWIS.

GRISOM—THOMAS R. GRISOM was born March 19, 1856; died June 30, 1889. His death was the result of malarial fever. He suffered very much, but seemed to bear it with much patience. He made a profession of religion on his bed of sickness, joined the church and took communion, and expressed himself as being ready to die if God willed it so. He leaves a devoted wife and four lovely children. May God bless the widow and children, and may they meet, an unbroken family, in heaven! Is the prayer of their friend and pastor, J. J. LOVETT.

Thousands of people have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla a positive cure for rheumatism. This medicine, by its purifying action, neutralizes the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and also builds up and strengthens the whole body. Give it a trial.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites Of Lime and Soda.

There are emulsions and emulsions, and there is still much skimmed milk which masquerades as cream. Try as they will many manufacturers cannot so disguise their cod liver oil as to make it palatable to sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion of PURE NORWEGIAN COD LIVER OIL, combined with Hypophosphites is almost as palatable as milk. For this reason as well as for the fact of the stimulating qualities of the Hypophosphites, Physicians frequently prescribe it in cases of Thirty-two Russian officers have been arrested charged with being members of a secret society, the object of which is to abolish the aristocracy and establish a constitutional monarchy.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

An employee in the gun foundry of the Navy Yard in Washington has been dismissed because it was learned that he assisted John Wilkes Booth to escape after the assassination of President Lincoln.

An engineer in South Carolina claims to have perfected a method of preparing okra fibre at a cost of no more than a cent a pound, for use as a substitute for jute, ramie and even cotton.

Several prominent men are unlikely to take their seats again in Congress. Judge Kelley, the veteran of the House, is thought to be dying of cancer, and it is hardly possible that Mr. Randall can ever take an active part in the proceedings. The stockholders of the Pittsburg and Virginia railroad have elected Ex-Governor Fitzhugh Lee president. This line will connect the ore beds of Virginia with the furnaces of Pittsburg. It will be built at once.

A local colored post was mustered in the Grand Army of the Republic, last week. This is the first instance of the kind in the South, and it has created much dissatisfaction in white Grand Army circles.

The representatives of the sugar interests of the country appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, on January 6, and made what was probably the most favorable presentation of the arguments against the reduction of the duties on that commodity that has been made. Ex-Governor Warmoth and Mr. Dymond presented the case for Louisiana planters, while Mr. Peters, of Kansas, represented the growers of sorghum.

The printed report of the naval site commission, with the report thereon of the chief of the bureau, has been lying for several days on the table of the Secretary of the Navy.

FOREIGN.

The Spanish ministry has resigned. Senor Sagasta will attempt to form a new Cabinet on a basis that will reconcile the various liberal groups.

There is great rejoicing in Canada of those who are advocating closer trade and political relations with the United States. An out-and-out annexationist has been selected on that ticket mayor of the old conservative town of Windsor, Ont. This is the first signal victory and by many is believed to be the beginning of the end as regards the ultimate political destiny of Canada.

As Prince Bismarck continues to find the want of homogeneity in the Austrian empire, and the growing discord between its various nationalities as an obstacle of good politics, and sees how greatly these reduce the value of an Austrian alliance, it is said that he already contemplates a very radical change of base in his policy, and speculates upon a large application of the idea of races that was the basis of so many schemes and projects at the period when Alsace and Lorraine were annexed to Germany.

M. Tirard, premier and minister of commerce, has sent a circular to the chambers of commerce throughout France, asking those bodies if they would support a bill giving to women engaged in any trade the right to vote at elections for judges of commercial tribunals.

The latest phase of the Boulangist conspiracy is consequently that the municipal government shall control the police and Boulanger shall control the municipal government.

It is reported that Russia has sent a circular note to all the powers that signed the treaty of Berlin in regard to the violation of article 23 of the treaty by the present condition of things in Bulgaria, and particularly by the pretended sovereignty of Prince Ferdinand.

The British Queen has the rheumatism and will not be able to open Parliament in person.

TO EX-PRESIDENT JEFFERSON DAVIS.

BY MRS. MARY MITCHEL BROWN.

We mourn for thee, great chieftain,
But not as the hopeless mourn;
Thou hast won all life's guerdon—
Its love and its bitter scorn.

Hail to thy glorious triumph,
In the rest thy grave shall give!
Hail to thy resurrection,
That rapturous life to live!

No breath nor shaft of malice
Shall intrude upon the song,
Of sublimest hallelujah
From all that welcoming throng.

No tyrant "ban" can reach thee,
Thy freed spirit to repress,
"Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest."

Roam, then, in the fullest freedom
All among those golden streets,
And rest beneath the shade trees
Whene'er comrade comrade meets.

Be ours the priceless treasure
Of thy memory to keep,
With ever fresh embalming
When around thy grave we weep.

The Conference Resolutions on the Louisiana State Lottery.

BY REV. JOEL T. DAVES.

In the way of protest against this shameful public immorality, the subject can not too often, in reason, be mentioned. I do not mean in the way of simple reiteration. I want to refer to the Conference preambles and resolutions, and supplement them with an additional resolution. The paper was drawn up roughly and hurriedly in the Conference room, amidst the excitement of its closing hours, supposing that I would have time to, at least, rewrite them and make the wording legible. But this was not granted me. As they were published in the ADVOCATE, there were typographical errors—nothing, however, seriously affecting the meaning. I think the moral effect was largely destroyed in not giving all the names that were on the paper, and in its appearing as the work of a committee, attaching the mover's name as "chairman." It was not the work of a Conference committee. It was the spontaneous motion of the hour, inspired by a sense of the high grade of crime being committed by a legalized sin. The State gives it character. Its pretended charity gives it standing. The newspapers, from the great city dailies to the little hebdomadals, give a reputation with the thousands. And so, like an unclean bird of ill omen, it hangs in the light above, casting its ghastly shadows below. I suppose there is not a State in the Union that is not affected by its fatal, deathly influence. The standing and character of the two men who preside over its destinies (men whose standing and character came to them in the death-throes of a million of heroes, and who are paid enormously for their small service) gives it the appearance of fairness, such as would almost deceive an angel.

We can see something of the power of this unnamable evil in this: that, so far as heard from, but one secular newspaper has published the resolutions, and only two referred to them in a line or two. The reporter of the Times-Democrat barely mentioned the matter, and the Picayune was severely and profoundly silent. A Baton Rouge paper mentioned, editorially, the introduction of the matter to the Conference, neither endorsing or condemning.

Spending the day after Conference in New Orleans, I was saddened to see well-dressed, respectable-looking ladies and gentlemen studying the placarded boards on all prominent streets, announcing the winning, but never the losing, numbers. Without an exception, as their faces were seen, all turned away "ashamed that they had hoped." Sometimes, when in groups, a hollow sound, imitating a laugh, was heard. So delusive the horrid thing, so enchanting the monster of such hideous mien, they would turn away resolved to try it again.

As I recall the names from memory, the following seconded the paper as I presented it: Revs. John Pipes, B. F. Alexander, S. S. Keener, Beverly Carradine. Laymen: Col. T. C. Standifer, of Ruston; Dr. A. S. Helmick, of Ouachita; Benj. Rayne, of New Orleans; and Bro. Blackshear, of Opelousas. There may have been others. The resolutions were warmly received by the Conference, and, as amended in the last resolution, which amendment does not appear as published, were unanimously and strongly adopted.

I would like to add another resolution:

Resolved, That we will, as pastors, as men of God—to whose keeping and care souls are committed—preach against the Louisiana State Lottery by name, warning our people of its essentially evil spirit, as a dishonor and a reproach to our State; and that in all ways possible, private and public, seek to prevent its being rechartered, if our next General Assembly should so far forget the honor of the State and the interests of its constituents as to submit to the people such an amendment to the Constitution.

Now, Mr. President, I call for a standing vote on this resolution.

A prominent member of the General Assembly—not, so far as I know, a member of the church, or a professed Christian—said to me not long since: "Nothing but the moral and religious influence of the church in Louisiana (meaning all churches), exercised in a new and strange way, can prevent the rechartering of the Lottery."

Let the Methodist Church, and let us, as Methodist preachers, leading the church, keep our garments unspotted from the blood of souls.

LAKE CHARLES, Louisiana.

Additional Notes from the Mississippi Conference.

BY REV. J. P. DRAKE.

May I add a few pointers to your discriminating and interesting notes from the 1st to session of our Mississippi Conference?

That was, indeed, a notable "love-feast" Sunday morning. Its greatest secret of power, humanly speaking, was the remarkable brevity of all the talks. Not one that was prosy or prolix can I recall. This feature was, doubtless, due in large measure to the insistence of the leader, Bro. Norsworthy. I trust it will be a valuable lesson to us all for the future, as well as one of the sweetest reminiscences of a session unsurpassed in our annals for general pleasantness. The harmony of sentiment that marked all of the deliberations was noticeable to any experienced observer of such bodies of men. From that opening prayer of our own loved Bishop, pleading for the Spirit's presence and power, to the melting and moving thrill of our secretary's closing audience with heaven, everything seemed to move forward under the impulse of the Spirit of peace and good-will. May such "dew of Hermon" continue to distill on the hearts of the preachers, the laymen, and the kind people of Crystal Springs!

You notice casually a growth in the amounts raised for missions. You probably missed hearing the treasurer's report, which showed a very gratifying increase in this important field. For foreign missions we added nearly $1,000 to our last year's report, and about as much additional on Domestic Fund. As this is a much smaller assessment than the former, it shows a larger relative increase—in fact, our advance on this collection was greater than ever before, amounting to more than fifty-six per cent. of actual increase. This is due partly to an enlarged assessment, and partly to the noteworthy faithfulness and efficiency of our missionaries in the home field. As an illustrious example, I will give some of the work of one missionary, laboring in a field confessedly hard to cultivate. The extreme southeastern edge of our coast work is occupied by Scranton circuit. Its preacher in charge, living in his own hired house (which cost him all but $80 of what he received for his labor of love), walked up and down those "sand-bed" roads during the whole year, preaching an average of four times each week; often walking four miles and preaching three times on Sunday; holding daily service for three weeks of self-denial, and with excellent result; increasing the membership twenty-five per cent.; baptizing fourteen persons who were raised in Romanism, and paying off a church debt of $235. This would be a fine work for the most stalwart young or middle-aged man; yet it was performed by a man who has passed his eightieth birthday, and who has constantly ministered at our altars for more than fifty years. His name deserves more than a passing mention. It is Benjamin Jones, by far the oldest effective preacher we have. In the great day, when real merit is rewarded according to faithful service, his name will shine. And it is to such a man, and for such work, that a half-awakened church pays the pittance of $175. Yes, brethren, you who so freely criticise the working of our Home Mission Boards, go and take an inside view by serving one of these destitute places, and you will be convinced that carping is one thing, and finding a better way is another. We are trying to solve the problem of sending the gospel to the poor and the priest-ridden. Lend us a helping hand. The books of the secretary and treasurer are always open to intelligent inspection. For reasons that ought to be obvious to experienced workers, it is not best usually to publish beforehand how much is appropriated to each special point. In this connection let us emphasize the resolution passed by our Conference (none dissenting), that we pastors would preach two new sermons on missions early in the year, and try to have missionary collections, both foreign and domestic, in hand by the first of April. The importance of early collections can hardly be overstated. Brethren, let us stand by our resolution! And may I not suggest that one sermon should treat of the great subject of home work? The Jerusalem sinners are yet many and hard to reach.

One more note: Amendatory to the temperance report, a resolution was unanimously adopted urging our pastors to use unfermented wine on the Lord's table, "whenever and wherever procurable." This may be accomplished by any who have the will. The purest and best article of this fitting emblem of Christ's purifying blood is to be had from J. N. Stearns, New York; from C. L. White, of Meridian; from W. H. Patton, of Shubuta, and many other places, as cheap as any of the alcoholic substitutes for wine (the latter being generally devoid of grape juice) usually placed on this sacred board simply for convenience sake, or because it has been customary thus to dishonor our Lord. We are striving, and very properly, to secure the prohibition of alcoholic drinks. Here is a way open to all Christians to teach by example, and to take out of the mouth of our enemies one of the strongest arguments for the continued sale of that which poisons. This is a matter wholly within the province of the church herself, and in no wise suggesting political complications. Let us enter the open door and free ourselves from reproach.

SHUBUTA, Mississippi.

"The Preacher Himself."

Dr. Tigert is a book-maker. In the midst of a very active life he has developed a tremendous capacity for work, and his facility for authorship gives us books in such rapid succession that, like the English premier and his victories, we are compelled to watch the newspapers for fear of missing one of them. Have you read his "Preacher Himself"? It is a comprehensive book—and comprehensible. It is by no means fragmentary, disjointed, or incomplete. Its outline was, doubtless, in the author's mind before he put his pen to the paper. There is little straggling, no patchwork. The whole ground of pastoral theology, as distinct from homiletics or sermonizing, is covered thoroughly and well, and from a practical standpoint. As a preacher reads it, he will feel that the book lies close to the heart of the every-day life in which he moves. All the problems and the actual working difficulties which meet the pastor face to face, are here brought up and discussed. Not one is evaded. Yet the book is not bulky. It is condensed. It fills up exactly 200 pages, and there is very little intellectual "printer's fat" on a single page. The chapters are short, averaging about eight pages each, and the longest of them all is only twelve pages. They are arranged in a logical and progressive order, and the cohesive force between them helps the mind to move easily from one to another. The whole book is not too long for a ten days' serial reading on the center-table of a layman's home fireside, or the pommel of a circuit-rider's saddle.

Speaking of circuit riders—reminds me to say that the book here noticed is thoroughly Methodistic. This "Preacher Himself" is a Methodist preacher. Who that has read Vinet and Broadus has not felt that, with all their excellence, they lack a certain adaptability to our Methodist forms of thought and ways of doing? No treatise on pastoral theology, written from the standpoint of a permanent pastorate, can cover the unique conditions of the itinerant's work. But here we have a book written by an itinerant who has moved much among that peculiar people called Methodists, and who has evidently kept open eyes and busy brain while he moved.

"The Preacher Himself" will interest and profit others besides preachers. Such chapters as those on Preparation and Worldly Amusements will take hold on any conscientious layman who will read them. Chapter XVIII. on Church Literature I believe it would repay the Publishing House to republish in separate form and scatter broadcast as a free tract. W. R. S.

Some Random Thoughts on Rev. Sam Jones.

The eminent revivalist, Rev. Sam Jones, is upon the scene. Saint and sinner catch their castigations with impartial severity, and each can laugh at the other, as the merciless drollery wears both to frazzles. Sometimes he sends a thunderbolt, then he brains one with a joke; but, out of the inexhaustible armory, you are sure that some weapon will wound. Think as we may, curse or praise him, if you hear him, you will both weep and laugh, if you are susceptible of any true "touch of nature." He is as good as a moral prophylactic to the atrabilious, and will compel tears to eyes, albeit unused to the melting mood. This man has a patent right on humor, a monopoly on winning souls with wit. He has an indivertible self-direction, ranges in his own inimitable orbit, possesses an irrepressible bent of individuality. He alone knows the "open sesame" to the prodigality of his wealth of the rare stores, sui generis. He has some feeble imitators. They are trying to find and appropriate his "true inwardness." But their efforts are vain. They can not snatch his wand; nor could they conjure with it had they it. Their mumblings of feeble imitation are but as faint stage-thunder to the grand pulses of thunder that shake the sky, and make earth and air loud with sublime reverberation. He is a paragon of oddity, a prodigy of the grotesque; but he has the attractiveness of all great prodigies, and fascinations of enthralling or beneficent originality. This man owes nothing to physical mien or voice to give him prestige. It is the prerogative of genius to compel homage, regardless of these. He is not

"Barbaric pearl and gold,"

"In shape and gesture proudly eminent;
Not his
The Atlantean shoulders."

Nevertheless, he has the light and airy potency of Ariel, and begirts that microcosm, an audience, in "less than forty minutes," with the girdle of his spell, fettering them in the enraptured bondage of chequered fascination. He is a man of intense egotism, in the strict sense of the word; but he never wounds anyone's amour propre. His self-allusions are of a charming, inoffensive type, and are as ingratiating as the prattle about self of a bright, innocent child. There are no assumptions that challenge bitter criticism; and it seems a guileless self-assertion and an ingenuous self-laudation, that makes one smile in a sort of self-complacent condescension. He is prone to laconicisms, and his sentiments take often an apothegmatic shape in tingling epigrammaticism. His fund of funny illustrations and anecdotes are inexhaustible; and no one ever feels a sense of tire.

Sam Jones never lets a crowd hoss him. He is pre-eminently commanding, and has the instincts of leadership, as a lion the self-assertions of supremacy. He reasons by illustration (and most forcibly, too) rather than by the formulas of argumentation. Indeed, the illustration is stronger than would be a syllogism. He seems to know nothing about the apparatus, and all about the life, essence and spirit of dialectics. As light illustrates the sun, so his similes illustrate his thought; they are, so to speak, the light of reason. As a dialectician, he has the litheness and agility, without the contortions, of the acrobat; the feats of the gymnast without his exertions; and he does some of the most surprising "ground and lofty tumbling" with all the freedom and friskiness of prodigal animal spirits, and of inexhaustible resource. He disports con amore, and whips and churns the sea of humor into thunderous waves and surging billows, as leviathans sporting in the ocean, and makes a plaything of the mighty deep.

"Lies floating many a rood,"

Reader, go and hear him. You will either laugh or cry—most likely both; and either or both will do you good. If you fail to see him, you will not only miss a sensation, but a great spectacle.

In Memoriam.

REV. DAVID WASHINGTON DILLEHAY.

BY REV. J. S. PARKER.

Rev. David Washington Dillehay was born near Reynoldsburg, Humphreys county, Tenn., September 26, 1813. He was blessed with pious parents. His father was an active, zealous member of, and a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church. When young Dillehay was about eight years old, his father's home became one of the preaching-places of the Rev. B. M. Drake, of precious memory. He was consecrated to God in holy baptism in his infancy, and very early in life became seriously impressed on the subject of religion. His paternal ancestors were from France, and settled in Virginia in the early history of the State. His grandfather being a Huguenot in France, he soon identified himself with the Methodist Church, then in its infancy in Virginia.

Just before Bro. Dillehay was nineteen years old, he left his father's Christian home, and went to Louisville, Ky., where he studied artistic painting under the celebrated artist, Mr. Cooper. While he was there he attended a meeting conducted by the Rev. John Newland Maffitt. Under the eloquent and soul-moving sermons of that great man of God, he was happily converted in the fall of 1832. He never, for a moment, doubted the soundness of his conversion. He soon joined the Methodist Church on probation, and was a regular attendant on all the services of the church. But his highest spiritual enjoyment came to his soul while engaged in class-meeting exercises.

January 14, 1836, he was married to Miss Rebecca Cox, of Philadelphia, Pa. She was, indeed, a devoted and faithful wife through all the varying vicissitudes of a life of over fifty years.

In the year 1841, while living in Vicksburg, Miss., he was received into full connection in the Methodist Episcopal Church under the ministry of Rev. Preston Cooper.

About the year 1849 he was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of Vicksburg station. His soul glowed and burned with an intense desire for the salvation of souls, and for the advancement of the Master's kingdom.

In the winter of 1853 he was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference. His first appointment was Pinkneyville circuit, 1854. Homochitto mission, 1855; Black Hawk, 1856 and 1857; Wilkinson circuit, 1858 and 1859; Pearl river, 1860 and 1861; Amite circuit, 1862; Monticello, 1863; Arcola, 1864. He sustained the supernumerary relation in 1865, and lived in New Orleans. He preached regularly during this year at Algiers and Gretna. Greensburg, La., 1866 and 1867; Pauiding, 1868 and 1869; Fannin, 1870; Madisonville, 1871; Dover, 1872, 1873 and 1874; Spring Ridge, 1875; Mt. Carmel, 1876. At the close of this year's work his health gave way, and he was compelled to ask for a superannuated relation. For more than ten years he was in feeble health, and was, therefore, never able to return to the active work. But wherever he lived, his holy, consecrated Christian life was a bright benediction to all who came in contact with him. There was something in the life and character of this good man that the mind delighted to contemplate. His virtues erected to his memory a monument in the hearts and memories of his fellow-beings which the finger of time can scarcely obliterate. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Early, November 12, 1854, at Jackson, La.; and elder by Bishop Paine, at Woodville, Miss., December 12, 1858.

Through these years he was a popular and useful traveling preacher. He possessed a useful order of talent, and was characterized by more than ordinary ability in preaching, great zeal, and uncommon success in winning souls to Christ. He was a man of right principles, ardent piety, and generous to a fault. Untiring in labors, amiable in temper, sociable in spirit, and affable in his manners, he was beloved by his ministerial brethren, respected and esteemed by the whole church.

Bro. Dillehay was one of the best men I ever knew, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. His consecration was thorough and uniform, and his conduct without reproach. He was remarkable for his modesty, and always kind and sweet-spirited toward his brethren. He was a devoted husband, and a fond and loving parent.

For some weeks before his death his mind was almost gone; but still he was the same gentle, patient saint he had been in health. His mind was always clear upon religion and heaven. He said to me a short time before his death: "I will soon be resting on the other side of the river. I long to be at rest in heaven."

During the early hours of Sunday morning, December 29, 1889, he became very quiet, and a peaceful expression came over his face; and with his right hand uplifted, and the whisperings of prayer from his lips, he fell sweetly asleep in Jesus, to awake in his likeness forever in heaven.

David W. Dillehay, "after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers."

"The voice at midnight came;
He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame;
He fell—but felt no fear."

Attention, Mississippi Methodists!

THE NEW COLLEGE.

Bro. Millsaps having indicated his willingness to pay one-half of his subscription—$25,000—whenever we have that amount in the treasury, "the powers that be" have resolved to raise that sum, and thus have $50,000 in actual cash before considering the question of location. This being the case, the time of the opening of the college depends upon the action of its friends. Tardiness upon the part of contributors will postpone the opening until October, 1891. Such a postponement would be little short of a calamity. By all means let the college open next fall. This can be done if the $25,000 is raised by the first of March. Delay of location beyond that date will make it impossible to complete the buildings in time. Will not the friends of the college, therefore, come to the rescue? Are there not many subscribers who by a little self-sacrifice can pay not only the first, but also the second instalment? We have no right to make a demand of this sort; but would it not be wise to do so voluntarily? And those who have not yet paid the first instalment should by all means do so at once. Methodists of Mississippi, let us see to it that the college is located by the first of March and opened next October. We can do it if we will. Surely, seventy-five thousand of us ought not to balk with a load which one man is willing to carry. Brethren, send in your shekels by the first mail.

Though conscience weigh us down and tell us God is angry, yet God is greater than our heart. The conscience is but one drop; the reconciled God is an ocean of consolation.—Luther.

MOTHERS' PRAYERS.

When life's daily rounds are ended,
And tasks are turned down low,
What a host of faithful mothers
In quiet chambers go!
Up to the throne on wings of prayer
Their children's many needs to bear.

Young mothers kneel with thankful hearts
Beside the cradle-beds,
Their loving hands they lightly place
On little golden heads,
And ask the Shepherd Good to keep
The wee, weak lambs who sweetly sleep.

Mothers with anxious faces pray
For children older grown,
So full of evil is the world—
Its ways to them unknown—
Young, hasty feet are apt to stray,
Unheeding, in forbidden way.

And saintly mothers—silvery haired,
Whose work is almost done—
Pray for the children in the strife,
Whose toils have been begun,
That they may find God's strength and grace
Sufficient for each time and place.

And there are some—God pity them!—
Mothers, with anxious fears,
Who plead with God for wandering ones
In loneliness and tears;
Though far from home and tempest-tossed,
The mother's faith must save the lost.

For faithful mothers, O thank God;
And holy chambers, where
The children's cause is nightly laid
Before the Lord in prayer;
He only knows the blessing brought,
And wondrous things those prayers have wrought.

Mississippi Conference Reports.

PUBLISHING INTERESTS.

Your committee, to whom were referred the publishing interests, respectfully beg leave to make the following report:

It is very gratifying to know that the various interests which have been reported to us have been greatly blessed of God. They have shared the very liberal patronage of the people.

The Publishing House has passed over its days of doubts and trial, and has become an assured success, sending out its books and periodicals by the thousands, and is, at last, furnishing a dividend for the support of superannuated preachers and their widows and orphans.

The Nashville Christian Advocate is increasing its subscriptions, and meeting with enlarged and widespread favor as the general organ of the church, and as one of the best religious family papers. It should be in every home in our church. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has made gratifying advance during this year—2,200 new subscribers having been added to its list, of which number 1,148 are from our own Conference. The number of subscribers is 7,000. Every preacher and subscriber should use double diligence to make it 10,000, in order to secure the gift offered by its munificent publisher, J. G. Grant, for the superannuated preachers of the patronizing Conferences. A large sum of arrearage is now shown by its business manager. That sum in this Conference alone being $2,500, demonstrates the fact that it is not wise to extend so much indulgence to subscribers. We would urge the use of the cash plan. For the sake of satisfying subscribers (when mistakes are made, as is often the case, and to prevent loss of confidence in the preachers, for a time, at least, until they are corrected), we would respectfully ask the publisher to publish the receipts of money and the names of subscribers sending it, as they are received.

The Quarterly Review is a periodical that is in every way first class, and deserves larger appreciation of its merits than it now has.

The Sunday-school literature is commendable in everything that makes it worthy of the confidence of the church. Its widespread popularity is evidenced from the fact that its periodicals are about 1,000,000 annually, with increasing demands.

As preachers, we feel pledged to continue devotion and earnest support to all these interests, and herein write and express our gratitude to our heavenly Father for the abundance of his blessing and power during the past year.

Your committee recommend that Revs. W. B. Lewis, W. C. Black and R. J. Jones be appointed as members of the Publishing Committee.

Respectfully submitted.

J. W. ELLISON, Chairman.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

BRETHREN: Your Committee on Sabbath Observance beg leave to report as follows:

We see with regret the tendency of our people to disregard the law of the Sabbath, and to desecrate the day given to man for spiritual exercise and physical rest. Instead of a day of rest and worship, which God intended it should be, many have made it a day of secular pleasure, feasting and business. We deprecate the widespread desecration of the Sabbath by the railroads, and the United States government itself in its mail service, which deprives thousands of our people of their needed rest and the privilege of the house of God. And we see no necessity for this, believing it is done simply for the love of money and to gratify a senseless demand for pleasure. As we conceive that the sanctity of the Sabbath is necessary to the maintenance of our liberty and Christian civilization, so we believe that the maintenance of this institution must devolve on the church. Mr. Pitcairn, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Central railroad, in an address before the National Young Men's Christian Association, said: "You churchmen do more than anyone else to keep up Sunday trains. If you will all oppose it, and go about it the right way, the wheels will all stop. If you will go to my office with me, I will show you letters from ministers, church committees, camp meetings and seaside churches, asking for Sunday excursions and special rates, that will keep you reading for a day." Since it depends on the preachers, as leaders of the people, to educate their consciences on this, as on all moral questions, we recommend the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we, as ministers, will preach on this subject, expounding and enforcing the law of the Sabbath as laid down in the Bible.

Resolved, That we will encourage our people to such observance by example, as well as by precept, by more carefully refraining from all ordinary work or secular business, and from receiving our mails on the Lord's day.

Resolved, That we will not travel on Sunday, either by private or public conveyance, except in cases of necessity.

Resolved, That we commend the efforts of the Sunday Rest League in trying to secure a legal day of rest for the thousands of railroad employees and others who are now deprived of this gift of God, and extend our hearty wishes for success to our brethren of Louisiana, who are struggling to maintain the same God-given privilege.

M. L. BURTON, for Com.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

It is a matter of profound gratification, and calls for increasing and devout thankfulness, that so much has been accomplished in the interests of temperance throughout the borders of our Conference during the past decade. Indeed, it is doubtful, if any movement in the same length of time ever grew so rapidly in popular favor, and enlisted such an army of ardent and determined supporters as the crusade against the evils of intemperance. It is not saying too much, when we claim that the success of modern methods for promoting temperance has been, in a great measure, due to the conservative, yet aggressive, attitude which our church has always occupied in reference to this great question. Much has been done, yet a vast deal more remains to be accomplished. We can not afford to relax our efforts. The giant evil still confronts us. It still spreads its exterminating lava over the whole surface of society, killing the body, destroying the soul, and leaving no one redeeming or even palliating trace behind it. It stands as the unrivaled enemy to the public health, the great destroyer of the public peace, and the most dangerous of all foes to the public morals. In addition to its being a great crime in itself, it is either the parent and source, or the most powerful auxiliary, of almost every other crime that exists. As a church, we must be pronounced on this subject. We must give forth no uncertain sound. While we will not undervalue the powerful and benign agencies of prospective measures of education, moral training, religious instruction and other aids of this description, we must insist that present checks shall be applied. We recognize the propriety of preserving the public morals by the institution of our courts of law—by the suppression of gambling houses, the prevention of prize-fights, and the apprehension and punishment of thieves. If then drunkenness be equally injurious to the public weal, we must insist that it should be subjected to legislative control. Prohibition is the only system that takes into account all the facts of the question. It is the only system that embraces the full duty of the State to the citizen. It is the only system that can succeed, because it is the only one that aims to eradicate the appetite for strong drink by removing the temptation, and the facilities for its constant indulgence.

Notwithstanding the fact that intemperance is backed by the two most powerful lusts of man—the love of liquor in the drinker and the love of money in the seller—and though it is in league with all the allied forces of hell, a great and mighty people have risen up in their majesty and power and declared that they will not down until this giant of evils be forever banished from our shores. God knows that no work is so imperatively demanded, or so full of promise to our country as this. May he speed the day when our State and country shall be free from the blighting, withering curse of intemperance!

L. T. FITZHUGH, Chairman.

Resolved, That we recommend all our pastors to use unfermented wine on the Lord's table, whenever and wherever it can be procured.

J. P. DRAKE,
N. B. HARMON,
W. C. BLACK.

STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Your committee respectfully report as follows:

The spiritual condition of the church is very hopeful and encouraging. We rejoice in the numerical increase and the signs of spiritual growth. The church is alive to the importance of a personal experience of the power of the Son of God. Revivals have been extensive and gratifying. Two thousand and seven hundred and eighty-eight (2,788) members have been added to the church, making a total of 36,205 members within our bounds. Our people are growing in the grace of liberality, understanding that love for Christ breaks the alabaster box and brings sweet spices to anoint his body. There is less card-playing, dancing and dram-drinking by the members of the church than formerly. It is a burning shame that any member should so forget his vows as to encourage by his example, presence or conversation any of the popular evils of the day, such as card-playing, wine parties, theatre-going, dancing, purchasing lottery tickets, and violating the Holy Sabbath; all these evils are inimical to the law and spirit of Methodism. We regret to say that in many places our members patronize the Louisiana Lottery gambling organization. We agree that one must have a very low conception of his relation to Christ to encourage any of these evils. Knowing the fearful corrupting influence of the Louisiana Lottery, we offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we condemn in unqualified terms that abominable iniquity—known as the Louisiana Lottery, and pledge our hearty moral support to the good people of our sister State in their efforts to rid themselves of that blot upon their Statehood, and that curse upon the whole country.

Resolved, That we condemn all traffic in lottery tickets, and insist upon the administration of the Discipline whenever any member of the church deals in them.

I. W. COOPER, Chairman.

MEMORIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

1. To promulgate a colportage system, by which the publications of our Publishing House may be more generally circulated.

2. That it may be made the duty of the Book Agent to append to the book of discipline the decisions of the college of Bishops, which have been made and may hereafter be made.

3. To so change the law pertaining to the collections on Children's Day, that churches and schools in which collections are taken be allowed to retain fifty per cent. of the collections for the benefit of their Sunday-school libraries.

4. To formulate a plan for employing such godly women as may be approved to fill the office of deaconess in the church.

5. To make an ample provision for the publication of cheap penny pamphlet literature for the better instruction of our people on the various interests of the church.

Report of Woman's Department of Church Extension.

[Ordered Published by Vote of Conference.]

We appreciate the value of this great work you have placed in our care, and we have endeavored to do all we could for its advancement. The discouragements and hindrances incident to all new enterprises have been encountered. We consider that we have cause for praising the Lord for what has been accomplished. For in our garnering we find fruitage which gives evidence that our merciful heavenly Father caused the tiny seedlings sown here and there to grow, which bid fair to blossom yet more brightly.

We trust that we have not fallen below your expectations. This movement is not fully understood by our people, and being in its formative state is not complete, and what we hope to have it. Meeting, as it does, the present exigencies of our church, as a great pioneering agency it commends itself, and needs to be presented earnestly and persistently to our appreciative people, to be accepted as supplying a felt want, not only in establishing and sustaining all extended labors, but as a training-school for the church. Our Visiting Committee is of great benefit to the individual members, as well as valuable aid to our pastors. Who has not found a cordial for a heavy heart, by going to visit one in affliction and trouble? Let us begin the training that will serve as stepping-stones to our great training-school soon to be established in Kansas City. Our children must crawl before they walk.

Our Home Builders' work is touching the hearts of our people, which has resulted in some organizations, besides work by the children in connection with adult societies. This puts in practice the elementary Christian training of the home, adorns and beautifies the character, and develops the missionary spirit, which rests in the heart, and needs to be guided and trained. What beautiful Christianity we find in a cultivated child! The holy innocence, child-faith and artless simplicity will surely touch the heart of the most obdurate. Simple, child-like faith and straightforward obedience are surely the guide-posts and vehicles of the straight and narrow way that leadeth to life everlasting.

Place the Bible and the hymn book in the hands of the children of our church, and what splendid evangels for reaching the heart and lifting fallen humanity and pointing them heavenward! "The Word of God is powerful in converting the soul," and no music equals that of the human voice—none more potent for good. Let them place beautiful flowers—nature's ministers—in the hands of the living, that dead souls may be resurrected, rather than wait to wreathe garlands for those whose spirits have gone to the God who gave them. Teach them to ask our heavenly Father, in their own simple way, for blessings. We rejoice that the day has come when God's children are more child-like. "A little child shall lead them." We recall to mind an instance of the father's being induced to begin family worship by one of our little Home Builders, who was appointed Bible-reader for the quarter.

About eight thousand, one hundred and fifty-four leaflets have wended their way into homes, accompanied with earnest, pressing appeals by letter to individuals and societies.

Responsive to our efforts, thirty-nine societies have been organized, reporting five hundred and fifty-nine members, of which number there are eighty-two in Vicksburg. A good sister writes: "If all our preachers were as earnest in this as is our good pastor hero, there would be greater success."

We consider our financial report encouraging. We have withheld from appealing too strongly for money, and using doubtful means to obtain it, preferring the rather to press organizations, educate and arouse interest, feeling confident the money will be forthcoming.

We are told that our labors have awakened an interest in parsonage building, etc, hitherto unknown. We regret that we did not obtain reports of the needs of the districts in time to compare them with those of the first year of our work. Many new parsonages have been built, old ones renovated, new furniture added, and charges without parsonages are anxious to build. We find one charge claims precedence, which has asked for help. We hope to give aid. We presented the claims of our "Coast" country, and appealed for help. The General Board of Church Extension very kindly responded, granting a donation of three hundred dollars. We obtained permission of the Conference Board of Church Extension for the retention of the fifty per cent. of regular fund, due the Conference by those auxiliaries engaged in building parsonages. As evidence of the true missionary spirit of our people, one hundred and thirty dollars and twenty-one cents was donated to the building of the district parsonage in Carpenteria, California, and twenty-six dollars and ninety-five cents for parsonage at Anadarko, I. T., now occupied by Rev. J. J. Methvin.

Many see and regret the loss sustained by not inaugurating this work years ago. Churches and parsonages are object-lessons which indicate our appreciation of our religion.

Our Preachers' Wives' Loan Fund is worthy of notice. Contributions have been made to this fund, besides the twenty-three life-patrons.

Some strong and active local societies have adopted the connectional work. Our societies report five hundred and ninety-two dollars and ninety-three cents for local work, and one hundred and thirty-seven persons added to Sabbath-schools gives evidence of the benefit of this enterprise to the local work of the pastorate.

The Shunammite woman made a "little chamber" and furnished it. Then let us not retrograde in this advanced age, and say there is "no room for him in the inn."

The General Board of Church Extension at its session in March, 1889, advised each Conference secretary to organize and hold annual meetings. After consulting some of our ministers and the women of our societies, we decided to wait until after the session of the Annual Conference. We are urged now, and hope to hold a meeting at as early a day as is practicable.

We have endeavored, through our societies, to promote spirituality, and have urged our members to be missionaries at home—"to go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in," knowing that there are those in and near homes who are in worse condition than the heathen of the far off-land.

From the Work.

NATCHEZ, MISS.

What a pleasure for a preacher to go home and go to work where his labors terminated with the last Conference year! No packing up, no anxiety about the weather, no worry over the cost of the move, and the kind of reception he is to have among strangers. To return to the same work and to a people with whom he is already acquainted, and whom he loves, and who loves him, and whose kindness and appreciation is always manifesting itself, especially at the Christmas season, in the shape of fat turkeys, and pig hams, and large waiters full of the most luscious fruits and cakes and other delicacies—this is grateful to the pastor, and an inspiration to more earnest labor, and better. Surely he ought to be moved to bring forth out of his treasury things new and old, to their edification and comfort. The latter, the comforting office of the preacher, is especially needed at this time in Jefferson Street Church, Natchez.

Just before Conference we buried one of our most useful and brightest young men, Bro. A. B. Swayze. He had been a faithful and efficient steward, and was elected at last Quarterly Conference secretary of the Board. His was a most lovely Christian character, singularly pure and free from all vices, even those considered the smallest. He was a model of all propriety of conduct; he was also a devoted Sunday-school teacher, finding his chief delight in the services of the sanctuary and loving associations of his home. He was all in all to his widowed mother and only sister; yet God took him. The "young man is safe."

While the pastor was absent at Conference, Sister Ballance, a long-time member of this church, departed to be with the Lord forever. After long affliction, as a ripe sheaf, she was gathered home; she was ready for the change. Yesterday we buried Sister Ida Fly Kirkpatrick, a most gracious, loving, sweet-spirited, cultured, pure Christian woman. She was young in years, but rich in all the Christian graces; loved all beautiful things. Flowers and music were her delight. Every object in her home gave evidence of an artistic hand; but suddenly she left us to join the angels. She has left a husband, father, mother, sisters and brothers stricken with inconsolable grief for her loss. The home is shadowed; but the Comforter is there. To-day we bury the oldest member in the church in Natchez, Sister Schofield, a woman full of years and good deeds, a sanctified and purified Christian. She has borne the heat and burden of the day for many years, and has laid down the burden, and rests with the Lord. The first day of the new year she entered upon that life which is not measured by the flight of years.

We are asking ourselves as these are falling around us, Who shall take up their burdens? who shall come into their places? who will be the next to go? will the next be as ready as these were to "enter the Master's joy?" God is faithful that promised; and, while he buries his workmen, he carries on his work. Lord, help us all to "so number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

W. E. BALLARD.

KOSCIUSKO, MISS.

Please accept New Year's greetings, and the following items from the North Mississippi Conference:

So far as heard from, the preachers are all in place, and beginning their work hopefully.

Bro. Bowen, at Aberdeen, reports the revival already begun there. He has had ten accessions since Conference. It don't take him a year to get ready to do something.

Bro. Moody begins well at Kosciusko and Durant. The outlook is favorable for a successful year in this charge.

Bro. Tucker has had a cordial reception at Houston, and is faring sumptuously on the fat of the land.

Bros. Newsom and Kilgore have been exchanged. The former goes to Hebron circuit, and the latter to Duncan and Friendship.

From the many orders that I am constantly receiving for the new hymn book, I anticipate a revival of old-fashion Methodist singing all along the lines—in the churches and homes of our people.

May the Lord bless us with a year of abundant happiness and prosperity!

G. W. BACHMAN.

BOOKS.

FOOT-PRINTS OF CHRIST. By Rev. William M. Campbell. 12mo, 375 pp., cloth, $1.50. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

The author of this book knows how to write good English. His style is a happy combination of vigor and simplicity. For subject-matter he has chosen an inexhaustible theme. The book contains sixty chapters, treating as many distinct topics. We select the following as samples: Christ Dealing with an Inquirer; Honoring God's Word; Behavior in a Panic; Ignoring Social Distinction; Absence of Envy; Jesus as Reprover; Steadiness amid Popularity; Moral Courage; Silence of Jesus; Self-Revelation; Attention to Children; Treatment of Idle Curiosity; Affected by Human Sympathy; Submission to the Divine Will. The book is presentable in appearance, admirable in spirit and style, and excellent in moral tone and teaching.

RUPERT WISE: A Poetic Romance in Eight Cantos. By H. M. Dubose. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

Bro. Duboso has produced a fine temperance story in verse. We do not pretend to be a critic of poetry; but it strikes us that there are some very superior passages in this "poetic romance." The verse is varied, which is a relief, and the descriptions are exceeding strong and vivid. This, we believe, is Bro. Duboso's first effort, and, if so, there is here the promise of something even better in the future.

LESSON IV.—January 26.

JOY OVER THE CHILD JESUS.

Luke II, 8 20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men.—Luke II, 14.

TIME.—B. C. 4.

PLACE.—Grazing meadows where the sheep destined for the temple service were cared for. In the vicinity of Jerusalem.

8. In the same country—The same fields from which David had been summoned to ho the grent "shepherd of Israel." Shepherds—There was near Bothlehem, on the road to Jerusalem, a tower known as Migdal Eder, or the watch-tower of the flock. Here was the station where shepherds watched the flocks destined for the daily sacrifice in the temple. Animals straying from Jerusalem on any side, as far as from Jerusalem to Migdal Eder, were offered in sacrifice. It was a settled conviction among the Jews that the Messiah was to he born in Bethlehem, and equally that he was to be revealed from Migdal Eder. The beautiful significance of the revelation of the infant Christ to shepherds watching the flocks destined for sacrifice needs no comment. This revelation to the shepherds acquires additional meaning as we remember that shepherds, as a class, were under the rabbinic ban, because of their necessary isolation from religious ordinances, and their manner of life, which rendered strict legal observance well-nigh impossible. Abiding in the field—The sheep of Palestine are housed at night only in the very coldest parts of winter, not always even then. The shephords watch them at night, sleeping on the ground or on beds made of branches of the trees, and wrapped in the heavy cloak or burnoose. The dangers to be guarded against are robbers, wolves, and sudden storms. Keeping watch—That is, taking watch by turns. Their flock—The singular number, used here, falls in with what has just been said concerning these sheep and shepherds. This was the temple-flock, specially devoted to sacrifice. The pronoun "their" furnishes no objection, since it is common to speak of the flock as belonging to the shepherds.

9. The angel—More correctly, an angel. The Greek has no article. The Lord—The Greek phrase for the incommunicable name Jehovah. Came upon them—The Greek verb, like the English, implies a sudden appearance. The form of the angel was probably, as in Mark xvi, 5, that of a young man in white apparel. This is the form in which most angel appearances are represented in both Testaments. The glory of the Lord shone—The Shekinah, the most common manifestation of the Deity. This cloud of brightness, which symbolized the Divine Presence, was reckoned as one of the most precious blessings of Israel. Its brightness was intolerable. It was this that filled them with fear. Sore afraid—Literally, feared a great fear. Men have never felt easy with the invisible world laid suddenly open to their gaze.

10. Fear not—It is worth noting that this is almost the normal accompaniment of the angelic manifestations in the gospel. They were intended to lessen, not to increase, the dread which men feel on being brought into contact with the supernatural world. Good tidings—The Greek verb rendered bring good tidings is the one from which our word evangelize is derived. This angel was the first evangelist. Wiclif is strictly literal: "I evangelize to you a great joy." Great joy—The contrast of the condition of despair and sorrow into which the heathen world had sunk, and the joy of Christians even in the deepest adversity—as when we find "joy" to be the key-note of the letter written to Philippi by the suffering prisoner, St. Paul—is a striking comment on this promise. Even the pictures and epitaphs of the gloomy catacombs are full of joy and brightness. To all people—Better, to all the people. A message to all classes rather than to all nationalities is indicated. Yet the universality of the gospel is foreshadowed in the language of this and the preceding chapter.

11. Is born—It adds to the vividness of the narrative to keep to the strict rendering of the aorist, was born. The city of David—Bethlehem. It is of the Lord's wisdom that the home of David should become the birthplace of David's greater Son; that this fact should appear in prophecy; and that then its fulfilment should be provided for by special circumstances as appears here, and all this be definitely recorded by the historian. A Saviour—It is a curious fact that "Saviour" and "salvation," so common in St. Luke and St. Paul (in whose writings they occur forty-four times), are comparatively rare in the rest of the New Testament. "Saviour" only occurs in John iv, 42; 1. John iv, 14, and six times in II. Peter and Jude; "salvation" only in John iv, 22, and thirteen times in the rest of the New Testament. A Saviour because he saves his people from their sins (Matt. i, 21); Christ, that is, the Anointed One, because anointed by the Father to be the High-priest for the human race (Heb. i, 9; x, 11, 12); the Lord, because Creator and King. (Col. i, 16, 18.) This word Lord is used continually by Luke as a designation of Jehovah. Christ the Lord—"Christ" is properly an adjective, not a noun, and means "anointed." It is a translation of the Hebrew Messiah, the king and spiritual ruler from David's race promised under that name in the Old Testament. Hence Andrew says to Simon, "We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ." (John i, 41; comp. Acts iv, 27; x, 38; xix, 28.) To us "Christ" has become a proper name, and is, therefore, written without the definite article; but, in the body of the gospel narratives, since the identity of Jesus with the promised Messiah is still in question with the people, the article is habitually used, and the name should, therefore, be translated "the Christ." After the resurrection, when the recognition of Jesus as Messiah has become general, we find the word beginning to be used as a proper name, with or without the article. In this passage it omits the article, because it occurs in the heading of the chapter, and expresses the evangelist's own faith in Jesus as the Messiah.

12. This shall be a sign—The sign was not itself a miraculous one, but the prediction of it was so. The thing which they would find would be such a verification of the prediction as to attest itself true, and show them that the real Christ was found. The babe, the swaddle, and the manger were three tokens. There could not have been many other children born that night in Bethlehem; and among these, if there were any, no other surely would have a manger for its cradle. The sign was to consist, it seems, solely in the overpowering contrast between the things just said of him and the lowly condition in which they would find him—him whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting, "ye shall find a babe;" whom the heaven of heavens can not contain, "wrapped in swaddling bands;" the "Saviour, Christ the Lord," lying in a manger. The babe—A babe. No article. Manger—The circumstance that the infant Jesus was laid in a manger unquestionably indicates the very humble estate of his parents; yet Luke makes no comment upon this poverty, nor does he utter any emotions of astonishment. The being laid in a manger he ascribes to the necessities of the case—there was no more room for strangers in the inn. Oriental life does not revolt violently against lodging in the same apartment with domestic animals.

13. With the angel—Though not necessarily in immediate proximity to him. The angel may have appeared on earth as a man; the host in heaven, luminous and as angels. The heavenly host—Host is, literally, army. This army, nevertheless, announces peace. The angels are often represented as the body-guard of the Lord. This whole transaction is highly significant of the interest felt by the angels in the incarnation and its sequences.

14. Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men—It has been disputed whether "Glory to God" means, There is, or, Let there be, glory to God. But there can be no doubt that the sense of both these is included. Commentators understand the phrase "in the highest" as a reference to the Jewish threefold heavens. This glory ascends to the highest regions of the universe. The first six words would seem to have formed one of the familiar doxologies of the Jews, and, as such, reappear among the shouts of the multitude on the occasion of our Lord's kingly entry into Jerusalem. It is not clear whether these clauses were sung as a continuous strain, or whether they were heard in single floating fragments, or whether by alternate responses. The last would give them most of the character of the Hebrew choral service. So they would be truly an angel choir in the gallery of the firmament.

15. Let us now go—Rather, Come now! let us go. They did not reason nor debate within themselves who should keep the wolf from the sheep in the meantime; but they did as they were commanded, and committed their sheep unto him whose pleasure they obeyed.

16. Found—The word means discovered after search. The lamp hung from the center of a rope would guide them to the khan, but among a crowd it would not be easy to find the newborn babe of the humble travelers. The babe...manger—The scene has naturally been a favorite subject of Christian art, and the adoration of the shepherds is perhaps implied, though not stated, in the narrative.

17. They made known abroad—These shepherds, having charge of flocks devoted to sacrifice, would presently be in the temple, and would meet those who came to worship and to sacrifice, and so proclaim the Messiah in the temple. Their story tended to the agitation which reached its height on the arrival of the magi in Jerusalem.

19. But—Contrast the difference in the reception by the shepherds and by Mary; the one publishes, the other meditates. Both are right; they illustrate different but not inconsistent phases of experience. Pondering and publishing are both Christian duties. Mary kept all these things—These "words," rather than "things;" guarded them in her memory. An effort to retain the story in the words in which it was given to her is indicated. Some things respecting her Son's character and mission had been revealed to Mary, but of the greatness and the extent of the work he was to perform she could have only very indefinite conceptions; and yet, with a deep spiritual consciousness, she kept all these things, comparing them together in her heart. She believed though she did not comprehend, and waited in faith for the result. The oftener we read the nineteenth verse the more assured we feel that Mary was the first and real author of the whole narrative. This pure, simple, and private history was composed by her, and preserved for a certain time in an oral form, until some one commited it to writing, whose work fell into the hands of Luke, and was reproduced by him in Greek. This proposition is confirmed by the Aramaic or Hebrew character which all scholars agree is borne by the narrative, which bears indubitable indications of having been originally composed in Hebrew and translated into Greek.

Missionary.

This is true, and as sad as true. The Missionary Review says:

A suggestive and important paper appears in The Evangelical Magazine on "The Perils to Evangelical Religion from the Spirit of the Age," by Dr. Alexander Thomson, of Manchester. There is, says the writer, a present mode of thought which approaches every question of the divine administration from a human standpoint. God's purposes and aims are measured by the ideas and sentiments of man. In discoursing on the Bible, it is the human element to which attention is drawn. Moral consciousness is made the judge of doctrines. Scriptnre representations of conversion, of the evil of sin, of the rights of the Snpreme Ruler, of the principle of snbstitution, and of dependence on supernatural grace, are vanishing out of sermons, because man becomes the measure of the divine.

Dr. March, of Woburn, Mass., has made a journey round the world. He says: "I came home with the full assurance that the American churches may rely with the utmost confidence upon the character, the ability, and the final success of their representatives in the mission fields of the East."

The Reformed Presbyterians pay for foreign missions $1.51 per capita; the Congregationalists, $1.44; Mennonites $1.20; Northern Presbyterians, $1 12; United Presbyterians, $1.06; Dutch Reformed, $1.01; Northern Methodists, $0.26; Southern Methodists, $0.21; Southern Baptists, $0.09; Episcopalians, $0.35; Southern Presbyterians, $0.58; Wesleyans of England, $1.60.

There are now forty-seven Protestant missionary societies engaged in mission work for the Jews in various lands. They support 377 laborers, of whom nearly one-half are of Jewish extraction. It is estimated that there are now 6,500,000 Jews in the world: so this makes one missionary to every 17,000. Dr. Dalman, of Leipsic, who has recently taken great pains to gather these exact figures, believes that, since this century began, 100,000 Jews have been received by baptism into the Church of Christ, and the quality of the converts, in many cases, has been notable. A particularly strong weapon, in this spiritual warfare for the Jews, has been found in medical missions.—Congregationalist.

The foremost article in the January Missionary Review of the World, which appears in an attractive new dress, is by Dr. Pierson, and is entitled, "Is There to Be a New Departure in Missions?" He sees cause for great encouragement in the marked tendency to establish a more direct tie between the churches and the missionaries, and he advises the modification of existing missionary methods whereby every local church shall come into sympathetic contact with a particular mission field. He thinks that the contributions will, in this way, be greatly increased. Nor does he regard the multiplication of independent enterprises upon missionary ground as altogether deplorable, but a natural and almost inevitable result of the present deep interest in foreign missions.—Congregationalist.

In the course of his journey around the world, with the design of arousing interest in Christianity among the colleges of the Orient, Secretary L. D. Wishard has reached Ceylon and India, where he is meeting with happy results. His nine months' stay in Japan afforded him opportunity to visit eighteen leading cities, and twenty-nine government and eighteen Christian colleges and schools. He conducted over 200 meetings attended by thousands of students and business men. Over 140 students united with the church connected with the Doshisha School at Kyoto, and large accessions to other churches followed his labors elsewhere. He writes enthusiastically of the need and demand for special work for young men in Japan, on a basis similar to that on which our Y. M. C. Associations rest in this country. In his interviews with more than 100 missionaries, he says that not one raised an objection to such an extension of missionary work.—Congregationalist.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

The Profits of the Publishing House.

Some of our papers are opportunely discussing the question, What to do with the profits arising from the business of our Publishing House in Nashville. The Richmond, Nashville, Wesleyan and Southern Advocates have all spoken, and spoken plainly, and they all seem to be agreed. As far as the letter of the law goes, these profits must go to the support of the superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers, and the Book Committee has already declared several dividends to these parties throughout the church. A positive interpretation has thus been given to a negative rule. The papers above mentioned regard this as a move in the wrong direction. The superannuates and widows and orphans have heretofore had a small living eked out to them by means of annual collections for that purpose. The argument is, that dividends from the profits of the House to support these claimants will surely kill off the collections, and thus make matters worse instead of better. Another point is this, and it is no small point either: To support these claimants by the Publishing House is to remove them out of the sphere of the sympathies of the church. That would be a calamity to the church itself. These annual collections are growing larger every year, and the promise is that in a few years they would amount to a respectable support; but throw these claimants on the House for a support, and you dry up one of the most beautiful streams of Christian benevolence that ever gladdened the life of the church. It would not be a turning of that stream into a different channel, as some imagine. Not a dollar would be added to any other collection from what is now contributed to Conference claimants. So, in unison with what the other papers have said on this subject, we think the devoting the profits of the Publishing House in the way our negative rule sets forth is unwise.

But the House is making money, and what shall be done with those profits? The answer has already been indicated. If there is one thing our church needs at the present time more than anything else, it is a better literature, and that literature to have a freer, fuller, wider dissemination among our people. We have been asleep here long enough. The enemies of God and good are wide awake and flooding the land with a reading that is pernicious in its teachings and ruinous in its tendencies. We want every dollar that can be had to secure the talent and brains necessary to cope successfully with these enemies.

If the House makes money, let that money go back to the House, and thus afford it the best facilities to inaugurate new plans and put them in execution to place the best reading in the homes of all our people at the lowest cost. One of the greatest battles of Christianity is to be fought at this point, and the sooner we equip the forces of the church and march them to the front, the better will it be for us.

If this can not be done without changing the sixth restrictive rule of our Constitution, then we say, Let the rule be changed.

The Revival Meetings.

Since our last report, the "Sam Jones' meetings" have, with every service and with every day, steadily increased in interest and power. The congregations, good from the very first, have enlarged in numbers. The various churches have, with tolerable unanimity, rallied to the support of the great evangelist and his co-workers, Mr. Stuart and Mr. Excell. People of all creeds and of no creed have filled the seats of the auditorium. Bros. Jones and Stuart have preached a straightforward, plain, pungent, powerful gospel, and hundreds of hearts have been reached and hundreds of consciences touched by the truth. We have never seen a man who could so quickly and apparently so easily get alongside a sinner, and show him so plainly what he needed and where his help lay.

We will not attempt to sketch the preacher and his characteristics. We can't print a gesture, nor write down a tone of voice, nor publish an emphasis, nor show a pause, nor paint an expression, nor photograph the flash of an eye, and as all these enter largely into the evangelist's sermons, we do not feel competent to reproduce those sermons in our paper. Of one thing we are sure, and gladly say it, and that is, the sword of the Spirit in his hands is a mighty weapon, and in his use of it he reminds us that the old race of the "mighty men of valor" is not extinct. His fearless denunciations of wickedness in its manifold forms pierce right down through the seared and crusted consciences of wicked men and women! His hopeful spirit infuses new hope into the discouraged hearts of Christians and girds them with a cincture of "boldness in Christ Jesus."

We are sure that hundreds of people have heard the gospel during the past week who had little idea of what the gospel is, and have had offers of a salvation of which they never dreamed before. Bro. Jones has lifted curtains and pointed them to scenes in their own hearts and families and churches and the community, the sight of which has made impressions that can never fade away.

During last week the morning services were held in Carondelet Methodist Church; during this week they are being held in the Coliseum Baptist Church, and they have been well attended, mostly by Christian people. Last Sunday the two services in the hall were a grand success. At three o'clock there were, at least, 1,500 men present, and Bro. Jones preached on profanity, Sabbath-breaking, gambling and licentiousness. Such a straightout statement of truth was never heard by a New Orleans audience before. His appeals, loving, heart-yearning appeals, to young men to "escape for their lives" from these terrible sins, produced a most profound impression and brought tears to hundreds of eyes. At the close of the service, at least 1,000 stood up and said they would henceforth, by God's help, lead better lives. At the night service fully two thousand men listened earnestly to a sermon on, "What must I do to be saved?" The preacher showed plainly what salvation meant, clinching the truth as he went along by apt and forcible illustrations. Half of that great crowd stayed to the after-service, and about seventy-five men, young and old, gave their hands to the preacher as evidencing the fact that they were done with sin and had turned to a different manner of life.

The attitude of the press of this city toward this revival movement is opening the eyes of a great many people as to its temper on the great moral questions of the day. Very little has been said by the daily papers about the meeting. The Picayune started out well; but by the end of the week it was completely silenced. It seems that the virtue of the daily press has been shocked to silence by the "slang and buffoonery of Sam Jones." That is the ostensible reason for this silence. Some think that the real reason is, that Sam Jones' merciless excoriations of the Louisiana Lottery have caused that institution to send out its orders, and that the newspapers dare not disobey.

Every man and woman who has followed this movement from its beginning up to this time, whatever view may be taken of Mr. Jones' methods, are now convinced that it is a movement in favor of right living, and against wrong living; a movement for righteousness against wickedness; a movement for God against the devil. The press may be silent and remain silent; but God can turn its very silence into an efficient help for his cause, and by that silence undermine the strongholds of his enemies. He has said: "He that is not with me is against me;" and who can fight against God?

Rev. Sam P. Jones.

Rev. Sam P. Jones, the evangelist, has at length reached New Orleans, and we have taken his measure, and he ours. The sun's spots do not lessen by approximation, and so neither does his brilliancy and geniality. We know more of our brother's faults and idiosyncracies, and we know more, too, of his sledge-hammer virtues of head and heart, and in more particulars than that expressed in the opening paragraph we are closer to him. Our human side warms to Bro. Jones in the measure that upon closer inspection we discover him to be a good, sound chip off of that old block of humanity from which the world's greatest heroes have been hewed. Long before we saw the inimitable brother we had made up our minds that conceit was an incontestable sign of genius, and, having seen him, we discover no occasion to alter this preconception. Reverence has never been considered a peculiar mark of that talent that awes men without seriously attempting it, and triumphs on the rostrum as readily with a gesture or a grin as with skillfully prepared periods, and it is safe to say that Bro. Jones is as irreverent as a Texas steer. Ruggedness and rough-hewn individuality are traits that win, and certainly there is nothing about the subject we are handling to remind one of the dalliance of the water lily; and who that ever saw him face an audience can doubt that the patriots motto of, "Independence now and independence forever!" would have found indelible characterization if its author had never lived? Here is a background upon which to throw, with very little effort of genius, a brilliant and commanding presence, and against it we invite you to look at the pulpit humorist of the—we had almost said, age; but will write, ages. But before we speak of his originality as a man, let us briefly refer to his genus as an individual with a calling. Mr. Jones is a prophet after the order of John the Baptist, and not a prophet after the order of Jesus of Nazareth. He preaches the gospel of morality and not the gospel of Jesus Crucified, except upon its lowest plane. "Quit your meanness!" is his own characterization of it, and the faith by which a man is to do it, is a poor, weak thing, no diviner and as much individualistic of the man himself as the spider's web of the spider. There is to be no bearing of the cross—because there is no cross except one self-made and wholly fanciful; and if that had been true of Christ's gospel, may we not fear that the bottom would have dropped out of it long ago?

But if the brother is heretical he does not know it, and you do not feel it. The fact is, it is an eccentricity of his genius, for which his heart is in no wise responsible, and the conclusion is most patent that the Lord is using this man, who does not believe in miracles to any great extent, to work greater miracles than, perhaps, any other instrument of post-apostolic times. John's gospel was very short—to the people: divide your substance with your neighbor; to the publicans: exact no more than your due; to the soldiers: do violence to no man! But it was very sharp—and until Christ came "a greater than he had not risen among men." Bro. Jones is equally laconic and emphatic as to creed; as courageous; as, honest; as self-reprobative (in the highest sense), and if he had lived in the age of the apostle, might have proven as invincible a foil to Herod and have died in the same prison.

We were not surprised to hear him say in his opening discourse that John was one of the bravest preachers that ever lived; for, perhaps, there is no one who admires bravery more than a brave man, unless it is a coward, and because a person's ideal must strongly express that person's character in its best aspects. What we most desire is that which we are most blest in having. Whatever Bro. Jones' preaching is, it is the best of its kind—humor, pathos, argument. His pleading, however, is not special, but circumferential, though, to use one of his own, "he always gets there." He gets there, indeed, in the most bewildering manner conceivable, for you follow him through laughter and tears, and are quite unwilling to admit that you have been convinced without logic, or that you have been stolen away from yourself upon a pretext so flimsy as a joke or an appeal to sentiment.

The art which conceals art he certainly possesses, and we all know that to be inartificiality. The speaker is out-and-out, having nothing to conceal, and while we are looking for him to impose on us by some of the platform jugglery so current in our age, he is undeceiving us, and proving to us, by the simplest kind of demonstration, that honesty is the best policy in a speaker. His judgment is rarely at fault when he has been on the ground and taken a lynx-eyed survey of the situation, though he sometimes trusts it too far, and practices, as a result, an alarming distrust of the good sense of the world about him. He calls himself an untutored child of nature, but has great faith in God and trust in his providences. There is nothing approaching to licentiousness of speech in his sermons, though there is certainly a great quantity of innocent slang, and any man or woman who is not controlled by that immoral sort of morality that will not suffer them to read the Pentateuch or the Epistles of Paul may safely hear him, and no female scion of the most refined home could hear him through a season without increasing respect for the virtuous in human character. The slang helps to hold us down to the earth from which we came, and reminds us, as we certainly need to be reminded, that the only exaltation which can come to us will result from the ministry of divine grace, and not of human excellence. In short, the evangelist on the platform, or off, is a great character whom we can look down upon and love when in communion with the children of nature; and when in the company of men illustrious upon the stage of the world, we can look up to and admire, and that is something which can be said of few men since the beginning of the Christian dispensation. To sum up: that which occurs to us to be the leading characteristic of his life, is honesty; of his physical constitution, courage; of his mental constitution, imagination. The latter is certainly that faculty most prominent in his discourse, leaving the stamp of originality upon all that he says. When, for instance, he likens conscience in the human organization to a tar bucket hanging between the rear wheels of a wagon, a thing to follow, and not to be followed, he not only sees the bucket, but actually invades it with eyes and olfactories, so much so that it will cause him a good, long pause in his discourse to shake this haunt from sensibility. When he speaks of a congregation on dress parade, he is not thinking about the parade as you are, but about the dress, and he sees the half empty pews gaudy with shining silks and sumptuous broadcloths, and he pauses long enough for you to see it, too. This leads us to say that our greatest surprise on hearing him was to find him the most deliberate—nay, the slowest of speakers, frequently pausing for a space of twenty seconds, more or less, to stroke his moustache ruminantly, or to survey his audience critically, or to say, with drawling ejaculation, "My! my!" or, "Brethren! brethren!"—but always recurring with dash and precision to the main topic and to the intellectual charge; and a second surprise was the fact to which we have hinted in an earlier division of this article, that he stresses the gospel from its human and not from its divine side, taking his texts mainly from the Proverbs of Solomon and Paul, and eschewing the Gospels; and while his theology is evidently all right as to essentials, implying a great deal which it does not express, it is yet possible that a great many of the converts at his meetings might go away, and say, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." Yet again the average Christian hearer would call this preaching Holy Ghost preaching, and our brotherly brother from Georgia is as profound a believer in the ministry of the Paraclete as the most ultra second-blessing man who sits under the droppings of his weird discourse.

B.

The Martyr-Spirit.

From a superior article, by a correspondent of the Advance, on "Christian Heroism," we make this extract, which we hope will put our Christian readers to thinking and then to doing:

Now, the Christian life of to-day needs this heroic spirit. We need it first of all, to illustrate and give efficacy to our faith. It is sometimes said that the old faith is breaking down and losing its power over the people. This statement is partly exaggeration, partly prejudice, but there is a shade of truth in it. Why? It can not be the want of Christian evidences. The fundamental truths of the Christian faith are settled beyond dispute. The trouble, therefore, is not intellectual, but moral. It is not the want of belief on the part of Christians that keeps the "masses" from the church, but the fact of a wide chasm between belief and practice; the hollowness, not of a vacant creed, but of a vacant spiritual life; the ghastliness of a great conviction unequally yoked with a partial and dwarfish conformity to the requirements of that conviction. It is not more theological evidence, but more of the martyr-spirit of the Cross, that will meet the case. The time is coming, and will perhaps have to come frequently in the future, as it has in the past, when history will repeat itself, when the great Christian principle which is lifting humanity will have to be baptized over again in the blood of the martyrs just to prove that it is real and that it is here to conquer. That has been God's method in history. The new divine life which is to save the world can not subsist on luxury, or speculation, or architecture, or sentimental books. Such things may suffice to keep men good-natured, just as Arctic voyagers appease the Laplanders by giving them their favorite food; but you can not make Christian heroes by feeding men's souls on intellectual or spiritual blubber.

Notes.

A writer in one of the Kansas papers says "that one advantage of prohibition in that State is that women do not have to marry men to save them." Prohibition, then, is a great help to the women out there!

According to the Independent, 45 of the 211 Presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church have voted on the overture to revise the Westminster standards. The vote now stands 33 in favor, and 12 against. These Presbyteries represent 1,697 ministers and 251,236 communicants. If the same ratio is kept up through all the Presbyteries, the revisionists will carry the day by a large majority.

In a little story we read, the other day, in the Youth's Companion, we came to a sentence which caused us to stop and think and ponder. It will do for some of the readers of the ADVOCATE to ponder over, and, therefore, we reproduce it. The sentence is this: "There are people, who, for the sake of raising a laugh, belittle their talk, their minds, and at last the lives of all who fall under their influence."

The most recent official reports show that during the past year there has been in the United States a gain of 3,882 churches, 3,989 ministers and 876,995 church members. That is, ten new churches and ten new ministers and twenty-four hundred new church members for every day in the year! There are now 142,767 churches, 98,346 ministers and 20,667,318 church members! Verily, Christianity seems to be vigorous, considering that some people say it is dying out.

Here is a piece of information we get from the Picayune:

On the last day of last year, in accordance with the usages of the mint, all the dies used for the coining of silver dollars during the year 1889 at this mint—seventy-two in number—were destroyed. The method of destruction is unique. The dies, which are of the hardest steel, are heated until white. Then they are placed in succession upon a massive anvil where their faces are battered out of shape with heavy sledge hammers in the hands of brawny men. The steel mass is to be sent to Philadelphia, where it will be made into new dies at the mint there.

The Brookhaven Leader, of a recent date, has this:

A prominent layman of one of the leading religious denominations in this State recently drew $2,500 in the Louisiana Lottery, and the fact has been heralded through the columns of the secular press as something to be proud of, with not a word of adverse criticism, as far as we have seen, from any quarter. It is a sad commentary it seems to us, and furnishes a fresh occasion for the pulpit to thunder against this stupendous juggernaut of demoralization that is sapping the integrity of the churches as well as society in general.

Why didn't you call him out, so that everybody could look at him?

We clip this from the Missionary Review:

A writer in the Bombay Guardian says: "For 350 years the Jesuits have had a succession of learned men in India, yet they have never translated the Scriptures, in whole or in part, so far as we know, into any of its many languages. On the other hand, the Protestant missions have, in ninety years, translated the Scriptures, in whole or part, into over forty Indian languages and dialects. By the one method the Indian peoples can read the Word of God for themselves in their own tongues, by the Jesuit-method they have been and are deprived of it as vigorously as the Sudras are of their sacred books by the Brahmans."

That we suppose to be the reason why, in one decade, Roman Catholics increased twelve per cent, and Protestants, fifty-one per cent. in that land. An open Bible is the only true gospel.

A writer in the Musical Herald brings to view a scene we have often groaned over, but we don't know any remedy. He says:

If the general and characteristic spirit and attitude of the American mind to-day were to be expressed in a single word, that word Irreverence would surely be chosen, and the degree to which the church and Sunday-school are responsible for it, in view of the common but startling facts to which we have simply referred—God only can know. In a crowded church recently, during an evening service the hymn,

> "Just as I am without one plea,
> But that thy blood was shed for me:
> And that thou bidst me come to thee,
> O Lamb of God, I come, I come,"

was announced. All were provided with hymnals and all were urged to join in the singing. Among those who responded most promptly and vigorously, were a half-dozen young men and women immediately in front of the writer, who during the singing of the entire hymn, so full of the tenderest thoughts that gather about the cross, so fragrant with the spirit of prayer and consecration, evidenced by their frivolous conduct the farthest removal from that mind and disposition, without which the use of these words could but contribute to a moral insensibility, already painfully apparent. A little observation revealed the fact that these were but representatives of a large number of their kind, and the cry sprang to our lips, "O Lord, how long!"

Personal and Otherwise.

Bishop Wilson wr tes the editor that Rev. J. F. Towson is the missionary to Japan sent out by the last one thousand dollars raised by the readers of the ADVOCATE.

The second edition of "Our Hymns and their Authors," by Dr. Tillett, of Vanderbilt University, is out. We commended this book when it first appeared, and, having studied it carefully since, we repeat, with emphasis, that every preacher and every household ought to have it. A lady of our acquaintance presented one to a venerable minister as a Christmas gift, and he said to her that if he had been asked what book he would like to have, he would have chosen the one she presented.

A correspondont, in a private note, says: "When I preach a good sermon, full of unctiou and power, the peoplo get the blessing; but when I faller or tail, as I often do, I get the blessing myself." We think that brother is on a high plane of graee. Any man who can extract a blessing out of failure turns his failures into successes. He does aot receive "the grace of God in vain."

If you want your people to have a full and correct account of the doings of the General Conference that is soon to meet, press upon them the fact that our paper will give the best account to them that they can get. Use this point in your canvass for the paper.

Let not our brethren of the Mississippi Confereuce forget the fact that they passed a resolution to preach two new sermons ou missious early in the year, and that they would try to have their missionary collections, both foreign and domestic, in hand by the first of April.

We have in this number two sketches of the great evangelist drawn by two very different painters. Read both, and then go aud see and hear him, and you will draw another.

The Ruston Caligraph has published the resolutions passed by the Louisiana Conferenee on the State Lottery.

We are continually receiving complaints about our paper not arriving at its destination for several days. We lay the matter before the postal authorities here, but it seems we can get little relief. Of one thing we are sure: With the exeeption of one week, our paper, every number, has gone to the postoffice ou Wednesday. We will still endeavor to straighten the matter out.

A new manuscript of the New Testament has been discovered, which, it is thought, dates back to the fourth century. It is in possession of the Patriarch of Constantinople.

A brother writes as follows: "I propose to send you subscribers to our paper. I think other church papers have no right to enter our territory, as some of them do. Let us stick to our paper, rally to its support, make it better than the best." That's the way we like to hear the brethreu talk.

We are indebted to our brother, Rev. H. Bascom Browne, of the South Carolina Confereuce, for a copy of the Minutes of the 104th session of that Conference

The Minutes of the fifth and sixth Annual Conventions of the Woman's Christian Temperauce Union of Mississippi have been received. There is a full account of the work done in the past two years.

Be sure to read the article ou the first page by Bro. Daves on the Lottery. The churches must crush this hon, or else it will crush the churches.

It is a very curious thing that the newspapers in this city, professing to give the news, have no mention of the greatest movement for right against wrong which was ever started here. It looks like they were against the right and in favor of the wrong.

We are pained to learn from the Clarion-Ledger of the death of Mrs. Black, mother of Dr. W. C. Black, of Jackson, Miss. She was eighty three years old. We sympathize with our brother. The most crushing letter we ever received was the one announcing the death of a loved and loving mother.

The following personal from the Brookhaven Leader is just what we expected to hear:

Rev. Mr. Huntley, of the Methodist Church, preached his first sermon to a Brookhaven congregation on last Sabbath, and impressed all with his eloquence and earuestness.

Rev. J. R. Whittington writes: "Myself and family arrived safely at the parsonage at Oak Grove Church, on the East Feliciana circuit, this morning. This work is fully up to the average, both financially and spiritually. But by the help of the good Lord and the co-operation of this good people, I hope to make more development this year. I want to largely introduce the ADVOCATE, as my experionce is where the ADVOCATE or other religious papers are taken the preacher is greatly aided. Bro. N. J. Roberts was in charge of this work last year. The people love him very much, and he did a fine work here."

Millsaps Methodist College.

The Joint Committee of the new Methodist Male College of Mississippi met in Jackson, Miss., a few days ago. In accordance with a joint resolution of the two Mississippi Conferences, Bishop Galloway has appointed the following persons to constitute the first Board of Trustees: From the North Mississippi Conference, Rev. J. J. Wheat, D. D.; Rev. T. J. Newell, Rev. S. M. Thames, Rev. R. M. Standefer, G. D. Shands, D. L. Swcatman, J. B. Streater, John Trice. From Mississippi Conference, Rev. T. L. Mellen, Rev. W. C. Black, D. D.; Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D.; Rev. A. F. Watkins, W. L. Nugent, R. W. Millsaps, L. Sexton, M. M. Evans. Bishop Galloway is president of the Board. The college has been named "Millsaps Methodist College," in honor of R. W. Millsaps, who inaugurated the scheme by a donation of $50,000 for endowment. So the college is no longer in posse; it is in esse. We are glad to chronicle the fact of the existence of another church school where our boys may be "trained up in the way they should go."

A Proposition.

MR. EDITOR: We still hear the "Macedonian" cry from Japan. It troubles me; it really makes me nervous; yea, it kindles a flame in my soul. I can not go. I would if I could.

Can not we, the preachers of the Louisiana Conference, whose lots are cast in this favored land, establish and support a mission in that benighted country? It seems to me we can, and at a very light sacrifice. I propose, therefore, that each preacher pledge two per cent. of his salary, to be paid annually, at the close of each Conference year, until the mission becomes self-supporting. If all the preachers will respond, the amount realized from this small per cent. of our salaries will amount to, about, one thousand dollars, which I suppose will be sufficient to support a missionary in that field. We will name it—if there be no objection — the Louisiana Preachers' Mission. Brethren, by the mercies and grace of God, let us do this thing, and God alone knows how much it will add to our crown of rejoicing "when the general roll is called." Please answer through the ADVOCATE.

Christmas Revival in Aberdeen, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Our reception in Aberdeen has been all that we could desire. Every needed comfort has been provided by these good people for the pastor and his family. We enjoy the fruits of the faithful labors of our predecessors. Led by our efficient presiding elder, Rev. Amos Kendall we began a meeting ou Christmas Day, and continued it ten days, which resulted in several conversions and fifteen additions to the church. "and more to follow." The faith of the church is much quickened, and many of the membership revived. Bro. Kendall's preaching was attended with great power. His attacks upon sin were fearless and victorious! We pray that this meeting is a true propheey of the year's work! Please pray for us.

An Acceptable Donation.

I desire, through the ADVOCATE, to acknowledge the receipt of some valuable contributions to the library and apparatus of Centenary College. There came to us this day from New Orleans, all freights prepaid, a complete magic lantern outfit, a handsome photographic apparatus, a full new set of the Encyclopedia Britannica, consisting of twenty-four volumes, and more than fifty other good books—all the generous gift of Rev. D. L. Mitchel' business manager of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. In the name of Prof. Sullivan, through whom these gifts were first offered us, and the faculty and students of the college, I hereby tender sincere thanks to Bro. Mitchel.

With two exceptions, the preachers were all in their proper pulpits last Sunday; and the two exceptions were from providential causes. The outlook is encouraging. Several charges will make increased allowances for pastoral support, and I beseech every Board of Stewards to make liberal allowances for the support of their preachers. Let the brethren see that the parsonages are made comfortable. And let us all work and pray for full collections and a revival in every charge. Let the revival last the whole year round, and a forward movement be made on every line of church life and church work.

The Home Insurance Company.

Special attention is called to the change in the advertisement of the Home Insurance Company, of New Orleans, which appears elsewhere in this paper. For several years—indeed, ever since the efficient, energetic, honorable Christian gentleman, Mr. Thomas Sefton, has been at the head of its affairs—the career of this popular home institution has been upward each year showing large gains in valuable assets; but in none is so large an increase as that for the year 1889, when this sum reached $510.584 54, with an actual net profit of $62,897 59. Its total receipts for the year were $400,164 17. These figures prove the success of its management, and should commend this local company to a larger patronage the ensuing year. Those desiring to have their property insured in a solvent, well-managed institution, where losses are fairly adjusted and paid promptly, will do well to try the Home Insurance Company.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Messrs. C. I. Hood & Co. have favored the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE with beautiful chromo calendars, one of which adorns our office. For many years this firm has been doing business with this paper, and never has had a complaint of their valuable medicine. We bid success for the coming years to our enterprising, prompt friends, Messrs. C. I. Hood & Co., manufacturers of the famous Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP should always be used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa. 25c. a bottle.

Periodic Headache and Neuralgia, cold hands and feet, and a general derangement of the system, including impaired digestion, with torpor of the liver, etc., are, in certain localities, invariably caused by Malaria in the system in quantity too small to produce regular chills. Many persons suffer in this way and take purgatives and other medicines to their injury. When a few doses of Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria would cure them at once. Sold by Druggists.

A Fact

WORTH knowing is that blood diseases which all other remedies fail to cure, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Fresh confirmation of this statement comes to hand daily. Even such deep-seated and stubborn complaints as Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and the like, are thoroughly eradicated by the use of this wonderful alterative.

Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th street, New York, certifies:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I am pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H., writes: "One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I felt its beneficial effects before I had quite finished one bottle, and I can freely testify that it is the best blood-medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Texas.

SOMETHING TO DO.

BY J. W. CALDWELL.

Something to do twelve hours a day,
Something for each, something alway;
Work for the young, work for the old,
Work, worth more than silver or gold.

Much for all in a world like this,
Not one need fall or go amiss;
Wide are the fields, plenty to do,
Plenty for me, plenty for you.

Stand not idle here all the day,
Up! be doing, working away;
Mind not the dew, fear not the sun,
Only be sure your work is done.

Keep to your post, do your full part,
Do with your hands, do with your heart;
Never draw back, never despair,
Heaven will help if you do your share.

Soon you will see low slanting sun,
Soon you will find night coming on.
Haste, haste thee then, while it is light!
Do all you can, do with your might.

Eyes Open.

Rachie went off to school, wondering if Aunt Amy could be right.

"I will keep my eyes open," she said to herself.

She stopped a moment to watch old Mrs. Bert, who sat inside her door binding shoes. She was just now trying to thread a needle, but it was hard work for her dim eyes.

"Why, if there isn't work for me!" exclaimed Rachie. "I never should have thought of it, if it hadn't been for Aunt Amy. Stop, Mrs. Bert; let me do that for you."

"Thank you, my little lassie. My poor old eyes are worn out, you see. I can get along with the coarse work yet, but sometimes it takes me five minutes to thread my needle. And the day will come when I can't work, and then what will become of a poor old woman?"

"Mamma would say the Lord would take care of you," said Rachie very softly, for she felt she was too little to be saying such things.

"And you can say it, too, dearie. Go on to school now. You've given me your bit of help, and your comfort, too."

But Rachie got hold of the needle book, and was bending over it with busy fingers.

"See!" she presently said, "I've threaded six needles for you to go on with, and when I come back I'll thread some more."

"May the sunshine be bright to your eyes, little one!" said the old woman as Rachie skipped away.

"Come, and play, Rachie," cried many voices as she drew near the play-ground.

"Which side will you be on!"

But there was a little girl with a very downcast face sitting on the porch.

"What is the matter, Jennie?" asked Rachie, going to her.

"I can't make these add up," said Jennie in a discouraged tone, pointing to a few smeary figures on her slate.

"Let me see; I did that example at home last night. Oh, you forgot to carry ten—see?"

"So I did." The example was finished, and Jennie was soon at play with the others.

Rachie kept her eyes open all day and was surprised to find how many ways there were of doing kindness, which went far towards making the day happier. Try it, girls and boys, and you will see for yourselves.

"Will ye look here, Miss Rachie?"

Bridget was sitting in the back porch looking dolefully at a bit of paper which lay on the kitchen table she had carried out there:

"It's a letter I'm after writin' to me mother, an' it's fearin' I am she'll niver be able to rade it, because I can't rade it mesilf. Can you rade it at all, Miss Rachie? It's all the afternoon I've been at it."

Rachie tried with all her might to read poor Bridget's queer scrawl, but she was obliged to give it up.

"I'll write one for you some day, Bridget," she said; "I am going over to Jennie's to play 'I spy' now."

The fresh air and the bird-songs and the soft winds made it very pleasant to be out of doors after being in school all day, and her limbs fairly ached for a good run. But she turned at the gate for another look at Bridget's woe-begone face.

"I'll do it for you now, Bridget," she said, going back.

It was not an easy task, for writing was slow work with her, but she formed each letter with painstaking little fingers, and when she had finished felt well repaid by Bridget's warm thanks and satisfied feeling of duty well done.

"Our Master has taken his journey,
To a country that is far away."

Aunt Amy heard the cheery notes floating up the stairs, telling of the approach of the little worker.

"I've been keeping my eyes open, Aunt Amy, and there's plenty and plenty to do."—Christian Secretary.

MR. EDITOR: As I have just been reading the little cousins' letters, I thought I would write. I have been going to school at Centenary College, Jackson, La. I came home to spend the Christmas holidays, and had a nice time. I will start back next Monday, December 30. I like the school very much. Prof. Wynn is my teacher. He is a splendid teacher. I will advise all boys to go there to school. I board at Mrs. Smith's, and I like her very much. I have just read a letter from one of my friends, Mr. Dunbar Simpson. I went to Conference this year, and saw my brother-in-law, who is a preacher. When the Conference sent him here he had to marry one of my sisters. Whenever young preachers come about, you had better hide your daughters, because they will be sure to marry them. My brother-in-law's name is Henry S. Johns. Please don't let this reach the waste-basket. I love the dear old ADVOCATE. When I pick up the paper, the first thing I look at is the little cousins' letters. You must excuse me for writing such a long letter. I don't want to bother you too much. I am,

Your friend,

ABRAHAM FOSTER.

PLAISANCE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to the ADVOCATE in a long time, I thought I would write a few lines to the little cousins' column. I am a little girl. I live with my grandpapa and grandma. I have one brother and one half brother and one little half sister. I have a little pet cat and a calf. Well, I will answer Willie Schwing's question. The shortest chapter is Psalms cvii. The shortest verse is John ii, 35. I will ask a question: Where in the Bible is the word "grey" found? I will close,

JOSEPHINE JEWELL.

VICTORIA MILL, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eleven years old, and, as I have never written to your paper, I thought I would write to you now. Mamma takes your valuable paper, and I love to read the letters that are printed in it. Fearing that my letter will be too long, and might be consigned to the waste-basket, I will close,

Your little friend,

ANNIE MCFARLAND.

AUBERDEEN, Mississippi.

Johnny is just beginning to study something at school besides "readin'," "'ritin'" and "'rithmetic." One day the teacher asked him:

"What is an arc, Johnny?"

"An arc," answered Johnny, "is part of a round circle."

"Did you ever see a circle that wasn't round?" smiled the teacher.

"Yes, sir," said Johnny, "a—a sewing circle!"

A neighbor was removing the sod from his lawn, preparatory to building, when my little six-year-old boy came to me very much excited, and said, "Well, mamma! 'Thea' is going to move, I guess; they are taking up the grass."

Rheumatism originates in lactic acid in the blood, which settling in the joints causes the pains and aches of the disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures rheumatism by neutralizing the acidity of the blood, and giving it richness and vitality. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Mamma sent Ottie over to auntie's with a message. When asked how baby brother was, she exclaimed, "O auntie, he is real sick! the doctor says he is threatened with ammonia!"

Improving the Time.

William Bardley was a clerk in a store in a small country town. He had a great deal of time on his hands, for customers were not very numerous. But he did not waste his time, or spend it in vain and gossipy talk with those who lounged into the store to pass away a vacant hour. He procured a text-book in short-hand, and applied himself diligently to mastering the system. A friend of his, who was an expert stenographer, corrected his exercises and helped him over hard places for a time; but William soon found that the measure of his own application was the measure of his success in the study.

When he got so he could write quite well, he persuaded some of the school boys of his acquaintance to read to him (and he found ways of discharging the obligation) evenings when he was off duty, until he could write fast enough to take down most of the minister's discourses on Sunday, and the lectures of occasional visitors to the town, and conversations that might be going on within his hearing.

In a year's time he had become expert enough to fill a position in a lawyer's office in a neighboring city, and to his ability as stenographer he soon added that of using the typewriter. His constant practice in both these industries made him in a comparatively short time quite rapid as a reporter and typewriter. With his improved facility he was able to command increased compensation for his work. Thus he went on until now he is supporting himself comfortably and laying up money to go through college.

All this came from his wise improvement of odd moments.—New York Christian Advocate.

DON'T SCOLD.—Mothers, don't scold! You can be firm with your children, you can reprove them for their faults, you can punish them when necessary, but don't get into the habit of perpetually scolding them. It does them no good. They soon become so accustomed to fault-finding and scolding that they pay no attention to it. Or, which often happens, they grow hardened and reckless in consequence of it. Many a naturally good disposition is ruined by constant scolding, and many a child is driven to seek evil associates because there is no peace at home. Mothers, with their many cares and perplexities, often fall into this habit unconsciously, but it is a sad habit for them and their children. Watch yourselves and don't indulge in this unfortunate and often unintentional manner of addressing your children. Watch even the tones of your voice, and, above all, watch your hearts, for we have divine authority for saying that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."—Christian at Work.

An ingenious mother tried to replenish her wood-box by having her two little boys "play" that they were Abraham Lincoln splitting and piling rails. The work went merrily on until she attempted to take some of the "rails," when the youngest blubbered out, "I thought we was a-playin,' and we're only gettin' in wood!" It is quite an art to combine work and play in just the right manner for children, but Dr. Lyman Beecher was evidently master of the art. In the life of Mrs. Stowe, just published, it is related that at an apple-paring he said to one of the sons, "Come, I'll tell you what we'll do to make the evening go off. You and I'll take turns and see who'll tell the most out of Scott's novels." So they took them novel by novel, reciting scenes which kept the children wide-awake and made their work fly. The incident points still another lesson. It shows the advantage of a union of pursuits on the part of all the members of the family, and the advantage of discussing together the books which are read.

If instead of a gem, or even a flower, we would cast the gift of a lovely thought into the heart of a friend, that would be giving as the angels give.—Macdonald.

Possibilities of Electricity.

Whether the economy of the electric locomotive will compare favorably with that of the steam locomotive is not settled. A recent writer on the subject, estimating the consumption of fuel in locomotives on elevated roads in cities at six pounds per horse-power hour, and in locomotives on surface roads at four pounds per same period, concludes that electricity as now produced can successfully rival steam in the former case, but not in the latter. It certainly seems, however, that, if the problem of distribution be satisfactorily solved, the superior economy in fuel of large stationary engines and boilers might well be a much more powerful factor on the side of the current than the foregoing opinion indicates. The speed attainable on such a railway would probably far exceed that now reached on any steam road. One hundred miles per hour is not without the range of reasonable possibility. Whether still greater velocity is practicable will probably depend upon means of reducing the air resistance to the moving vehicles.

The development of electric railways for the transmission of mails and merchandise is already well advanced. The so-called "telpherage" system is in use in England, for the slow traction of heavy weights, such as coal, ore, etc. Two new systems for quick dispatch have lately been proposed in this country. One includes a long, narrow car of small cross-sectional area, running on an elevated track, and claimed to be capable of making a speed of two miles per minute. The other employs a series of electro-magnetic coils, inclosing the elevated track at intervals, through which coils the small car is successfully drawn by the action of the current entering the several coils in turn. The practical efficiency of these systems may be open to question; but they indicate that the possibility of electrically driving small vehicles between distant points at very high rates of speed is engaging the close attention of inventors. It is not impossible that we may be able to project mail and express matter throughout the country at the rate of two or three hundred miles an hour, either on elevated structures or through subterranean pipes; or that some day the mails may be sent across the Atlantic by the aid of electric motors traversing tubes laid on the ocean bed.—Forum.

Loss of Light through Windows.

Some interesting experiments have been undertaken by Herr Herzberg, with the co-operation of Herr G. Schultze, chief engineer of the Berlin works of Messrs. Frederick Siemens & Co., for the purpose of ascertaining the loss of light in passing through window glass of various kinds in general use. The experiments were conducted with a Bunsen photometer, in which two Argand gas burners of equal illuminating power were placed at the two ends of the graduated bar. After equality of illumination of the screen had been established, a plate of the glass to be tested was interposed between one of the end lights and the screen, and the extent of the displacement of the latter thus necessitated for the re-establishment of equality of illumination on both sides gave the measure of the opacity of the glass. A simple translucent but not transparent glass showed a loss of twenty-seven per cent. of light. Cathedral glass, such as is used in stained glass work as a basis, being clear but with a slight ground tint, showed a loss of twelve and two-thirds per cent. Plain white Rhenish "double glass" gave a loss of ten per cent. Plain thin mirror glass obstructed ten per cent. of light. The two last together, with an interval of six centimeters between them, showed a loss of twenty-one per cent. Cathedral and Rhenish "double glass" together with the same interval, showed a loss of twenty-three per cent. A ground glass with cut stars together with a white background, such as is found in house fan lights, obstructed sixty per cent. of light. A new clean piece of ground glass without stars, together with the dusty white glass background as in the preceding experiment, showed a loss of forty per cent. —Scientific American.

BLACKMAN—Mrs. LETITIA COSGROVE BLACKMAN was born in Ireland about 1830 (family record lost; exact date not known). She was early the gracious subject of pardoning and regenerating grace. She became a Methodist before leaving Ireland, about her sixteenth year. She came to New Orleans in 1846. She at once identified herself with the Methodists, at the Poydras Street Church. During forty-three years she continued faithful to her early vows, until God called her from the church militant to the church triumphant.

She was a model wife and mother; loving, kind, thoughtful, and gave constant diligence to her domestic duties. She spread out her open hands to the poor, who will rise up "in that day" and bless her. She visited and nursed the sick; was hospitable to strangers, and courteous to all. Long has the writer shared her hospitality and her Christian friendship.

She was married to Mr. J. M. Blackman (widely known as the principal of a commercial college) in January, 1854, by the writer, in the parsonage but a few steps from the house in which she spent most of her married life. Her last end was peace. She departed from the body to her heavenly home, December 10, 1889. A devoted husband and loving children mourn their loss; but their temporary loss is her eternal gain. Bishop Keener, Dr. Palmer, Dr. Carradine and the writer participated in the funeral services. Her memory will be as an ointment poured forth in a wide circle of friends. Her old pastor,

J. B. WALKER.

RAGAN—A. VANHOOK RAGAN was born in Dixon county, Tenn., June 30, 1828; married Miss Harriet Estes, in Wilson county, Tenn., November 14, 1850, and departed this life at his residence, in Montgomery, La., December 12, 1889. Bro. Ragan was received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by Rev. Robert Randle during his pastorate here in 1882. His last affliction was unusually severe, but he seemed resigned to the will of God, and expressed his willingness to depart and be with Christ.

Bro. Ragan was a true friend to the faithful preacher, and such ever found a hearty welcome to his home. He loved the old Methodist doctrine of scriptural holiness, and said it was what he heard preached in Tennessee when but a boy. He enjoyed Bro. Carradine's articles in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and the last piece he read aloud to his family was Bro. Carradine's latest in that paper. Judge Ragan was a true citizen, a faithful husband and father. He leaves a Christian wife, four affectionate children and numerous friends to mourn his departure. We feel that our great loss is his eternal gain.

CLARK—Died, December 7, 1889, in Hinds county, Miss., GEORGE W. CLARK. He was born in Northampton county, N. C., February 2, 1806, being eighty-three years eleven months and five days old at his death. He was married to Miss P. L. Jordan, April 7, 1825, and in 1841 came to Mississippi. His parents died while he was but a youth, and he was raised by a pious sister; and at the age of nineteen or twenty joined the Methodist Church, and from then until his death he met all the obligations of life in good faith.

I have been his pastor for the last three consecutive years, and when I state that he was a model husband and father, and a Christian gentleman, I speak whereof I do know. Gentle, chaste and pure, he impressed his religious character not only upon his children, but upon all who were associated with him either in business transactions or in the social circle. He leaves the companion of his youth and fifty or sixty children and grandchildren to mourn his loss; but they are fully indemnified by the heritage of a pure life and character transmitted to them; and a full assurance of his entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God. May great grace rest upon the family in their bereavement, and especially upon the aged and bereaved companion!

F. M. WILLIAMS, Pastor.

SWAYZE—Mr. A. B. SWAYZE, a sincere Christian, member and steward of the Jefferson Street Methodist Church, Natchez, and teacher in the Sunday-school, departed this life on December 13, 1889, in the twenty-seventh year of his age. He was much beloved by all who knew him.

At a meeting of the Sunday-school of the Jefferson Street Church the following resolution was adopted and directed to be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

Realizing the sad loss which we have sustained by reason of the death of Mr. A. B. Swayze, who was a faithful teacher in our Sunday-school, and desiring to express the deep sorrow of the school; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we, in patience, submit to the will of our heavenly Father, in taking our brother from his sphere of usefulness in this world to his eternal reward, still we mourn the loss of a devoted fellow-worker, a sincere friend, and a true man; that we hold his memory in sacred regard; and that we tender our warmest sympathy to his bereaved relatives. RICHARD F. REED,

RICHARDSON—ROBERT N. RICHARDSON was born in Mississippi, February 2, 1874, and died of pneumonia, near Delhi, La., November 25, 1889.

Robert was the youngest of the family, was much petted and loved, yet was courteous to all, agreeable and amiable in disposition. He was not only a favorite at home, but generally so, and especially at school. How sadly his school-mates missed him when absent and sick, and how they were shocked when he died! Appropriate resolutions were adopted by them relative to his death, which were published in the parish paper.

The deceased was a boy of much promise, but it is said that death loves a shining mark. He fell an easy victim to the cold touch of the great destroyer. His dying words were beautiful and full of comfort. Feeling impressed that the end was near, he looked to Jesus and found in him a Savior. Said he was going to heaven, and asked the family all to meet him there. He talked and sent back words of cheer from the brink of the last river. H. ARMSTRONG.

MILLER—Mrs. M. L. MILLER, wife of Moses A. Miller, of Carter county, Tenn., and daughter of Mrs. Samuel and Temperance Patton, of the same State, was called from earth to her final home on December 12, 1889. She died in Bolivar county, Miss. Four long months she lingered with astonishing patience and resignation till her pure spirit took its flight, responsive to the Master's call. During this long period of affliction the care and attention of her only daughter were almost marvelous. Taken sick with a slow fever, on a visit to her daughter's house, it was there our sister died. Words are too weak to express our sorrow and sympathy on such occasions.

May God bless the two sons and only daughter in this sore bereavement! O. L. SAVAGE, P. C.

FOURREST—MARY FOURREST was born August 23, 1877, in Caddo parish, La.; departed this life, December 1, 1889, in Red River parish, La.

Another pure white rose has been removed from earth and transplanted into the green fields of Eden; another pure white lamb of Christ's flock on earth has crossed the river. Another angelic spirit, another child of God, while smiling with the inward peace that the world can neither give or take away, has fallen asleep in the arms of Jesus, who will awake her on the resurrection morn with the glorious summons of the coming bliss. May God bless the bereaved parents, and may they meet her in heaven!

SUSAN STEVENSON.

SISTRUNK—SALLIE BELLE, infant daughter of David and Hannah B. Sistrunk, was born July 3, 1889, and died December 2, 1889, living nearly five months with her fond parents. God saw fit to pluck the bud to bloom in a fairer land. She has gone to him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." God wants to take the lamb in its purity. May the father and mother say, with David, My child can not come to me, but I can go to it.

M. L. BURTON.

BEARERS—S. C. BEARERS was born March 13, 1819; died November 18, 1889. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, forty years. He died near Cleveland, Miss., in Bolivar county. He was a man of his own convictions. He died as he lived.

May God bless his bereaved family! We hope that our loss is his eternal gain! O. L. SAVAGE, P. C.

THE WONDEROUS WEATHER PLANT.

This is the most marvelous plant ever introduced, the sensation of Europe, and the plant about which the scientific papers are saying so much. Its leaves truly foretell the state of the weather three days in advance, proven by many thousand tests. It is a most beautiful trailing or climbing vine, with graceful fern-like foliage and racemes of lovely flowers in great profusion. It grows quickly from seed, and is suitable either for outdoor or window culture, and in grace and beauty surpasses all other climbing plants. The Pall Mall Gazette of London says: "The remarkable Weather Plant (Abrus) continues to excite interest, and men of science agree that the plant is in truth prophetic. Thirty-two thousand trials tend to prove its infallibility. Its leaves by changing their position foretell the state of the weather three days in advance." The seed are bright scarlet, like beautiful beads. Our Catalogue gives full description, history, illustrations and newspaper comments. The Kansas Supreme Court, in a decision in the case of the State against W. W. Faulkner, sustained the prohibitory law. The case was brought to test the question of the sale of liquor in original packages transported from other States to a point in Kansas.

Employees in the Haverhill, Mass., shoe factories insisted on deciding methods and prices of work under threat of striking. The employers would not have it and the nine great shops shut down last week. Three thousand men out.

Governor McKinney sent to the Virginia Legislature, on January 11, a letter from London holders of Virginia State bonds, urging that a renewed effort be made to adjust their claims. The governor advises the Legislature to stand by the Riddleberger bill and amendments.

A terrific cyclone swept the city of St. Louis and its vicinity on January 12, and destroyed an immense amount of valuable property. A number of persons were buried in the debris of fallen buildings. Reports from the surrounding country indicate immense loss of life and goods. All telegraph wires were blown down at Memphis, Tenn. The cyclone, coming South, visited Sardis, Miss., where churches, stores and dwellings were unroofed.

A conference of the prohibition leaders has been called to meet in Grenada, Miss., on January 16.

Democrats of the House Committee on Rules are indignant at Speaker Reed's course in preparing a code of rules without consultation with the minority. His attempt to force their adoption will probably fail, as the radical plan he has marked out does not meet with the approbation of some members of the Republican party.

Clinton, Ky., has been almost destroyed by a cyclone. Fifty-five houses have been demolished, eleven people killed and fifty-three wounded. Heavy loss was also suffered at Moscow and Wickliffe, Ky. The damage in St. Louis by the great blow is estimated in hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Gen. A. M. West, member from Marshall, presented to the Mississippi Legislature, on January 13, a memorial advocating the abrogation of the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution.

FOREIGN.

The United States consul general at Berlin has reported to the Secretary of State that certain brewers in that country are exporting to the United States beer adulterated with salicylic acid.

While engaged in leading a raid on a Nihilist club in Moscow, the chief of the secret police was shot by a woman.

Michael and Maggie Boyce, who were passengers on the Servia on her last trip from New York, were arrested at Queenstown for having in their possession a revolver and a quantity of cartridges.

The remains of the late Dowager Empress Augusta were buried at Charlottenburg. The sovereigns of almost all foreign countries sent tributes of flowers.

In Bohemia there are 2,000,000 Germans and 3,000,000 Czechs. The Germans accuse Count Taafe of trying to make all Bohemia a Czech country, and in consequence of the success of his efforts in that direction they say that German imperial patriotism is disappearing. They assert that the German element, which is the largest and strongest national mass in the empire, has been kept down for ten years by combinations of the other elements made against it.

The secretary-accountant of the Debt Commission of Cuba was arrested in New York City for frauds on the treasury of that country, estimated to amount to $198,000. The fraud was commenced in the office of the public debt, following the usual official routine and ending with the payment of an amount of coupons of the redeemable annuities by the Spanish Bank of the island of Cuba, with a consequent loss to the treasury.

What "Peculiar" Means.

Applied to Hood's Sarsaparilla, the word Peculiar is of great importance. It means that Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from other preparations in many vital points, which make it a thoroughly honest and reliable medicine. It is Peculiar, in a strictly medicinal sense: first, in the combination of remedial agents used; second, in the proportion in which they are prepared; third, in the process by which the active curative properties of the medicine are secured. Study these points well. They mean volumes. They make Hood's Sarsaparilla Peculiar in its curative powers, as it accomplishes wonderful cures hitherto unknown, and which give to Hood's Sarsaparilla a clear right to the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered."

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

MY MOTHER'S BIBLE.

BY FANNIE MINOR MONTGOMERY.

My mother's Bible, precious book!
From whence my first, best lessons came,
Of mercy, wisdom, truth and love,
And rev'rence deep for Jesus' name.

My mother's Bible, precious book!
Though worn with use, and dark with age,
Its holy precepts still send forth
Their radiance from each sacred page.

My mother's Bible, precious book!
Her source of light, and life, and power,
Of hope and faith, of grace and peace,
And patience in the darkest hour.

My mother's Bible, precious book!
The hand that held it, long grown cold,
Points to its faithful promises,
And leads me upward as of old.

My mother's Bible, precious book!
Its wondrous truths shall live alway;
One jot or tittle alters not,
Though heaven and earth shall pass away.

My mother's Bible, precious book!
Her Savior's love and power divine,
To save and keep, I read and trust
My mother's Lord, her God and mine.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Mississippi.

Sam Jones on the Lottery.

REPORTED BY REV. WALTER DUNSTAN.

Escape from the sin of gaming or gambling. Do you reckon you could get a jury in New Orleans to convict a fellow of gambling? Do you believe there are enough men in this city, that you know personally, that never gamble a bit themselves, and, therefore, would be a good jury to convict some one else of gambling? I have been in these restaurants to get half a dozen oysters, and they have as many lottery tickets passing round as they have oysters. Let me tell you, my Bible says, in so many words, that whatsoever a people sow, that shall they also reap; and if there is anything in the sowing of these Louisiana State Lottery tickets for twenty years, you have a harvest of gambling in this city enough to make the devil himself tremble to look at. I will tell you that the man who will play "seven up," or buck a faro bank, is a gentleman and a scholar and a Christian beside a fellow that will sit down and buck against the Louisiana State Lottery. Ha! I could see you wince. I hit you that time. Gambling—why, they will gamble in this city from a million-dollar wheat or cotton deal down to a cigarette; the town is full of it. I heard a preacher on this platform say he came within an ace of buying a lottery ticket himself. That brother did not live in New Orleans.

Rumor says it, and I am never responsible for what rumor says, that the Louisiana State Lottery officials went to R. E. Lee, and said: "We will give you $10,000 a year for your name." He said: "My unsullied, untarnished name is my own. I am poor; but they have offered me a professorship in a college, and I will take that." You wait until some one else dies, and see if they will build monuments, and whether a nation will weep. Thank God for such a man as Gen. Robert E. Lee;—though the army which he led was not led to victory, as the world calls victory. I say to you, he is covered with glory and honor, and bewailed as no other man who ever died in the United States was covered and bewailed. I would to God that every general who ever led an army for the Southern cause was as pure in character and unsullied in practice as Gen. Robert E. Lee, whose monument rises to the sky in this city this afternoon.

The poor women of this city, the poor children of this city, and the poor cripples of this city, are kept poor every day and every year, that the coffers of this villainous lottery may be filled to repletion month after month, and year after year; pays no taxes, regards no law of God or man, has the whole city and State under its feet, walks over you, and the height of your ambition seems to be to put a little brick on the sidewalk to walk on. God help New Orleans to rise up and say, "We will be men, and this abominable thing has to come down." Absolutely without paying any license or taxes, it spreads its wings over this city and takes the clothes from off the backs of the children of this city, robs the poor, and yet we sit down and say nothing about it. Now, listen! If you say anything against the Louisiana State Lottery in this town, what you say will never be noticed. I have preached the gospel in forty or more of the biggest States in the Union; but this is the first time I have entered a city where they did not know I was there; never found it out. Hear me, my countrymen! I know there are powers that be that can say "Hush!" and "Stop!" and they do hush and stop; but, brethren, so help me God, in view of my final judgment before his throne, there is not enough money or men or devils in hell to crush the honest sentiment that leaps from my heart and conscience. If I were a member of the Louisiana State Legislature, I would vote against that damnable scheme for fear somebody would say, if I did not, that it had bought me. Of course, they can not buy a legislator; but some fool will go off and say you did, if you vote for it; dead sure. I will tell you what a lot of you little fools remind me of—an old cow grazing round all day and coming up at night to be milked. That is all they ever propose to do for New Orleans and the United States—"Come up, old cow; back your leg, and let me milk you." Gambling—that lottery leads to every sort of gambling; opens the gates; the gap is down. If the Louisiana State Lottery is an honest, straightforward thing; if the Louisiana State Lottery is a decent thing; if the Louisiana State Lottery is a beneficial thing, then I say to you, one of the leading pastors of this town, Bro. Carradine, ought to be in the penitentiary for slander and libel; but if it is a dishonest thing, and he has told the truth about it, it is time that the citizens of this State and city were getting their ears opened and their consciences aroused. The government mails will not let the stuff go through, if it knows it. Georgia has passed a law against it, Missouri has said it is a criminal offense, and absolutely old New Orleans remains quiet, and the balance of the Union is standing up and slapping you in the face. I would have enough pride to go and straighten myself before the other States of this Union.

Gambling—not only in that way, but in every other way, the devil is in the thing. Take an old greasy deck of cards, and go and sit down and play that. I think it is the most respectable way. If you are obliged to gamble, I commend the cards, because you do give the other fellow some sort of a show. It may not be better for you, but it is a great deal better for the other fellow. He gets to see the boodle after he has put it down; but in the lottery into the dump she goes, and that is the last of it.

John's Answer.

BY REV. JOEL T. DAVES.

The inquiry was sincere and respectful. Wonderful things had been done and said of John. His fame had gone up and filled Jerusalem. His preaching was of an unusual type. He was, as to dress, habits and manners, an unusual man. The people were in a state of expectation. Jewish prophecy was being fulfilled. Thirty years before the wise men of the East had come up to Jerusalem. Their visit had not been forgotten. A few, doubtless, remembered the dumbness of the priest and the birth of John. They had lost sight of him. They also remembered the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem. They had lost sight of him. Great events are brought to memory by answering great events. John was moving the whole world. People from all parts of the earth, great and small, attended his ministry, and were baptized of him. The Jews of Jerusalem—evidently a large number joined together—sent priests and Levites—prominent, important personages—to inquire about him. They went directly to John. They wanted correct information. It was an official, representative "commission of inquiry." It was not a matter of idle curiosity or speculation. The condition of the Jews, politically and religiously, demanded earnestness. They were looking for something great, and from God, the only source of great things. The beginning of the fulfillment of Jewish prophecy was in a strange way and in a strange place. They were anxious about it. John appears from an unlooked-for direction, preaching a new gospel in a new way, and seemingly without authority. His answer solves the problem of human agency in divine things. It was the answer of the true renunciant. It was the repudiation of self. It was in the spirit of real humility. "I am not the Christ. I am not Elias. I am not that prophet. I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness. Make straight the way of the Lord." He had a good chance of a little cheap notoriety. The people were ready, and on good grounds, seemingly, to accept him for more than he was worth. I suppose he was tempted to give a different answer. He was only a man. And men of God have been since John's day, and are to-day, thus tempted, and they yield to it. If any man, sent from God, had a right to say something of himself, it was John. "What sayest thou of thyself?" "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness." Only a voice. Have no name, no family connections, no reputation. He could have given a wonderful story. "I am the son of a priest, the child of miraculous birth. My mother was Elizabeth, a stainless, blameless woman. I am a blood relation of the Christ. I am the forerunner of the Son of God. I am spoken of in prophecy. I have been specially trained in retirement. I am John, come in the spirit of Elias." How different his answer!—"I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness." The secret of his power is in this dethronement of self, in this spirit of the self-renunciant. He said subsequently, "A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven." I am only "a voice." Not my own voice, but "a voice." Hear the voice; heed the voice.

Whether in this lesson or not, this thing is true: that any man, appearing among men, claiming a special mission from God, the world sends a "commission of inquiry" to sit on his case. It is an affront to the people of the world for any man, in such a way, to be on intimate terms with God. The earnest, zealous Christian; the devoted pastor, the consecrated man of God—all have the same question to answer. It may not be in words, but the question comes, nevertheless: "Who art thou? By what authority sayest thou these things?" It is intensified, enlarged, stressed in ratio with the circle the man fills, and the power he has. "Who art thou? What sayest thou of thyself?" Happy the messenger of God if he has John's answer. To-day he fills a place far higher than the one John filled. He is in the stead of Christ. He is in his place because it was expedient for us that he should go away. "I send you. Go; and as ye go preach, saying the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you. Into whatsoever house ye enter, if the Son of Peace be there, let your (my) peace (through you) be upon it; if not, let it return unto you again. He that receiveth you, receiveth me." Happy the divinely sent man if he has John's answer. He is powerless, as he comes short of it. If self-consciousness dwells within, he is stripped of his armor. He will be afraid of the people, or unduly bold. He will cringe before the rich and powerful. He will be careless of the poor and helpless. He will boast to himself of his learning, eloquence, position and following. He will be a self-seeker and a judge of his brethren. He will preach a gospel to others that he does not preach to himself. He will be a time server, and yet, it may be, not conscious of it. The only rule and law of this life and work is in John's answer. "A voice"—only "a voice." Christ speaking through me. The strange power of the most wonderful man in to-day's pulpit is found just here. He is without self-consciousness. Study, preparation, prayer, utterance, gesticulation, is the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Self is out of the way. A baby is always beautiful, no matter what position or attitude it assumes, because there is no self-consciousness. This man is always full of power, in the simplest utterance, for the same reason. In the many analyses of the man, I have never seen a correct answer given. I believe it is found in John's answer.

"Preliminary or Prevenient Grace."

BY "GILDEROY."

The grace of God which bringeth salvation was in the Father's heart before the worlds were made. It was "prevenient grace," because it went before, or was before, all things. This grace, or the love of God, was the procuring cause of salvation. This is free, unmerited grace. It existed before the fall of man. In view of the fall, as foreseen, grace provided for it—built "a platform of second probation" to catch the falling sinner. Into this estate, or upon this platform, our first parents fell, and here all the generations of men are born. They come into being under a covenant of mercy, and in the region of hope and of everlasting life. A state of nature, depraved though it be, is also a state of grace. It is a state of nature as modified by the grace of God, which was in Christ Jesus, reconciling all things unto himself before the worlds were made. But for this grace, doubtless, our first parents would not have been made what they were and as they were—would not have been allowed to propagate their species—"a race of devils incarnate." Indeed, we do not know what man would have been, or that he would have been at all, but for the provisions of grace in the divine mind when God contemplated making such a being. The race is corrupt and depraved, but not guilty. This corruption, this depravity, comes by a law of generation. "It is naturally engendered"—like begets like. No one can bring a clean thing out of an unclean. A depraved man generates depraved children, just as a mortal man generates mortal children; and the children are no more guilty of mortality than they are of depravity. Both are inherited, both inhere, both are natural. By an arrangement of divine grace children are born under a covenant of mercy, in a state of "initial justification." "As by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so," or in like manner, "by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

It is just here that Arminianism, later Wesleyanism, parts company with Augustinianism, later Calvinism, and also with Pelagianism. Arminianism says, "Children are born depraved, but not guilty;" Calvinism says, "They are born depraved and guilty;" and Pelagianism, as now understood, says, "They are neither depraved nor guilty."

By virtue of this prevenient grace of God man is endowed with consciousness, a conscience, and freedom of will. He knows, the Holy Ghost makes him know, that he is wrong—wrong in heart and wrong in life. He realizes the slavery of sin; but is inwardly conscious that it need not be, and should not be. Man is conscious of his responsibility for his conduct, his actions. He feels that he is responsible at the bar of his own conscience, and also at the bar of some higher being outside of himself. His understanding is darkened and his feeling blunted, and both enslaved by sin; but within himself, in his heart, in his innermost being, he realizes that his will is free, is not bound. His understanding and his feeling may be dominated by motives and by bad habits; but within himself he is conscious of power to have controlled these motives and to have ruled these habits. He is conscious that this state of slavery has the consent of his own will, and is, therefore, voluntary. In the inner self he is also conscious of the presence of a helping hand—a still, small voice inviting him to come out from the bondage of sin into the liberty of the sons of God.

These gifts and endowments are preliminary, prevenient, and they are the gifts of God's grace through Christ, the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, who quickeneth every man, and giveth light unto every man that cometh into the world. These endowments were procured for the race, and they are bestowed upon the race by the Father for the sake of his Son, who is the Savior and Redeemer of all men. If we may so speak, this is a preliminary quickening, a prevenient regeneration, preparatory to personal responsibility and the whole process of personal salvation. Prevenient grace makes man capable of co-operating with general or personal grace in the salvation of his own soul.

This fundamental tenet of Methodism finds the race of man where some other systems put individual members of the race after regeneration by a sovereign act of God, according to the good pleasure of his own will. We understand that God has done once for all for the race, what others hold he will do for none but for the elect. We take penitent sinners into the church because they are in a fair way to personal salvation; and others take them in because they are saved. Penitence, they hold, is one of the fruits of regeneration. We baptize our children because they are Christ's, and ought to be in his mark; are in the covenant, and entitled to the sign of it.

Æsthetics in Church Building, Tomb-Stones, Memorials, etc.

Without doubt, the Christian Church is at great fault in its tastes in church building. We have in all ages of the Christian Church shown vast variety in our houses of worship when money was plentiful—variety so criminal as to be subversive of spirituality, and absolutely at the cost of the only two important factors to be valued in church building—i. e., neatness and comfort. In rural communities poverty or parsimony, one or both, have led to the same result. The multiplied millions of misspent moneys for vain decoration would, if properly expended, have given the gospel to the whole heathen world before this, and, at the same time, have helped the poor to neat and comfortable houses in which to worship God. There is nothing so attractive, either in personal dress or in architecture, as "neatness combined with comfort." Gaudiness of dress indicates vain foppery in architecture, pride, arrogance, and folly. God smiles approvingly on neatness, combined with comfort, in everything. If possible, I would condemn more severely all tomb-stones, monuments, etc., placed over our dead; useless, vain, idolatrous, wicked in all their tendencies. A few violets on my grave is all I would ask, and more than I or any mortal deserves. Suppose we arrest the idolatrous practice of building monuments over our dead, and use the money in building memorial churches and schools—substantial, durable, neat, comfortable—in token of our kind remembrance of our dead, and in honor to God, by making our means available in promoting his kingdom here on earth. The cost of the useless ornaments on our churches, and the worse than useless monuments at the graves of the dead, would have paid for the world's conversion, perhaps, and more. How many bereaved parents are ready to remember their dead, and, in so doing, remember God's demands on them for the furtherance of his kingdom among men? RECTUS.

Letter from Los Angeles Conference.

Perhaps some notes from this land of "the setting sun," ever-blooming flowers and "eternal spring," may be of interest to your many readers.

One year ago, last October, I, largely on account of failing health, was, by Bishop Hendrix, transferred from the Southwest Missouri to the Denver Conference, and stationed at Los Cruces, in the southern part of New Mexico. After remaining nine months in this field, and seeing a beautiful brick chapel of ample dimensions for present purposes erected, I was compelled to leave on account of my wife's health. So I asked, and was granted a transfer to this, the Los Angeles Conference.

I came to this point in August last, two months before the meeting of Conference, and spent the time in the work with Bro. D. C. Browne, P. E., of this, the San Luis Obispo district. He was formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, but more recently of the Southwest Missouri Conference.

The Los Angeles Conference held its twentieth session in the city of San Bernardino, Cal., beginning October 2, 1889. It was a very delightful session. But little friction to mar the harmony of the occasion. The year closing had been marked with growth unprecedented. There was a net gain of 507, or thirty-three per cent., in membership, and a corresponding increase in church property of $27,000, or more. This record stands without a parallel in our church for the year, or in any other church, so far as I know. I see a statement from the editor of the Pacific Methodist, to the effect that the net gain in all the coast Conferences is fourteen per cent. For all this we thank God and take courage.

San Bernardino is a beautiful city of 10,000 inhabitants, situated in the head of the great San Gabriel Valley, seventy-five miles east from Los Angeles, and about one hundred miles from the ocean. It reposes like an emerald isle in an environment of rugged hills; is lighted with gas and electricity; has street railways and artesian water. All kinds of semi-tropic fruits and flowers grow to perfection here, while a few miles back from the city old "Grey Back" towers in lordly grandeur over the valley and lesser hills, in whose north canons eternal snows abide.

I was assigned to Ventura. It used to be San Buenaventura; but that was so long and unpronounceable. It was changed. Ventura is a good town of 3,500 inhabitants, and sits at the base of some coneal hills, where the famous Santa Clara and beautiful Ventura river valleys meet each other by the seaside. Our work here is but little over one year old. We have a good membership of about thirty-five in the town and near to it, and have a church-house in process of erection that will, when completed, be a beautiful edifice and convenient in all its appointments. We are very much embarrassed in our work here now for want of a suitable and commodious house to worship in. Three have been added to our number since Conference.

This coast has been visited recently by a severe rain-storm, the worst in its history; so deposes the "oldest inhabitant." Great damage was done by it. I suppose that within a radius of 100 or 150 miles from Los Angeles, as much as one hundred miles of railroad track was washed away, including many bridges and culverts, and in many places even the roadbed. Telegraph lines were broken; mails were stopped. So we, in this section, were nearly entirely cut off from the outside world for twelve days. Of course, church work suffered along with other interests. Yet Bro. Browne reports progress all through his large district. And like reports come from other parts of the Conference. The work in this country is slow and hard, mainly because of the meager support of the preachers. Our people here are as loyal and as liberal, according to numbers and means, as any I have ever known. But they need more help from the great church in the East to aid them in civilizing and Christianizing the ends of the earth that meet in almost every town on this coast. At any rate, we need the prayers of the church to sustain and help us.

VENTURA, CAL., Jan. 15, 1890.

CHRIST, THE DAYSPRING.—Christ, as the Dayspring, reveals man to himself. He shows to lost humanity its actual condition. Black and white are the same to us in the dark; but let in the light, and we see the difference at once. So, while men grope in moral darkness, they do not realize their sinfulness and need; but when Christ comes and flashes upon their soiled spirits the light of his own immaculate purity, they see their pollution, and feel that their best righteousness is as filthy rags. Furthermore, Christ shows to men the glorious possibilities that are open to them. He not only reveals man as he is, but also in what he may become. To discover to man the magnitude of his loss, the depth of his degradation, and no more, would only be to tantalize him and throw him into despair. Christ, as the Dayspring, shows how man may secure pardon, a new nature, and divine help and guidance to a better life, and then stands before him, revealing in the life of the one perfect man the true ideal of a real human life, and saying, "I am the way;" "follow me."

Christ, as the Dayspring, comes to reveal God to humanity. In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. He is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person. In Christ, God reveals himself more fully than ever before, in his hatred of sin, in his love for the sinner, and as the Guide into all truth. Let us beware of closing our eyes against the Light, or rejecting the proffered offices of the Guide.—R. R. Meredith, D. D.

SLEEP.

[illegible]

Sleep, dear, sleep, in dreamless calm!
The [illegible]
The sweet breathing [illegible]
Has plucked the very heart of life.

We float to thee on drowsy wings
When all the hard day's tasks are o'er;
And, when for us thy wide doors swings,
Our pain, our head, they are no more.

Sated in thy white encircling arms,
We dream perchance that we are blest;
Or, haply, drink the enthralling balms
That lead to deep unconscious rest.

Long, long, as lasts thy tender spell,
So long is sorrow put to rout.
All we forebode, desire as well,
In perfect peace is blotted out.

But that first moment when we don
Again our conscious life, begins,
To pour our heavy hearts upon,
Our fears, our follies, and our sins.

Hardly our eyes have caught the light,
Before the shape that left us last,
Stern Memory, stands upon our right,
And flings upon us all our past.

But sleep divine! surcease of pain!
One day there cometh, when no more
We wake to all the strain and stress
And tumult of this mortal shore.

But at the last, by thee embraced,
We find at length how sweet, serene,
Their rest who, all life's acts outplayed,
Wait at God's hands the new next scene.

The Louisiana State Lottery.

The friends of right and honesty are beginning to show their colors in the fight against that monstrous iniquity, the Louisiana Lottery. We have the pleasure to place before our readers the stirring resolutions of the Ouachita Assembly of the Knights of Labor. If there is anything that paralyzes labor in this land, it is this "legalized wickedness." Let every other assembly of this order and of every other labor organization follow the lead of this Ouachita Assembly.

MONROE, LA., Jan. 4, 1890.

Be it resolved by Ouachita Assembly No. 4590, Knights of Labor of America:

That the "Louisiana State Lottery" is a blight upon the fair name of our State.

That its continued existence is a menace to the moral well-being of the commonwealth and every citizen thereof.

That the dishonorable and dishonoring celebrity attained by this institution—the outgrowth of political rottenness—has made the name of our State a by-word among its sisters.

That a knowledge of this fact, brought home, must cause the cheek of every true Louisianian to tingle with shame.

That the quasi-moral obligation which induced our representatives at the convention in 1879 to incorporate it into the present State Constitution no longer exists.

That the citizens of every parish in the State should demand of their senators and representatives a public pledge to vote against its perpetuation, or—their credentials.

That we urge upon every Assembly and every Union, and every sub-Alliance, and every organized body of men and women, of whatsoever kind, throughout the State the importance of early, prolonged and persistent effort, if we would deliver ourselves forever from this tenacled octopus; monstrous in its proportions and confident of its prey.

That we earnestly request the public press—educators of the people and moulders of public opinion—to denounce it, and to refuse its columns for the dissemination of its sednctive "schemes."

That we hereby pledge ourselves, individually and collectively, to work against and vote against every aspirant for public suffrage who does not place himself squarely in line with the people in this battle for the honor and dignity of our commonwealth.

That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the Telegraph-Bulletin, Farmers' Union and Experimental Farmer, with a request to publish.

A. BENOIT,
R. H. ENDOM,
Committee.

These resolutions have the right ring. Let everybody rise up and help in the good work of killing this monster.

Rev. J. G. Sibley's Loss.

On the ninth instant the house in which Bro. Sibley was living, at Guinsville, Miss., with all the groceries and a large part of the furniture, was destroyed by fire. Bro. Sibley is left in painful destitution, and will suffer unless immediate help come from his brethren. It is well known among us that Bro. Sibley was one of our most active and useful preachers when he had health to work; but now his health is gone, and almost everything he had is in ashes.

I feel that a mere notice of his loss and present condition is all that is needed. I am sure his many friends and brethren, clerical and lay, will gladly assist him in his great time of need.

Any money sent to Pearlington, by registered letter, to me, or to Rev. J. G. Sibley in my care, will reach him. Bro. Sibley lives ten miles from Pearlington; but I will convey money to him at once. T. W. ADAMS.

PEARLINGTON, Mississippi.

Winter Melodies.

BY REV. I. M. GRACE.

As I was riding to an appointment, the last Sunday in December, my road lay through the hill-lands of North Louisiana. It was a bright autumnal day, such as only the milder climate of the Southern States can furnish in mid-winter, and the trees were stripped of their foliage, which lay scattered upon the ground and damp with the dews of the preceding night. As I descended the hill-side my road wound along the bank of a small stream, near which some evergreens shone with their bright, green leaves in contrast with the bare trunks of the deciduous trees around them. My horse stopped to drink at the little pool of fresh water, where the road crossed the stream, and, in the stillness of the forest, I heard the low, sweet notes of a bird. It was a timid strain, and did not break forth with the exulting freshness of spring, when the tribe of feathered songsters seem to know that winter is over, and when the whole choir awake into universal praise. Then it may be said, "Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice." But not so now. One bird sings, and that softly. It is only to say that all is not dead. A voice speaks from the tomb of nature's buried host, and tells of the resurrection to come. It is like the strain of some old prophet who caught a glimpse of the future glory, and who, solitary and alone, cries: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out her dead!" Welcome, sweet strain of hope to a heart long dead! Prophet of the resurrection, though too early to realize the fulfillment of thy own anticipation, I hail thee as the herald of good things to come. Thou art the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight.

By way of contrast with the surrounding desolation, nothing could be sweeter than the voice of that bird of song. It came up from that unextinguishable feeling of hope and cheerfulness that dwells in nature's profoundest depths. God hath not left himself without witness in that he doeth good and sendeth rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. Such is the language of the apostle, when addressing an audience of gloomy-minded heathen. Every voice of song that cheer the winter of our discontent is a witness that God is good. It may be easy to believe this in the springtime of life when all the groves are filled with melody, but he also giveth songs in the night. There ariseth light in the darkness. He giveth strength to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength. "Come unto me, ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Let anyone who is in trouble read that section of the Psalms, beginning with the fifty-fifth and on to the sixty-fifth. If this does not satisfy him, let him read the one hundred and nineteenth, and on, including the one hundred and thirtieth. Then let him skip about and read the the forty-second and forty-third; then the third chapter of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and, finally, the Book of Job, and he will learn the meaning of these songs in the night, these winter melodies.

Ring out the care, the want, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times,
Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

When Moses descended from the mount and saw the people worshiping the golden calf, he threw down the tables of the law and broke them to pieces; but when God covered him with his hand in the cleft of the rock and proclaimed the name of the Lord, he bowed down and worshiped.

To the Members of the Ministerial Educational Aid Association of the Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: A note just received from our treasurer reads: "I have settled our young men's board at college as follows: One to January 20, one to January 28, one to February 1. There is left in the treasury only $21.50." This is just enough to pay the board in full for two, leaving only $1 50 to pay on the board of the third, all three of which will be due within three weeks. Besides this, I have in my possession the application of a fourth young minister, with a most pressing request from himself, pastor, and friends, for aid. His case is now being considered by the Board of Managers of the association, and, thus far, all is favorable. But this will require the expenditure of $40 every month until June 1. It will take nearly $150 to put us through the session with our present number of young men. Can not all those brethren who did not make a payment on their notes this past year, do so now? You will do the association great service in relieving it of its embarrassment, and help some worthy young men to prepare for the work of the itinerant ministry.

To those interested in Christian education, not familiar with the workings of this association, I will add: that the Ministerial Educational Aid Association of the Mississippi Conference is simply a band of ministers and laymen (only a few laymen thus far) giving their notes without interest, and cancelled at death, promising to pay a certain amount—$5, $10, $25—on such a matter every year for the purpose of aiding young ministers, who are unable to school themselves, to get a college education, so that they may be more useful in the service of their Divine Master. Blank notes with all information will be cheerfully furnished to anyone desiring to help us in this work. For the year ending January 1, 1890, we spent over $240. Contributions will be received if you do not wish to give your note.

Indian Mission Again.

At the last session of the Mississippi Conference, which met at Crystal Springs, December 18, 1889, the Missionary Board indorsed my method of raising money by private subscription to support a missionary to preach to the Indians in Mississippi, and also gave me $20 from the missionary treasury to help in the good work. Many thanks to the Board! I also received much encouragement from the brethren, as the following list of names and amounts subscribed will show, to wit:

*And more to follow.

The above list, added to names reported before, make seventy-five names on list, and amounts to $262 25 due on first year, and about $150 running through five years; and many of the brethren promised more to follow, that would not say how much; and many promised to send that would not put down their names. So I feel much encouraged in the good work. And may the good Lord abundantly bless all that have helped in this great work!

And now, brethren and sisters, you that have not assisted us any yet, please send on your names with amounts you are willing to help us, always stating whether for one or five years; and please help us at once, as Bishop Galloway promised to see about a missionary at once (a Choctaw from the Territory), and we want to put him to work immediately. So please send on names and amounts to me at Cato, Rankin county, Miss.

We will have to have about $200 more, as we will have to bear the expense of the missionary from the Territory here. So let the names come on at once, and let us roll up the whole amount at an early day, and let everybody pray for the success of the mission. I trust brethren travelling circuits where they (the Indians) live will commence at once to talk to them and preach for them as often as possible, for by so doing they can greatly assist in the work. The old theology made God a tyrant. A later theology has made God a father. The theology of the future will reveal him as he is—both the Eternal Father and Eternal Brother.—Bishop Vincent.

Another Missionary.

I am truly glad you have succeeded in raising the $1,000 for missions. Dr. Lambuth's cry from Japan is enough, it seems to me, to stir any heart that has the spirit of Christ or the love of man. They are begging for the gospel, and Christ died that they might have it. Can we call ourselves the followers of Jesus or friends of the perishing and heed not their piteous cry?

We hold in tender remembrance the parting words of our friends as they bid us "good-by" in the shadows of the grave and go up to the home prepared. Many children have been led to repentance and salvation by the father's or mother's farewell words. But do we hear the parting words of Jesus as he gives his farewell message to his disciples?—"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Oh, how they ought to stir our souls. The Savior had prepared this plan of redemption at great sacrifice, and, in leaving, he committed the distribution of the treasures of his grace among those for whom he died to our love, honor and obedience.

If we love either him or them, we will not fail to bear the good news. If we are obedient to the voice of our Master, whose servants we are and whom we profess to serve, we will not refuse to obey his command. If we have a scriptural sense of honor, we will not hold the inheritance of the world in our keeping, while the heirs of salvation die for lack of the grace provided for them on the cross and entrusted to our hands for them. When a heathen dies in sin and is lost for want of the gospel, how will it go in the judgment with us who have failed to do our duty in carrying him the light of Christ?

As a church and people, we are just playing at missions. The idea of a church with over a million members paying only about $250,000 (i. e., twenty-five cents apiece) in a whole year to save the millions of immortal souls for whom Jesus died, who are dying in heathenish darkness! It is a shame upon us. The gospel of Christ is a gospel of giving. God gave his only begotten son. (John iii, 16). Christ gave up all the glories of heaven to try the lowly walks of earth and endure the death of the cross for us. (II. Corinthians viii, 9; Ephesians v, 25-27). And remember there was no limit. He tasted death for every man. (Hebrew ii, 9).

Our daily prayer is intended to put us in line with God's mighty effort to save the world. "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Do we mean it? or are we mocking the living God, the crucified, the risen Christ, when we say this prayer, and then contribute our pittances to bring about the answer? Such a prayer on our lips and such giving as we average to the work of missions, seem to mock the Son of God as he sweats, as it were, the great drops of blood in Gethsemane, pours out his blood on the cross and gives his parting command, "Go ye." When will we get in earnest? When will the poor bring in their fives, tens and twenties, and the rich hundreds, yea, their thousands, to lay down at the feet of Jesus, where he may hallow it with his blood, and, accompanied by the prayers of all, send it on its mission of light, love and salvation to the ends of the earth? Oh, for the baptism of the Holy Ghost to bring it to pass!

I have a proposition to support a missionary for a year. I will fill all orders for my books at the retail rates, as below, and give the entire amount to the support of a missionary in Japan. My books are going off well. Over 20,000 of them sold. No order filled for less than $1, and with the cash on this order.

1 "Leaves from the Tree of Life." 312 pages, cloth, $1.

10 "The Holy Day," 61 pages, paper, $1.

10 "Why I Do Not Immerse," 68 pages, paper, $1.

20 "St. Paul on Holiness," 20 pages, paper, $1.

Parties ordering can take as many dollar's worth as they choose up to the $750 necessary to support a missionary a year. They can then sell the books for their money or distribute them as they choose. Address,

High Female Education.

There is on the eastern border of the region claimed by the ADVOCATE a Methodist institution which deserves more frequent mention in the paper's columns, not on account of wide and costly halls filled with multitudinous pupils, because these it has not; but on account of the effort there made to raise the standard of female education in Mississippi. Among the marked changes made when the present management took charge of the East Mississippi Female College, was the extension in a modest manner of the course of study so as to require for graduation an additional year's hard work. It was not known that the effort would be sustained, but it met approval from all the patrons, excepting one or two who were in favor of quick and shallow education. To-day, though other schools may excel in some respects, it stands at the head of the list as a literary institution, and bids fair, if only allowed full play to revolutionize this branch of female education in Mississippi. At present the college is filled. It needs greater facilities in the way of buildings. This piece is written, however, simply that merit may be aided in having its deserts of the fair opinions of men, that the readers of the ADVOCATE may know and, if occasion presents, encourage. The writer, though a mere observer, has learned enough to know the comparative merits of the institution. GABRIEL.

Houston, Miss.

One year ago we had a most pleasant reception by the kind people of Kosciusko, among whom we spent one of the happiest years of life. Their kindness continued to the last moment of our stay among them, and on leaving their attentions and expressions of love were so overwhelming as to make us reluctant to part with such people; but, after introducing our successor, Bro. Moody, a good and true servant, we came, according to appointment, to Houston, to receive a full and hearty reception. The parsonage was at once refurnished and repaired (and the good work continues); but, on last Friday evening the climax was reached. During the morning friends began to send their good things, and in the evening here came men, women, children and servants with their generous expressions of love and good-will. The evening was spent in a way to make all happy; but the best of all is, we had a real religious time. Rev. John Walker, of the North Alabama Conference, read the Scriptures and led in prayer (what a prayer it was!—inspiring and refreshing), and then came experiences and expressions becoming the occasion.

Mr. Editor, we are passing through another oasis of life. The assembly dispersed, feeling that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." The work of the charge opens well, and bright prospects are before us. These are among the best people in the world. May we all have a happy and successful year, and when life's labors are ended meet above!

Centenary College.

Over one hundred and thirty sons of Louisiana and Mississippi Methodists are attending Centenary College at present. The majority of this number are unconverted. The Christian students are making special efforts to lead the whole student body to Christ. The revival has already begun, and we believe we are going to have a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit in our midst.

We held our first service on January 12. The Lord was with us in convicting and converting power. Now, we would request the readers of this paper to pray earnestly and daily for us who are directly engaged in this work, that we may be directed by the Holy Spirit, and that the revival may continue to spread until every student shall be brought under its influence and be led to accept Christ. A STUDENT.

Woman's Department of Church Extension.

OUR ANGEL BAND.

BY LUCINDA B. HELM.

I was deeply touched when it was reported to me that at a meeting of the Woman's Department of Church Extension in Kentucky Conference, life members being called for, a dear mother gave the $20 for life membership accompanied by the name of her little daughter who had passed from this world.

The first thought may be, "Can one be a life member who is dead?" But, Christian friends, is she dead? Are we not assured she liveth evermore—that death hath no more power over her? It was a beautiful act of faith, prompted by a mother's love that had passed with her darling beyond the grave. And it shall stand. Anale Neale Oldham shall be the first life member of "Our Angel Band," which we shall establish in remembrance of this loving act of faith, that all who may desire in this way to recognize the angel of the household as one of a band that, though unseen, unheard around us stand—bound to our hearts by love stronger than death, and encouraging us in deeds worthy to be recorded by angel hands—may, as this devoted mother, send to us as members of "Our Angel Band" the name of the loved one who, having "entered life," may now become truly a life member. We will record and report the names of these members as of others. They are valued members, whose influence shall be felt by all, whose work shall be to stir our hearts with loving zeal. For it is a sweet thought that they are members with us in our good work. The presence of members so pure and undefiled who, though so near us, behold the face of our Father, will surely banish from our midst all insincerity, jealousy or unkind thoughts. These members, by raising our eyes to heaven, will serve to remind us we stand before the Most High God, and that the blessed Savior, from whom we can conceal no thought, is in the midst of us; as he has promised to those who love him.

Our loved ones being thus associated with us in our work will help us continually to realize,

"They are not dead, though unseen."

It will lift up our drooping hearts and clear all clouds away to be ever reminded, "There is no death," that we are not passing through a weary vale of tears to finally sink into the tomb, but we are going toward life. Nearer and nearer we are coming to the time when we shall follow them

"Out of the shadows of sadness,
Into the sunshine of gladness,
Into the light of the blest.

"Out of the world of the waiting,
Thronged with the anguished and ailing;
Out of the world of the sad,
Into the world that rejoices—
World of bright visions and voices—
Into the world of the glad.

"Into a joy-land above us,
Where there is a Father to love us,
Into our home—Sweet Home."

Genius in the Ministry.

The only kind of genius worth having, is willingness and ability to do hard work. Any other conception of genius makes it a doubtful, if not a dangerous possession. The greater part of the world's work is done by men of average capacity, but of more than average industry. Doubtless, the possession of this degree of industry indicates the possession in some sense of more than average capacity. Industry is capacity; tact is talent; work is true genius. The average man is the numerous man, but unfortunately he has not always extraordinary industry. The man who had two talents and who made them other two, received as great a reward as the man who had five, and who made them other five. The Napoleons of finance, and the so-called geniuses in literature, are men to whom the world owes but little. The man of average capacity with a dogged perseverance, is the hero in life's battle. Equally true is it that this kind of a man wins the noblest victories in the ministry. As a class, ministers are hard workers; but even the hardest workers might do more work. They need to study division of labor, economy of time, and employment of labor-saving helps; especially do they need to put themselves under the pressure of decisions and engagements to do more. Often tasks are performed under this latter necessity which otherwise would never have been done. Occasionally we must put spurs into our sides, but with all this pressure one often feels utterly dissatisfied with himself for having accomplished so little. It must be admitted that many pastors touch life at but few points. They seldom speak outside of their own parishes; seldom write for the press of their own denomination, and never for the secular press. Are they great readers? If so, neither the world nor the church has any proof of their attainments. Are they devoted pastors? If so, their churches give but little evidence of their diligence. Must we not all admit that we all need often to be stirred up to put forth all our powers? Any pastor who has been a reasonably diligent student for fifteen or twenty years in the ministry can do, at least, four or five times as much work as when he began. But the hardest workers blush when they think what gigantic tasks some of the great men like Calvin and Luther were able to accomplish. We all need more of the genius of hard work; with this grace in active exercise in the home, the study, the pulpit and the parish, there would be a vigorous advance along the whole line of church work.—Christian Inquirer.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

First Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON V.—February 2.

Jesus Brought into the Temple.
Luke II, 25-35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.—Luke II, 32.

TIME.—B. C. 4.

PLACE.—Herod's temple.

25. A man in Jerusalem—In times of spiritual degeneracy, when an official clergy no longer cultivates anything but the form of religion, its spirit retires among the obscurer members of the religious community, and creates for itself unofficial organs, often from the lowest classes. Simeon and Anna are representatives of this spontaneous priesthood. Simeon—Some writers have identified this with a very memorable Simeon (or Shimeon) in the annals of the Jewish scribes, the son of Hillel, and the father of Gamaliel. He became president of the Sanhedrin, A. D. 13. There was an aged Essene of this name living at the time of Herod's death, who rebuked Archelaus for marrying his brother's widow, and prophesied his downfall, and who more nearly fulfills the conditions; but the name was so common that all conjectures are very precarious. Just and devout—Two elements recognized in Mic. vi, 8, as all that the Lord requires for the perfection of character. The word "devout" emphasizes the element of circumspection; a cautious, careful observance of divine law; and is thus peculiarly expressive of Old Testament piety, with its minute attention to precept and ceremony. Consolation—"May I see the consolation of Israel!" was a common Jewish formula, and a prayer for the advent of the Messiah was daily used. The Child of whom Simeon spoke called himself the Comforter, and promised his disciples to send them another, who should bear the same name. The Holy Ghost was upon him—Simeon was the subject of an especial indwelling and leading of the Holy Ghost, analogous to that higher form of the spiritual life expressed in the earliest days by "walking with God," and according to which God's saints have often been directed and informed in an extraordinary manner by his Holy Spirit. In the power of this intimation, and in the spirit of prophecy consequent on it, he came into the temple on this occasion.

26. It was revealed—Literally, it was having been revealed. The word here used implies that the revelation to Simeon had been given in answer to prayer. See on Matt. II, 12. The Greek word is the same as that rendered "warned" in Matt. II, 12. It implies a divine oracular communication, but rests on a different idea from the "unveiling" which lies at the root of the word "reveal." Christian legend says that he had stumbled at Isa. vii, 14, "Behold a virgin shall conceive," and had received a divine intimation that he should not die till he had seen it fulfilled. Should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ—Sweet antithesis! How would the one sight gild the gloom of the other!

27. The parents—Here, as in vers. 33 and 48, St. Luke does not shrink from reproducing what was obviously the familiar phraseology of the household of Nazareth. In common life it is almost obvious that no other phraseology was possible. The word "parents" is simply used to indicate the character in which Joseph and Mary appeared at this time in the temple and presented the child. Brought in the child, to do for him after the custom of the law—In common practice, the child would have been presented to the priest who offered the two turtle-doves on behalf of the parents. In this instance Simeon, though not a priest, takes on himself, standing by the priest, to receive the child as he was presented. This fits in, as far as it goes, with the idea of his having been an Essene, revered as possessing prophetic gifts.

28. Took he him up in his arms—Immediately recognizing in the child, with unhesitating certainty, the promised Messiah, without needing Mary to inform him of what had happened to her. And said—His swan-like song to God has been celebrated for its beauty in all ages of the church.

29. Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace—Rather, Now art thou setting free thy slave, O Master, according to thy word, in peace. The central idea is that of the emancipation of a slave. In peace—On leaving a dying person the Jews said, "Go in peace." Otherwise they said, "Go to peace," as Jethro did to Moses. He now bids an eternal farewell to this terrestrial life.

32. To lighten the Gentiles—Rather, for revelation to. A memorable prophecy, considering that even the apostles found it hard to grasp the full admission of the Gentiles, clearly as it had been indicated in older prophecy. The idea is strictly that of the withdrawal of the "veil spread over all nations" of Isa. xxv, 7. The secular and unspiritual masses of Jews fell into the fanatical and arrogant notion that Christ was to be merely a circumscribed and exclusively Jewish Messiah; the twelve apostles could hardly be made to resign that notion. Even after the resurrection it took the independence of a martyred Stephen and all the powers of an inspired Paul to assert the full rights of the Gentiles in the church of God. Scholars have said that in the work of opening the gates of Christianity to the Gentiles Stephen was the forerunner of Paul. Might it not be said that Simeon was the forerunner of Stephen, and the Gentile Luke the historian of both? Yet the true doctrine on the subject is explicitly and repeatedly declared not only here, but in the prophecies of the Old Testament. In this song all is original, concise, enigmatical, even as the words of an oracle. In these brief pregnant sentences is contained the substance of the history of future ages. Neither the hackneyed inventions of legend nor any preconceived dogmatic views have any share in the composition of this joyous lyric.

33. Joseph—The undoubted reading is "his father." In verse 48 we have Joseph again called "his father." Our Lord would not speak of him thus (see ver. 49); but in the simplicity of the narrative we may read "his parents," and such expressions, without any danger of forgetting the momentous history of the conception and nativity.

34. Set for the fall and rising again—The Christ is seen by Simeon as the stone on which some fall and are broken, while others plant their feet upon it and rise to a higher life. For the fall of many Pharisees, Herodians, Sadducees, Nazarenes, Gadarenes; and for the rising—a savor of life unto life—of all that believed on him. In some cases—as that of Peter and the dying robber—they who fell afterward rose. A sign which shall be spoken against—The participle is the present; and the expression does not voice a probecy, but describes an inherent characteristic of the sign: a sign of which it is the character to experience contradiction from the world. In the beginning, as a babe, Jesus experienced this at the hands of Herod; so all through his earthly ministry and on the cross; and so it will be to the end, until he shall have put all enemies under his feet.

35. A sword shall pierce through thy own soul—The peculiar word used for "sword" here occurs in the Apocalypse, but not elsewhere in the New Testament. It was the large barbaric sword used by the Thracians, as distinguished from the shorter weapon of Roman soldiers. The announcement of the special sorrow that was to be the Virgin Mother's portion comes as the sequel to "the sign that is spoken against," the antagonism which her son would meet here. Not, as Lightfoot: a prediction of Mary's martyrdom; nor, as Schaff and Wordsworth, a reference to her agony on beholding the crucifixion of her Son; nor, as Alford, a foretelling that she also must know the agony of sorrow for sin; but, as the connection implies, a declaration that she must know, with others, a rising and falling. Her hopes for the emancipation of the nation, the reformation of the people, the immediate glorification of God through the Son given unto her, are destined to be overthrown; she will hear his unmitigated prophecy of the destruction of the temple and the holy city; will see him rejected, scorned, crucified; will see the nation given over to increasing anarchy and corruption and the wrath of God; and will rise from her desolation in the destruction of all her anticipations only when, in answer to the days of prolonged prayer (Acts i, 11), the Spirit is poured out upon the church, and she, with others, begins to see the length and breadth of the kingdom that knows no end.

Missionary.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: It is hard to give up old habits, and, if you will allow me, I will make a short report of the work done in my district since Conference. The Bishop authorized me to take Bro. D. F. Watkins with me on the first round, to help me out of the difficulties of a limited knowledge of the language, and to hold special meetings. Up to this time we have traveled about seven hundred miles, visited twelve cities and towns; held twenty-six services and six Quarterly Conferences; attended eight school examinations; received 106 members into the church on profession of faith, and baptized twenty-four children. We think this a pretty good six weeks' work, and the best of all is, the work begun goes on, and we expect to reap good results on the next round.

My daily prayer to God is, that we may be able to report at the next Conference a net increase of three hundred in the Mexico district, and I believe we shall do so. If I had the money to secure places of worship in cities and towns where they are pleading with us to give them the gospel, I am confident we could report five hundred or a thousand. Never have I seen people so eager for the gospel, nor so ready to accept it as their only hope of salvation. Of course, to do this work one must not fear trials, hardships, nor even the dangers that environ health and life. We have ridden in rain and hail-storms to get to our appointments, and, cold and wet, slept soundly on our hard beds and dreamed of conquests for the Master. But no suffering we endure is attributable to any want of interest in us by our Mexican brethren. They always give us the best bed and the very best to eat they have. I have never witnessed a more loyal and loving devotion to our blessed Lord than I have seen in Mexico.

But, oh, Doctor, in Christ's name, and for his sake, I plead with you, I beg you, send us more men and money. We must grow or die. To stand at what we now are is impossible; to move upon the enemy and take the field for Christ without an increase of men and means is equally impossible. We need live men from home and the money necessary to make their work effective in this field. Can we have them? Will the church give them to us? I have always loved and worked for the cause of missions; but I never knew before with what fear and hope the missionary looked to the meeting of the Board. The constant thought is: Will they be able to help us? Shall I be authorized to take the gospel to this and to that town, where the people are pleading with us to come? Or must I repeat the oft-repeated answer to their entreaties?—Not yet; but we hope to come. To us this question is to be answered in May, and from us the answer must go to thousands of anxiously awaiting souls. And what shall the answer be? Tell us, church of the living Christ—What shall the answer be? "And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us."

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan. 3, 1890.

Country Churches and Missions.

BY A. B. LEONARD, D. D.

The cities and large towns have been heretofore largely relied upon for missionary money. These places have been visited frequently by Bishops and missionary secretaries, and they have advanced handsomely in contributions to the missionary treasury. Many of these will advance still further, but there is a limit beyond which they will not go.

The time has come when the churches in the smaller towns, villages, and country places must be called upon to advance their contributions to this great cause. To this proposition the objection will be made that these country churches have a hard struggle to pay their preachers' salaries and other current expenses, and that therefore but little should be expected of them in the way of benevolences. It will be found, however, that in many places this hard struggle arises not from want of ability to do better, but the disposition.

From personal observation I am prepared to say that, in proportion to wealth, the average country church does not pay as much money for benevolent purposes as the average city church. An increase of the benevolent contributions in these churches will increase their willingness to pay more largely for current expenses. Nothing so unfavorably affects the prosperity of the church and hastens its death as the lack of the benevolent spirit. Paul recognized benevolence as a grace, and exhorted the Corinthian Church to abound in it (II. Cor. viii, 7.)

A revival of the benevolent spirit in many country churches would be the beginning of a new spiritual life that would result in wide-spread revivals of religion. Many of these churches are dying out, not because they can not do anything, but because they lack the energy to try. A revival of interest in the cause of missions will start them on a career of victory.—Gospel in All Lands.

Temperance.

Growth of Temperance Sentiment in High Places.

A correspondent who interviewed a number of the eblef ladies of Washington, as to their use of wine on New Year Day, gathered some interesting notes. Mrs. Secretary Proctor said she should keep open house, but there would be no wine served. The same position was taken by the wives of Secretaries Windom and Noble. "I shall not serve wine at any of my receptions or dinners," said Mrs. Noble. "Two or three years ago in St. Louis Mr. Noble wanted to give a dinner in honor of some judge. He felt that he could not give it without some wine. I said that there should be no dinner then. Well, he gave the dinner without wine, and the day following one of the guests 'congratulated him on his courage. 'Don't praise me,' said he, 'it was my wife who had the courage.'"

Said Mrs. Attorney General Miller: "I have never served wine in Indianapolis and I shall not do it here New Year Day." Said Mrs. Secretary Rusk: "I shall have coffee, bouillon and chocolate, but no wine upon my table on New Year Day. When I was here some years ago, I saw many a New Year caller who showed the effect of too much drinking." Said Mrs. Chief Justice Fuller: "I shall never serve wine at another New Year reception." Mrs. Senator Sherman, who has been in Washington for over thirty years, says she has never served any kind of wine on New Year Day. Said Mrs. Senator Hawley: "Dear, no! I never have anything else but tea at my New Year receptions." Said Mrs. Spooner: "The young woman or girl who offers any of my sons a glass of wine, will personally affront me; for that reason I never serve wine at my receptions. For the sake of other women's sons, for my boy's sake I never keep wine in my house, nor drink it at any other house. It was a hard struggle when I came to Washington to refuse wine at a dinner; it was difficult then, it is an easy matter now. I always allow the butler to fill the first glass, so that attention will not be attracted to my plate; then when he comes with the other wines I put my finger on my glass, and he passes me." The wives of Senators Stockbridge, Quay, McMillan, Fry and Wilson also offer no liquors to their guests.—Advance.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Fellowship and Consecration.

St. Paul was a master in the use of language. He could write a biography in a line. The Christian character has been sketched by him in seven little words—the whole character, with all that wonderful word means: "For to me to live is Christ." That is the whole of it. Take that character upon any or all of its outreaching lines and trace back, and you are brought up against Paul's statement: "For to me to live is Christ." Here is not only the foundation of the Christian character, but the very conditions out of which it must grow! Here is the bud which, under proper treatment, will evolve into the beautiful flower! Here is the spring whence will flow the refreshing streams that will supply the wants of the enlarging spiritual nature!

There are two ideas which these words of Paul suggest. They suggest intercourse and consecration; intercourse with Christ, and consecration to him. In this intercourse the Christian has the advantage of all other men, for as it is intercourse with unsullied light and immaculate purity, its direct tendency is to expand the intellect and to purify the affections. This is a "philosopher's stone" which transmutes everything it touches into the pure gold of unalloyed enjoyment! It is the divine alchemy which throws into the crucible of God's providence the discordant elements of every-day life, and they emerge bright and beautiful blessings! It is the elixir that pours along the channels of the soul streams which water and feed the truest life on earth! While this intercourse is kept up—while the Christian continues to familiarize his mind with the grandest thought, the noblest conception that was ever placed before the human intellect, and to keep his heart in contact with the most lovely object of personal purity the world ever saw—his mind will keep growing in breadth and strength, and his soul will keep expanding and rising higher. As he goes from point to point, searching into and experiencing the deeper things of his Lord, thought will take a wider range and affection a broader sweep. "From glory to glory" he will go "as by the Spirit of the Lord."

This intercouse with Christ is the measure of consecration to him. All men have not—indeed, very few men have—the experiences of Paul. His first intercourse with Christ was, perhaps, the fullest he ever had, and his untiring and unwearied consecration to Christ dated from that day. His reception of the revelation on that day, in its wonderful completeness, was the reason for his life-long and earnest consecration. All do not attain the knowledge of Christ in the same way. As a rule, the acquisition of knowledge is gradual. We learn our friends slowly, and our intercourse and consecration to them is graduated accordingly. Knowledge of Christ precedes intercourse, and intercourse goes before consecration. We can only be consecrated to that which we love; we can only love truly where we have knowledge of the object. Hence, the Apostle Peter's injunction is: "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The principle of consecration is announced in Paul's words: "For to me to live is Christ." Christ, by his revelations of his love and sympathy, having won our affections, the result is a consecration of our lives to his service. This consecration is our own act, prompted by the love that has been awakened in us by the knowledge of our Lord's character. In one sense it is a constrained service, but the constraint comes from the domination of love. Love is the only real ruler in the universe. All other rulers are tyrants, and all other rule is tyranny. The more we learn of the loving character of our Lord, the more does love for him take possession of our souls, and this results in a corresponding intensifying of our consecration to him. In our life these things can not be separated. What we need, then, is unrestrained intercourse with our Lord, that we may "learn" of him, in order that our spiritual powers may be quickened and our capacities enlarged, so that love for him may expand through our whole being and constrain all our faculties and energies and talents to a devoted consecration to his service.

The direction which consecration takes is a matter of no small importance. Some persons seem not to have made a distinction which is very obvious. It seems to us that consecration is not merely the setting one's self apart for a certain purpose, but it is the accomplishment, as far as possible, of that purpose. It respects not merely the being, but also the doing. A man must be a Christian. He must do duty. Consecration is the doing duty. Here again the constraining power of love shows itself. "Love worketh." If a man loves he will work for the object loved. Love is all activity. The more earnest the love, the more stirring the activity.

Consecration, then, if true, shows itself in intense activity for the cause of Christ. "The zeal of thine house eateth me up," is the language of truly consecrated souls. Consecration that is all inward or subjective is no consecration at all. Here, as everywhere else, the rule of our Lord applies: "By their fruits ye shall know them." Words are not "fruits." Confessions or professions are not the evidences of consecrated spirits. Active service, doing duty heartily, helping those who need help, and other such things, are the only proofs of consecration. These things are so plainly taught in that fearful teaching of our Lord in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, that the wonder is that it is overlooked at all. In that chapter the profession and the consecration are contrasted in a way that is enough to alarm the most careless.

After all, what we need in these days is the Christianity of Christ, the Christianity that not only believes, but is consecrated to living up to the professed beliefs. We need the mind that can say truly: "For to me to live is Christ."

Some Random Thoughts on Rev. Sam Jones.

I firmly believe that to thoroughly delineate Rev. Sam Jones would be next to an impossibilty, unless one had a phonograph to reproduce each tone, with instantaneous photography to reproduce each gesture, and every phase of pose or action. The writer saw Rev. Sam Small laughing uproariously at the Seashore Camp Meeting when Jones was preaching, in the summer of 1886, when both those evangelists were there. He thought it smacked somewhat of the hackneyed laughter and the regulation applause with which the members of the ring greet the jokes of the clown in the circus; so he said: "Bro. Small, it is rather too thin for you to laugh so at Sam Jones. It savors too much of the claqueur. You have heard that sermon of Bro. Sam Jones many a time before this occasion." "Well," said Sam Small, "Sam Jones may preach from the same text, but he never preaches the same sermon twice."

So it may be, that with a wise and liberal adoption of possible appliances, Sam Jones may be measureably reproduced, but the admiration of much of him must be lost to posterity.

If photography had progressed so far as to take continuous pictures, without flaw, haziness, blur, or break, as the phonograph will copy tone in faithful continuity, one great aspect of Sam Jones could be caught; for no pen can ever portray those finer traceries of expression that flit over his face; those exquisite pencilings of feature-play, delicate tints and hues of expression, that display the marvelous mobility of his lineaments and are noticeable only by the practised eye, or by a remarkable natural aptitude of observation. So transitory, ephemeral are many of these lights and shades, that they are comparable only to the flitting and delicate tints on swiftly-moving, filmy cloudlets, that catch an instant's hue from full moon, as they course over its disc for a moment, and are gone forever. And yet could photography operate consecutively, it is still demonstrable that there are aspects of action it could not catch. Thrills, shudders, tremors are not within the category of its capabilities. Let me illustrate one point where it would break down in seeking to "hold the mirror up to nature, and reflect the orator in question." He is narrating a scene where a young minister, true to duty, and new to his congregation, has preached the gospel with great fidelity and force. A horrified and time-serving old steward of the church, who consults only a shallow expediency, and the dictates of abject subserviency, takes the young minister aside, and says: "My brother, you must not be so plain. You offended two of the most principallest members of our church, and they threaten to leave and join elsewhere." A fear-quake shuddered over the minister, and he promised never to do so again. Bro. Jones mimicks him; and his voice had a piteous whine, in thin and piping treble through the subjugation of his dread, and he vibrated with simulated dread from top to toe, as a long, slender pole trembles from top to bottom when struck at its base. And most wonderful was the way his knees fluttered, as the quivering heart of a little scared bird, or with the electric suppleness of vibration of a snake's tongue. How anyone ever acquired such facility of knee-quivers is the mystery. No photography could portray the tremors. His penchant for mimicry is so strong, and his proclivities and powers carry him so far, that he will even imitate the brute creation. He spoke of a dog caught sucking eggs; and his expression of face, of sneakish meekness and meanness, and the crouching, fawning, supplicating mien, and the abject, shame-faced ducking of the head, were a picture of a thievish, cowardly cur to the life.

It is easy to infer, therefore, that this minister is one of the most dramatic of orators. His affluence, liveliness (almost exactitude) of personation are almost incomparable. And, as this imitation or self-transmigration often involves voice, gesture, feature-play, and their harmonies, his wealth of dramaticism are almost incredible.

It seems as though one could write a book upon the pliability and responsiveness of the lineaments of Sam Jones. That plastic physiognomy had hardly ever an equal. Tremors of flexibility, thrills of plication possess it at times, and sway it to and fro under the gusts of emotionality and breaths of sentiment, as the waters of a placid lake are sent here and there by the wind. This minister has many tears in his voice; but there is no

"Fruitful river of the eye."

Never did one see an orator more free from the pitiful paralysis of tears, the apoplexy of overwrought sensibility, the sad futilities of mastering lachrymoseness. But though his tears may be only of the heart, and rise not to the eyes, your eyes are fountains of tears as he sounds the deeps of sensibility with the plummet of his pathos.

Although, occasionally, this orator is very poetic and ornate, it is not to vindicate himself from the charge of slatternly phrase or pulpit puppetism. Finally the "primrose path" opens up the temple of the Most High, and you are at last reverentially ushered therein. There is no mere pageantry of phrase, dress-parade of diction, holiday mood of speech, no tournament of oratory. His periods, which may have shown their bravery of attire in the phalanxes of rhetoric, are soon marshaled for deadly affray, and give battle in terrible assault; and what seemed begun in pageantry, ends in holy victory.

Jones has a great love of antithesis, and a fine sense of contrast, and a prodigious and lavish use of it. It is, perhaps, the most striking of his intellectual characteristics; and if it were not so masterly, one might say it was grandly adroit. He balances fun against pathos. He piles high a towering mount with peaks of roaring merriment and side-splitting humor. Over against, he builds the hights of pathos, until there seem two great mounts of equiponderance, as it were. Or, to dismiss figure of speech for the nonce, he plies and kneads the risibilities, until receptivity is wide awake and impressionableness has ascendency; mellowing and relaxing sensibility by humor, thawing out stolidity or indifference, and paving the way for pathos to engrave itself upon the now plastic heart. Then pathos slides in, like a stream of balm, and floods the melted heart, as the genial sparkling sunshine of spring breaks up the ice of the brook, and sends it melted, and singing a pæan to its bright, beneficent deliverer. This foreshortening and perspective of oratory, we think, is the unteachable art of nature, the facile felicity of genius. But be it art or nature, or both conjoined, one had as well complain at the art of Praxiteles in a statue or Claude Lorraine on a canvas. *

The Revival Services.

Wednesday evening was stormy, but about a thousand people assembled in the hall, to engage in the services. The choir, under the leadership of Prof. Excell, sang several fine pieces with great effect. Prof. Excell's solos are much enjoyed by all who hear them, and the impressions they leave are of the most lasting kind. Many of our singing people regard Mr. Excell as a singer superior to anyone who has visited New Orleans, and that is saying a great deal.

Bro. Jones took for his text the words of Solomon: "He that being often reproved and stiffeneth his neck shall be suddenly destroyed, and that without remedy." His talk was plain and pointed, and his warnings sounded as if they came up from the very borders of the pit of destruction. The consciences of hundreds of "often reproved" sinners were touched as with fire, and many came forward and gave the preacher their hands and the various pastors their names, thereby signifying the intention to heed the reproofs of God.

On Thursday evening the evangelist spoke from these words: "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he can not sin because he is born of God." He showed the princely character of the Christian, his purity and his imperviousness to sin. The hackneyed old excuse, that "we are obliged to sin," was picked to shreds under the merciless sarcasms of the preacher, and there was not a professor of religion in the hall, preacher or layman, who did not take on a big disgust for his own failures to live up to the law of God. We apprehend that the sermon of that evening will do good long after the evangelist has gone to his reward. On Friday evening the evangelist spoke on St. Peter's chain of Christian virtues, dwelling principally and with tremendous power upon the virtue of "courage." He showed the great need of that virtue in the life and work of the Christian professor of to-day. He pointed out so plainly the ridiculousness of the courage of nine-tenths of the members of the church in the matters of speaking and doing and giving for the cause of right against wrong, that hundreds in that vast audience hung their heads in shame. We have never heard such an arraignment of the church for moral cowardice. The preacher evidently believes in "grit," and practices what he believes. So great was the grip he took on the audience, that when, at the close of his searching sermon, he made the proposition for everyone who had determined to evince more courage in Christian living to stand up, nearly everybody in the house rose and stood. Evidently the sermon had its effect.

There were no services held on Saturday. Everybody rested and recuperated for the work of Sunday.

Sunday evening a great crowd assembled in the hall. After a day of rest the people seemed to be recuperated. Bro. Excell and his choir entered with spirit into the singing, which was rendered with great effect and power. Bro. Jones spoke from the words in Revelation: "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely." The spirit of preaching rested upon the preacher, and his simple words found their way into many hearts, and at the close many gave him their hands in token of their resolution to lead better lives. Surely good was done.

At night the great hall overflowed with people eager to hear the evangelist. The seats were all filled and hundreds of people stood during the entire service, while many went away for want of room. The preacher was "in the vein," and gave forth a tremendous sermon on, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotton Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." This was, by far, the best sermon Bro. Jones had preached up to that time. The audience was as silent as the grave, and listened with breathless attention, except when moved to laughter by the speaker's witty illustrations, or to tears by his pathetic incidents related. His putting Christianity and infidelity upon the witness stand, and questioning each as to what it was doing for the good of the world, was a master-stroke.

When Christianity kissed the Book and averred that it was doing everything that divine wisdom could plan and divine love could execute for the uplifting of the whole human race, and infidelity confessed that its only work was to fight Christianity, the divinity of the one and devilishness of the other was plainly seen by every person in the vast crowd. At the close, at least 2,000 people stood up, and said: "We will help with all our might to push forward this work during the coming week." Surely it was a grand time, and it was good to be there.

Monday night the preacher discoursed on the words of Paul: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." The Word was with power. About half the large audience remained to the after-meeting. There were several exhortations and prayers, and we heard of several conversions, and there were about forty names taken of persons beginning a better life. Thus ended a week's work, and the results have been gratifying to those who know the temper of this great city. For our part, we have never heard such faithful, direct and sharp-pointed preaching, and we doubt not it will be as a leaven working for a long time to come.

Notes.

The sermon on Tuesday night from the text, "What shall it profit a man if he should gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" was original to the degree of uniqueness, and most thrilling. The venturesomeness of the dancer, the tippler, the play-goer was graphically portrayed as that of a person on the slate roof of a six-story building, whittling with a pearl-handled knife which accidentally fell from his grasp and lay a few inches from the verge. Thither he groped after it and fell to the pavement below, a jellied mass of flesh and bones, but not until he first secured the glittering trophy and exulted in its possession. "What," he added with tremendous emphasis, "will it avail the dancer to have danced and the tippler to have drunk, if they must circle in the orgies of the damned forever and drink the vials of Jehovah's wrath eternally?"

The somewhat strong expression in last week's paper, referring to Bro. Jones' irreverence for merely human things and merely human folks, was quite twisted out of the connection by those who understood it to have any reference whatever to his treatment of things sacred or divine.

Bro. George Stuart, in his preaching, humbles himself that he may be exalted, and at the close there is always a vision of sun-crowned heights hearing up the impassioned preacher and of ministrant hands reached down from vistas of light beyond. His preaching is the oratory of nature, and he bears to it the relation of a speckless, yet voiceful medium. Long may he preach!

The evangelist, on Wednesday evening, in the course of some animadversions on the Lottery, threw out the remark in which wittieism and erlticism were blended in about equal proportions, that that famous institution had laid everything under tribute that our beautiful city contains except the newspapers.

In one of the famous after-talks some of the good sisters were described as preachers who did not always take a text; frequently, a pretext was enough.

Professor Excell is a general favorite with those who attend the meetings. He leads the music grandly, and his solos bring down the house. His wife accompanies him, and is as great a success in her quiet way.

Nothing more impressive than Bro. Jones' sermon to men only, on Sunday afternoon, was ever heard by any of the favored hearers. A thunderbolt loaded with dynamite would not be too strong a figure to express it.

The sermon on Friday morning, reviewing Alexander the Coppersmith, was a grand effort of inspired humor. How true that his illustrations illustrate! Its peroration was most pathetic, and revealed to the rapt hearers the depths of the great bleeding fountain whence flow the "living streams," mirthful and tearful, that have fed the hopes and curtailed the griefs of multitudes of grateful hearers, North and South, and East and West.

Friday morning Bro. Excell sang by request, "The Model Church," and the large audience wept in harmony with the sweet, sad strain.

Bro. Bowen, the sweet-spirited Mississippi revivalist, filled Bro. Jones' place Wednesday morning, and Bro. Stuart's Thursday afternoon, to the regret of very few.

The Lottery gets an apostrophic benefit at every service, and there was a decided sensation and suppressed applause when, on Thursday night, the evangelist unsealed an envelope in the presence of the audience and took from it a half-dozen Lottery tickets, while he read from an accompanying note: "With the compliments of McGinty."

A Little Piece of Logic.

When the Sam Jones' meetings began in this city, the Picayune gave a tolerably fair report of them. This report, however, grew smaller with each day. It was noticed by everybody that every reference made by Mr. Jones to the Louisiana Lottery was rigidly excluded from the report. When, on Sunday, Mr. Jones gave that institution the excoriation which we print on the first page of this paper, the Picayune quit reporting altogether, and has not alluded to the meetings since. The inference can be drawn by a child: The Picayune favors the Lottery, and is against any movement that would break it down. Our thousands of readers in Mississippi and Louisiana will make a note of this inference, and if they think it is correct and true, they can not give their support to a paper that supports the most wicked abomination of this country. "He that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds." (II. John xi.)

Journalistic Enterprise.

Very few people have a proper conception of the amount of courage necessary to conduct a public journal. There have been many displays of this virtue in the history of journalism in this country, but the most remarkable display was made by the Picayune on Friday, the seventeenth instant, when it published an account of the Sam Jones' meetings in this city, taken from a paper published in Summit, Miss. Considering the environment of the Pic, the distance it had to go to get the news, the expense attending the dangerous experiment and the fearlessness with which the news was heralded forth to the thousands of its readers in its personal columes, the heroism of Leonidas at Thermopylæ, Napoleon at the bridge of Lodi, Washington at Moumouth, pales before this display of courage! As Sam Jones says, "My! my!"

Our New College Library.

THE FIRST FRUITS.

The express brings me a full set (twenty-four volumes) of the Encyclopedia Britannica for the library of our new Mississippi Methodist Male College. This is the generous gift of Bro. D. L. Mitchel, business manager of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and is the first contribution to our book-shelves. The present is valuable and highly appreciated. To the liberal donor I return a thousand thanks.

With an endowment fund secured and a library well begun, before a site is selected or a brick laid, we have assurance that the college will have strong foundations and be judiciously administered!

North Mississippi Conference Notice.

To All Concerned—

DEAR BRETHREN: On Thursday, January 9, Bro. T. B. Malone, the publisher of our Conference Minutes, sent off the manuscript to our Publishing House. He hopes to have the Minutes out by the middle of February. Bro. Malone has prepared the manuscript under much difficulty, writing in bed, suffering from fever and a distressing bronchial cough. He very much regrets the delay this has given to his work; but his brethren will know how to have patience and to remember him in their prayers.

Important Notice.

All applications for aid to the General Board of Church Extension must be on file in our office on the first day of April, 1890, in order to secure attention at our annual meeting. They can not be tabulated so as to give a full and fair hearing to each in less time than we have allowed, and hence the rule of the Board which will be rigidly enforced. Blanks for application for help by gift or loan for churches or parsonages can be had free by addressing

The Inter-Ocean says: "Theology seems to be largely occupied with the task of explaining away all that is miraculous in the story of Christ."

Personal and Otherwise.

One of Jones' diamonds: "Seventeen years ago my father was buried away from human sight. Since that time I have seen him in my dreams an hundred times, and the light of life was sparkling in his eyes and the glow of health was blooming upon his cheek. He is not dead!"

The West Baton Rouge Sugar Planter has published the resolutions of the Louisiana Conference against the Lottery.

Mr. Moody was holding revival meetings in London, Ontario, last week.

A sister: "The months I lingered at death's door were brightened by the weekly visits of the ADVOCATE." We are grateful to be called to minister to the sick to their comfort.

A presiding elder: "I do greatly enjoy the fresh, stirring spiritual editorials you give us. You and the ADVOCATE are growing on our people. God bless and strengthen you!" Such expressions do us great good. Thank God for praying helpers!

It is said that there are ninety members of the present Congress who were in the Confederate army, in stations varying from private soldier to major general!

Mr Edison is said to have made a contract with the Mexican government to establish a phonographic postal service.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, pastor of Madison Avenue Church, New York City, wrote a sentence in the Independent, last week, that will fit some preachers in this city. Here it is:

Our inability to do that which men of less schooling sometimes show themselves so richly competent to do is quite possibly one reason why some of us who are clergymen do not fellowship the presence among us of revivalists even of such a stamp as Mr. Moody. Ministers are human, and it is a reflection upon us to have a layman or an irregular preacher, or only an imperfectly educated one, bring ten men to Christ while we are only half bringing one; and even the joy at having ten souls saved does not entirely draw the sting of the mortification.

If you want your people to have a full and correct account of the doings of the General Conference that is soon to meet, press upon them the fact that our paper will give the best account to them that they can get. Use this point in your canvass for the paper.

The new Methodist Church in Cold Water, Miss., will be dedicated by Bishop Galloway on the second Sunday in February. We congratulate our friends there on the completion of a new house of worship, and pray the Lord's presence there continually.

A private note from Bro. E. H. Galloway, of Alexander, Ark., gives us the cheering intelligence that since his removal from Louisiana his health is very much improved.

It is said that in England and Wales there are 765,000 more women than men!

If the church is really dying out in this country, as some people are constantly saying, why don't they just let it die? Why keep on saying over and over, again and again, "The church is dying out," "the church is dying out"? Why not let it die once for all?

Eyre and Spottiswoode, Bible publishers in London, are quoted as saying that there are now upwards of 200,000,000 copies of the Bible in circulation throughout the world.

That is to say, if you were to count two Bibles every second day and night, it would take three years and two months to count them all.

Dr. W. G. Austin, who several weeks ago had a fall which disabled him, is rapidly improving, and we are glad to state that he thinks he will soon be able to attend to his duties.

We are indebted to George Wharton, 5 Carondelet street, for the January North American. Two giants, Gladstone and Blaine, are pitted against each other on the tariff question, and they make things quite lively.

The Mid-Continent says:

Whosoever is not willing to work a great deal for nothing is not likely to succeed. The apprentice has to work for nothing to learn his trade, and then work years "doing journey work" before he gets full wages. Writing and speaking for nothing is doing apprentice work. You ought to be thankful, if for pay you can get an audience to come and listen to you and let you practice on them.

The Alabama Advocate:

Some brethren, who literally do nothing for the Advocate in their charges, are ready to rail out on us if we fail to put in their pieces in the first issue after their reception at the office.

Sam Jones:

I have said that the saloons in this city were the greatest enemies of the young men and the greatest friends of the devil; but if I were the devil, I would sooner have every saloon in the city run out than that the Lottery Company should be stopped.

The Police Jury of Lincoln parish has adopted a stringent prohibition law. The penalty fixed for violation is "not less than $250, nor more than $500 fine."

This about Boston churches shows the missionary spirit of Christians "at the Hub." The Mid-Continent says:

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, states that ten of the largest and strongest churches of that city last year spent $19,000 for church music, and gave $5,000 for foreign missions. On which he makes the comment that "the church has come to be valued by many simply for the amount of enjoyment it can afford to its members, not for the amount of sacrifice and service it can move them to put forth."

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in most cases, in-mediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. P. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beliot, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers." C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

MASON & HAMLIN

The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since and including that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers, of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 to $900

PIANOS

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity GRAND & UPRIGHT, for standing in tune and other important advantages.

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, including artists, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

THE CHILD'S REBUKE.

The pet of the household had overslept.
While breakfast was waiting below;
And his auntie was chiding the little boy
That he was in dressing so slow.
A shoe-string was missing, a button was off,
And everything seemed out of place;
The clouds of discouragement gathered around
The dear little fellow's face.

At length his toilet was all complete,
But the little boy still delayed.
And cried, "Dear auntie, I can not go down
Till my morning prayer I've said."

"Wait till breakfast is over," his auntie cried.
"For once it will not be wrong."
The little boy, startled and grieved, replied,
"What, keep God waiting so long?"

Snip and Snap.

We have two little dogs, named Snip and Snap. One has a little blazed face, and the other has little blue eyes. When we go to their house-door and look in at them, they will jump out and run after us and catch hold of our clothes and tear them. They are about ten weeks or three months old. They will get on the back gallery and cry until we come and pick them up, and, after we pet them a little while, they will be very quiet and go to sleep. But if they hear the least bit of noise, they will jump out of our laps and gallop all over the house, and bark at everybody they see. We put them in a wagon and ride them all over the yard, and if anybody is behind the wagon pushing them they will bite their fingers and make them leave the wagon alone. They will not bark at night and keep everybody awake. When we put them in their box at night they will lie down very quietly and go to sleep. These two dogs belong to Warren Black and myself, and we have good times with them. Warren and I have a carpenter shop, and we made our dog-house out of an old goods box mother gave us, and when it was done our dogs jumped in, and I wish you could have seen what a cunning pair they were.

Doctor, come to see our dogs, and we will show you what tricks they can do.

ETHELBERT H. GALLOWAY.

MR. EDITOR: Some time last summer I wrote you a letter, and I am encouraged to write again by your having published it. On December 18, Conference met, and Dr. William T. Beall carried a paid-up report, and he was sent back to us. The people were all glad to have him back. I think he was pleased to have his same work again. I enjoyed Christmas holidays very much. I received three very nice presents: a book from Dr. Beall—"A Girl's Journey through Europe." Mamma gave me a nice book also—"Young Folks' Travels through Europe," by "Rip Van Winkle." Mamma and the Doctor did not know that they were getting my books so much of the same nature. Grandma gave me a nice dressing case, which I prize very much. During Christmas I went to Jackson and attended a Christmas entertainment at the West Jackson Methodist Church. The exercises were opened with singing and prayer by Mr. D. A. Little. Quite a number of little children recited little pieces and sang little songs, which were very interesting. After a short talk from Mr. Little, the exercises were closed. Then Mr. Laird had several little boys to distribute small sacks of fruit to each child in the house.

I have something real funny to tell you. Yesterday evening, as I came from school, Dr. Beall had his cart ready, and we took a ride up to Forest Hill Church, where Miss Cora McRee was teaching school. A short while after we arrived she dismissed the scholars. After a little while Cousin Jeff Crisler rode up, and Dr. Beall united them in matrimony before the church altar in the presence of a few persons who came to witness the ceremony. Don't you think that was a funny way to get married and dismiss the school? This is the second marriage I ever attended. Yours truly,

MADIE E. LEWIS.

JACKSON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I call to bid you a happy New Year. The roses are out, the jonquills and violets, and even the snow-drops and peach flowers, and the little birds are hopping and seem to think spring is coming. I am only a little girl eight years old. I have a sister, Lula, ten years; a brother, Cleveland, five; a sister, Mattie C., three; and two twin brothers, eight months old; one named Marvin, the other Brasher. It is warm and rainy. Grandpa preaches for us. Sister and I go to church and sing. My only pet are a doll and a bird. I clean up the house for mamma, and sweep and clean up the yard. Papa and mamma are very fond of the children. Grandpa takes your paper; his name is R. F. G. Davis. With a little girl's love, I bid you good-by.

MARY SUSAN LEE.

GRAND LAKE, Arkansas.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never seen any letters from this community, I thought I would write. I am a little girl six years old, and have one very sweet little sister. Papa takes the dear old ADVOCATE, which we could not do well without. I can not read myself, but get papa and mamma to read the little cousin's letters for me. I am going to study hard, and do not think it will be long before I can read for myself. Mr. Barr is our pastor for this year. I will close by asking where the word "gold" is first found in the Bible.

Your little friend,

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to your good paper, I want to write a few lines. Papa takes your paper. I like to read the little children's letters in it. Bro. T. S. West is our pastor for this year. I think we will like him very much. Bro. John Rembert is the superintendent of our Sunday-school, and we like him very much. Mrs. Sallie Watson is my Sunday-school teacher. I like her very much. I will close by asking the little cousins where the word "butter" can be found in the Bible.

The Orange.

"Here is a nice sweet orange for you," said nurse to little Ida one day; "but be sure not to swallow the seeds."

Ida made a little hole in the orange and began to suck it. It was very juicy, and she liked it very much. But when she was almost through with it, she happened to swallow a seed.

She ran to her nurse Mary at once to tell her about it.

"Will it grow inside of me, nurse?" she asked.

Nurse Mary laughed. "Wait and see," she said. "If you find a little orange-tree coming up, you must tell me."

One morning Ida's mother saw her standing before a mirror with her mouth wide open. She was trying to see down her throat.

"What are you doing, Ida?" asked her mother.

"I'm looking for my orange-tree," answered Ida, tears in her brown eyes; "I'm afraid it will choke me when it comes up."

Mamma did not know what Ida meant, and she laughed very much when the little girl told her about the seeds she had swallowed. She told Ida there was no danger that a tree would grow from it.

But it was a long time before Ida forgot what nurse had said, and for many weeks she was often seen standing before a mirror with her mouth wide open, looking for that orange-tree which might come up after all.—Little Men and Women.

SHUTTING UP HER FOLD.

BY SUSAN TEALL PERRY.

The fire burns dimly on the hearth;
The light is turned down low;
And wintry winds through bare old trees
In fitful gusts sob blow.
The mother pulls the curtains down
To keep away the cold;
Tucks tightly in the children's beds—
She's shutting up her fold.

She covers up the little hand
Thrown o'er the coverlet;
She wipes the place on baby's cheek
Which one stray tear has wet;
Kisses the little ones who sleep,
And smoothes the hair of gold;
Then kneels and "prays the Lord to keep"—
She's shutting up her fold.

O little ones, fenced round secure
With mother's love and care,
What looks of peace and trust and joy
Your sleeping faces wear!
Outside to-night some children who
Are tall and large and old,
Are wishing they could be once more
Sheltered in mother's fold.

Running Away.

A lady who does not believe in the present "high pressure" system of work and amusement says that she owes her placidity of disposition and her capacity for endurance, to an old habit of running away.

"When I was a child," she says, "I had a notoriously hot temper. As soon as my mother saw one of the 'fits' coming on, she used to say gently, 'Perhaps you'd better run away a little while, dear.' Then I would take my sled, or my little garden hoe, according to the season, dash out of doors, and stay there until the evil spirit had passed by.

"We kept up that little habit, my mother and I. I entered the young ladies' seminary of our town, and there I worked very hard, but, unlike many of the girls, I did not break down. Whenever my mother noticed that my forehead was beginning to tie itself up in a knot over my books, she would say:

"'Run away for an hour, daughter. The sunshine is very bright, and I want you to go out and soak yourself in it.'

"Of course, I didn't always want to go, but mother could be firm as well as indulgent, and the result was that I did a great deal of running away, either to bed, or into the open air. The other girls kept themselves awake on coffee, in order to study late at night, and some of them did outstrip me in book knowledge. Still, I came to believe so fully in my mother's prescription, that I made it one of my rules of life, and I am consequently one of the people who have 'Lived to fight another day.'"

A DAY IN BED.—A writer in a medical journal remarks: "The surest, quickest, and most sensible way to cure a cold is to go to bed and stay there. But," he adds, "not one American in fifty will apply the remedy. We are too busy. We would rather risk losing our life than lose a single day. Therein we are fools." For other things than colds a day in bed is a most excellent specific. For certain forms of nervous impairment, nothing will more readily restore the balance than the forced rest and quiet of a few hours in a recumbent position. The exigencies of life often necessitate overwork. The father of a family may be engaged in a business which, at certain seasons of the year, is very taxing. The mother has to meet extra burdens of sickness or company. The children are pressed with school work, and show by their irritability that the nervous force is being overdrawn. Better even than a holiday, as a restorative in such cases, would be the prescription herein recommended. Nature is elastic, and can stand a great many shocks if only the nervous system is given time to recover between them.—Evangelist.

Fifteen contestants clad for the fray
Armed with good steel and in battle array,—
Striving for lucre, as brave Knights of old
Strove for their honors and medals of gold.
Driving each shining pen over the paper,—

The praises of remedies known the world over—
From Paris to Calais from Calais to Dover;
But each Knight valuly strives—language fails in description
Of the manifold virtues of "Favorite Prescription."

The Mental Torpor Remedy.

Complete intellectual torpor is recommended as a remedy for overweariness by a writer who, to sustain his view, brings pertinent illustration to the support of argument. Such a condition is almost superstitiously avoided by hard-working men, who are disposed to regard it as a waste and an idle indulgence. But "there is no more harm in intellectual torpor for the sake of the mind's health, than in sleep for the sake of the body's health; and its duration ought to be governed only by expedience. . . . As to the curative effect of torpor, we have no doubt whatever. So far from the mind being weakened by total rest, or the energies diminished, both wake after a time fully recovered, and repossessed of the old readiness to exert themselves to fatigue. 'I am tired,' says the cured man to himself, 'of doing nothing'—that is, he has recovered the power to do things easily, which is the mark of mental health. The mind itself is, in fact, often positively stronger, having grown in its sleep as the body grows, and having, so to speak, resharpened its weapons, till the 'lazy' mathematician can not only solve his old problems more quickly, but can recollect them more accurately, the mind having gained, as in boyhood it gained, from sleep. We can all recollect how in school-days the lesson of the evening was often best known on the following morning, although, if torpor weakens, we ought in the intervening twelve hours to have invariably lost some slight grip of the words, instead of gaining a fresh one. The memory in particular recovers under this process in the most amazing way, so that even the permanent weakness, the slowness of recollection which comes of advancing years, seems to disappear. The grand gain, however, is in mental nerve, in the disappearance of that apprehensive anxiety and sense, not of strain which is, but of strain which is coming, that, far more than actual toil, however severe, shatters men's powers to pieces. But how is torpor to be attained? Like everything else, by determining to have it—that is, by a presistent resolve to be lazy, to do nothing, read nothing, think nothing, and say nothing, that involves the smallest upspringing of the sense either of trouble or of effort."—Popular Science.

SOLAR MOTIVE POWER.—One of the most notable inventions displayed at the Paris Exhibition was an apparatus for transforming the heat of the sun into motive power for pumping water, and other mechanical uses. It is the device of a French inventor named Charles Tellier. This apparatus is of great interest, as foreshadowing the time when solar heat, in combination with electric transmission of force, will be made to furnish motive power for all engines, and take the place of coal and steam—a change which will vastly cheapen manufactures and travel, and greatly enhance human comfort the world over. The heat which comes to the earth in the sun's beams is, as has long been known, the equivalent of from one to five or more horse-power for every square yard of the earth's surface, according to the latitude and the season of the year. The utilization of this waste heat, its conversion into usable power, has been the study of inventors, and much time and great sums of money have been spent upon it. M. Tellier's contrivance aims to accomplish this object.—Swedesboro News.

HOW LONG TO SLEEP.—Up to the 15th year, most young people require ten hours, and until the 20th year nine hours. After that age, every one finds out how much he or she requires, though, as a general rule, at least six or eight hours is necessary. Eight hours' sleep will prevent more nervous derangements in women than any medicine can cure. During growth there must be ample sleep if the brain is to develop to its full extent; and the more nervous, excitable or precocious a child is, the longer sleep should it get, if its intellectual progress is not to come to a premature standstill, or its life cut short at an early age.—The Sanitary Volunteer.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. MARY A. STOKES.

At rest! At rest! Thou art "not dead, but sleeping;"
And though we mourn, 'tis not without the hope
That thee we'll meet again where sorrow, pain and weeping
No more can come, nor Azrael with us cope.

At rest! At rest! That thought shall stop the flowing
Of bitter tears and bid laments to cease
In sweet submission will we bow; this knowing,
That thou art resting in a home of peace.

At rest! At rest! Life's labors press us strongly,
But thou no more must bear the toil and pain.
If oft we faint and murmur sadly, wrongly,
We'll think of thee and then take heart again.

At rest! At rest! God's will in life did guide thee;
In happy service all thy days were spent;
And thy dear ones, who lived and toiled beside thee,
May strive to emulate thy joyous, sweet content.

They, too, may find in Christ a friend most tender,
Whose words alone can all true comfort bring.
In future days thy strong faith they'll remember,
And, looking heavenward, hear the angels sing.

Yes; hearts that mourn now in deep, bitter sorrow,
And think with anguish wild of lonely coming years,
Shall feel the All-powerful arms around them on the morrow,
And see hope's rainbow shining through their tears.

At rest! At rest! Where Christ his loved ones taketh
Into the mansions waiting for the blest;
Where God's smile light more fair than sunshine maketh
Thou'rt dwelling now in never-ending rest.

At rest; sweet rest! We all some day shall meet thee
Beside the river clear, and on the streets of gold,
And sigh no more when at God's throne we greet thee
Clasping thy hand as in the days of old.

At rest! At rest art thou in glory dwelling,
Yet those thou lov'st on earth thou lovest yet;
With ransomed hosts the song of praise thou'rt swelling,
But friends still lingering here dost not forget.

At rest! At rest! All doubts and fears have vanished.
No sadness ever more can fill thy breast,
When morning comes the shades of night are banished,
So life-cares come not to the soul at rest.

ROGERS—Mrs. SUSIE E. ROGERS, wife of J. A. Rogers, and daughter of B. P. and F. E. Roberts, was born in the year 1853, and died December 15, 1889, at her home, near Ebenezer, Miss.

Thus passes to her reward one of the pure women of earth. She joined the Methodist Church in early life, and from then to the time her pure spirit took its flight to the God who gave it, she always shunned anything calculated to bring reproach on the church of her choice. She was a noble Christian woman; a patient, loving wife; a tender, indulgent mother; a charming neighbor and a faithful friend. This was evidenced by the large crowd that were, indeed, mourners around her last resting-place, on December 16, when the heart-broken husband failed to see light through the dark clouds that overshadowed the scene. She, lived right, and died as she had lived. So we, who knew her best and loved her most, mourn not as those who have no hope, for we know that if we are faithful to the end, that there will be a happy meeting in the great beyond, where sickness and sorrow, pain and death, are felt and feared no more.

She leaves a comfortless husband and four sprightly little children, an infant only a few hours old, and aged father, two sisters, three brothers and a host of relatives and friends who will ever drop a tear of sorrow at the loss of one so faithful and pure; so we say, Take courage, my brother. May the God of love and mercy ever sustain you and enable you to lead those little ones on in the path which their mother was training them! is the prayer of one who cares for you only as a brother can. J. L. PORTER.

JOHNSON—KATHERINE E. JOHNSON was born in Kentucky, April 11, 1830, and in 1838 moved to Carroll county, Miss. At the age of fourteen she professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In 1852 she was married to Eli Ilow. Being left a widow, she was married to A. H. Johnson in 1867, and resided near Emory, in Holmes county, Miss., and was a member of the church at that place during the last score of years, where her influence as a Christian has been impressed upon the lives of many. Sister Johnson had an experience of grace, which was refreshing to hear her relate. Her latter years were spent in widowhood, with a family of girls to care for, and to guide in that way which would ultimate in their highest good, and her success in this respect has been hopefully good, inasmuch as all are members of the church and profess to be stimulated with the Christian's hope. Sister Johnson had been a subject of most painful sufferings, and her last illness was very severe; but all was borne with Christian patience and fortitude. She felt that the end of life here would be the beginning of life beyond; free from all pain and care. Her end was triumphant, with exhortations to her children to live so as to meet her in "the sweet by-and-by." She sunk in death's embrace, November 24, 1889. R. A. ELLIS.

RUSH—Sister S. E. RUSH, widow of David C. Rush and daughter of Henry Greer and his wife, Essie T. Greer, was born in Lowndes county, Miss., February 14, 1831. She was married to David C. Rush, December 19, 1850, and died in Marlin, Falls county, Texas, November 7, 1889, in her fifty-ninth year. Her sickness was of short duration, her sufferings were intense, but out of it all the Master wrought for her "an everlasting deliverance." It was my good fortune to know Sister Rush well. I was her pastor for three years and I can say she was a devoted Christian. In her early life she joined the Baptist Church, but soon after her marriage she connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she remained a consistent member until the angels came for her. Sister Rush was a worker in the church, but she "rests from her labors." She has entered into rest.

She leaves five children and a host of friends to mourn her departure. But thank God "we sorrow not as those who have no hope;" we will meet beyond the stars. May God bless and comfort her loved ones!

B. F. PHILLIPS.

HEARD—T. W. HEARD was born near Deasonville, Yazoo county, Miss., December 27, 1859; was happily married, February 8, 1883, to the daughter of Rev. T. C. Parrish; joined the M. E. Church, South, at Acona, Miss., July, 1888, and died December 21, 1889. Bro. Heard, I am told, lived a consistent life after he joined the church, but never professed to be fully satisfied as to his conversion until his last sickness; but before death expressed himself as fully satisfied—nay, even happy—in a Savior's love. He died in full triumph of faith. Heaven is richer, earth poorer. Bro. Heard leaves a widow and three small children to mourn his departure. May Heaven bless the widow and care for the fatherless children! H. F. PHILLIPS.

BARREMORE—The hearts of Bro. and Sister Barremore, of Osyka, Miss., are heavy with sorrow. Just ten days after the death of their little Julia—which event occurred October 25, 1889—they were called upon to give up their little ROSA LEE, aged eight months.

But the blessed gospel of Christ comforts the heavy-hearted. "Earth hath no sorrow that heaven can not heal." Remember, dear parents, in your deep grief that it is well with the children. They will wait and welcome the coming of papa and mamma at the "beautiful gate."

FRANK M. KEEN.

Mr. P. D. D. Belherex, Cypremort P. O., La., Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold. Remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the Insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

A Sensible Calendar.

As usual at this time of the year the new crop of Calendars is coming in. They are of all sorts, sizes, shapes and kinds, and many of them can be had for the asking, but the BEST Calendar that comes to our office is that published by N. W. Ayer & Son, Newspaper Advertising Agents, Philadelphia, and which they send post-paid to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

This calendar is 34x22 inches, the upper portion being beautifully printed in colors, while the monthly sheets are printed with figures so plain that they can be easily seen at a distance. Although the calendar is an advertisement of their ever-growing business it is at the same time so valuable to those having use for a calendar that year by year the sale steadily increases.

G. M. SCOTT, of Okolona, Miss., wrote to Dr. Shallenburger:

"Your Antidote for Malaria is certainly the best thing for chills and fever that has ever been sold in the South. I have been selling it for twelve years, know it to be the best medicine I have ever dealt in. It is perfectly harmless, and a sure cure in every case." Sold by Druggists.

Several bills have been introduced in both Houses of the Mississippi Legislature making sweeping provisions against all trusts and combinations formed to control production, trade and transportation, regardless of their effect upon the productive industries of the country, and declares against any scheme to defraud and enhance prices.

There seems to be no room for doubt that the Secretary of the Navy's recommendations on the new Southern naval site will be favorable to New Orleans.

FOREIGN.

It is not so certain that the Jews will be allowed to build the magnificent synagogue in Rome which they proposed to erect there. The Pope has been pleased to adopt an attitude of meek despair in the matter, but the cardinals have been busy at the various courts, and remonstrances from Spain, Austria, and even Germany, have poured in upon King Humbert.

The trouble in the Charlerol district, Belgium, has broken out afresh. The miners became involved in a dispute as to the method of executing the concession granted them by the mine owners, and again went out on a strike.

The papal encyclical is published. It insists upon the duty of Catholics to follow papal doctrines with absolute faith and condemns those who profess Catholicism while discussing and criticising acts of the church.

Authentic news has been received of terrible mortality among the natives of the Soudan, due to famine resulting from lack of rain during the autumn. The fighting forces have dispersed.

Mobs of workmen and sailors in Lisbon parade the streets denouncing England. There are many hundreds of adhesions to the commercial plan of campaign received from owners of machine building works. English flags have been brought and publicly buried in several towns.

Five hundred grain porters on the north and south docks, Liverpool, have struck for an advance in their wages. As a result of the strike the grain traffic on these docks is at a standstill.

The committee of the Reichstag to which was referred the bill granting a subsidy to the East African Steamship Company, has approved the measure with the provisions that steamers shall call at a Dutch or Belgian port.

King Leopold has donated a sum of money sufficient for establishing at Moanda, in the Congo country, a sanitarium in which African explorers and others in need of rest and medical treatment may be received.

The miners in Westphalia, in the lower Rhine districts, demand an increase of wages of 50 per cent. and a return of the time to eight hours to be counted from the time of entering the pit to the time of stopping work. The demands are under negotiation.

Heath, Schwartz & Co., Limited.

The well-known and popular dealer in carpets, wall paper and upholstery goods, Edward Heath, has changed the style of his firm to Heath, Schwartz & Co., Limited, who will continue the business at the old stand, No. 116 Camp street, New Orleans. Mr. Schwartz, who is now a member of this enterprising firm, is the son of Mr. Charles W. Schwartz, of the old established house of Schwartz & Graff, of Philadelphia, who are one of the largest wholesale carpet dealers in that city. It is fair to predict that Mr. Schwartz's addition to the business of E. Heath will add greatly to the ability of the new firm to do a larger business than heretofore. We commend the house of Heath, Schwartz & Co., Limited, to the patronage of our 35,000 readers.

General Bingham, chairman of the House committee on postoffices and post roads, and a close friend of Postmaster General Wanamaker, has introduced a bill to grant subsidies to steamship lines. The bill authorizes the postmaster general to contract for a term of not less than five nor more than ten years, the total amount of subsidies not to exceed $3,000,000 per annum.

THE GOLDEN ROD.

BY JOHN HAMILTON BRUNNER.

Say, where shall we find us a blossom well known,
An emblem befitting our dear native land—
Impartial in section, by kind Nature sown—
E pluribus unum—bright, stately and grand—
At home by the Gulf, and beside the Great Lakes,
On hill-top and plain, and adown in the vale,
From Atlantic's marge, where our coming day breaks,
To our sunset strand, whence Pacific ships sail?

Lo! here we have found it, to rich graces drest,
Full many a branchlet on strong central stem,
Its home the whole region by Liberty blest,
America's child, and a beautiful gem!
Not lily of France such rare excellence had,
Nor thistle enchanting stern Scotchmen of old,
Nor shamrock that maketh the Irish heart glad,
As Uncle Sam's emblem in garnish of gold.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, Tenn.

Letter from Little Rock.

BY M. B. CHAPMAN, D. D.

As I look out of my study window this evening, and watch the steady pour of the rain, I realize very fully that I am in the South once more, and that we are having a typical Southern winter. After so long writing Missouri letters to the ADVOCATE, it seems a little strange to change the caption to "Letter from Little Rock." I had become very fully identified with Missouri and the Missouri Conference, and it was no small thing to sever the ties which had been forming through so many years. But I find the same warm-hearted Methodists in Arkansas that I left in Missouri, and there is, perhaps, no State in the South where the outlook for Methodism is more promising than in this. The State itself is developing very rapidly, and has very great possibilities of growth. The State auditor's office has recently issued a report which shows that the taxable wealth of Arkansas aggregates one hundred and sixty-five millions—an increase during the past year of thirteen millions. The census will show a population of considerably over a million, which is increasing rapidly. No Southern State surpasses Arkansas in mineral and agricultural wealth, while her vast virgin forests are unrivalled. More slandered and misrepresented than any other State in the South, it is only necessary that her vast resources be known, and that it be understood that life and property are as safe here as in New York or Boston, for a tide of emigration to pour in and settle the thousands of acres of arable land which have never been turned by a plow.

Little Rock is a beautiful city of 40,000 inhabitants, and her people will compare favorably with those of any Eastern city for refinement and cultivation. Her splendid public buildings, her many elegant residences, fine churches, long lines of street railway, electric lights, broad shady streets, green lawns bestarred with flowers in mid-winter, and general air of bustle and prosperity, can not fail to impress a stranger favorably, and to convince him of the enterprise and culture of her citizens. The largest city west of the Mississippi between St. Louis and New Orleans, and with no rival to the west of her until you reach the Pacific Ocean, the "City of Roses" is destined to be a great commercial and business center, and her ardent friends may not be over-sanguine who predict for her a population of a hundred thousand before the beginning of the next century.

It will be gratifying to know that Methodism holds the vantage-ground in this growing young city. Our First Church is, perhaps, the largest and most influential communion in the city, and has large possibilities of growth. There are accessions every Sabbath, and I know of no church which has a more hopeful outlook. Winfield Memorial is also a very promising charge, with a handsome church edifice, and a united, aggressive membership. Asbury, the youngest congregation of our Southern Methodism, is located in a growing part of the city, and promises to develop into a self-supporting charge in a few years.

The Arkansas Methodist is an invaluable auxiliary to our work in the city and State, and under the vigorous management of Bros. Bennett and Thornburg is becoming a great power in all this growing Southwest.

Arkansas Methodism is fully alive to the importance of education, and has developed wonderfully along this line during the last few years. Hendrix College at Altus, Galloway Female College at Searcy, Quitman College at Quitman, and a number of high schools in various parts of the State, are all very prosperous, and are looking to increased facilities. Hendrix College will probably be removed from Altus to some more advantageous point; and if Little Rock is so fortunate as to secure it, it will be a very great addition to our equipment at this place, and will, I am persuaded, be the very best thing for the future success of the institution. Little Rock University, which is located here, is the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and does not and never can command any extensive patronage, either in this city or State. Our interests here demand a good school, and the local patronage would be very large, while the central location and railroad advantages of Little Rock should commend this place, above all others, to the Board. At a meeting to be held March 30, in this city, the question of location will be settled. Then the next step will be to secure an endowment fund of $100,000, which should be accomplished within the next few years.

So Sam Jones has been stirring up the Crescent City! Your editorial is a very correct estimate of the man and his work. I believe that he is called of God to do a special work which no other man can do, and in which he has been wonderfully blessed. I have seen him in some of his most successful meetings, and to me he is the most remarkable man now in pulpit or on platform. We only want one Sam Jones; but God bless that one! We hope to have him in Little Rock during the year.

An Impressive Episode in a Great Meeting.

BY REV. JOEL T. DAVIS.

If there is *any*thing to us in the religion of Christ, there is *every*thing in it, both for time and eternity. If there is not everything in it; if it is not "the one thing needful," it is worse than nothing. All men know, unless morally insane, that the religion of the Bible is the world's only anchorage. In their madness men may seek the overthrow of the church; and yet, in a cool, sober moment, they know that could they succeed, moral, intellectual and social darkness would be the harvest. There would not be light enough left to last one generation. The church is God's salt to the earth. It is the one conserving, saving power. Imperfect as she is in many of her members, yet taken out, and the flame of final burning would burst forth from the bowels of the world. These are simple things, and statements that none can deny. ... The church could not live or prosper without her living ministry. The one is the life of the other. Jesus, first, the Head; then the disciples; then the ministry since and of to-day. And so the work will go on until the closing. ... So we can see that if there is anything in "John's answer" as to the spirit and secret of success in the ministry, there is much in it. If the church is of Christ; if the ministry, called of him to preach the gospel, must be of his mind, the value of self-renunciation must be accorded. There are none to deny this. Not only so, but all to declare that only as men are Christ-like, are they true preachers. Now, if the man is thus called and to be thus qualified, the whole man is called. Not simply his brain, his speech, his heart; not simply the things he says and does; but his whole body is the temple of the Holy Ghost. The face shows forth the light within. His words will be God's words, and his very tone will be under the ministry of the Spirit. His actions in speech, his walk, the attitudes of the body, will be of God, if with Jesus he really and truly says, "I can of mine own self do nothing."

There is much in physical influence, in the ordinary walks and relations of life. There is much more in it in this particular sphere. The appearance, size, action of many Bible characters is clearly stated. We all feel the force of physical influence. None there are who have not felt the power of an attitude, a gesture, a tone, a look, a motion of the hands in earnest preaching. Studied, self-conscious attitudinizing, in imitations, may impress the head, but no power to change or affect the heart. Power in spiritual things is from God. Power in these things of the outward man is born only in utter unconsciousness of self. Self-assertion in the preacher will be intuitively discerned by the people. They will resent it. A gesture, an attitude may be inspired of the Holy Ghost, as much as a word or a tone of the voice. The man may assume it, or make it, as naturally as the limb forms on the tree, as the water runs down to its level, or as the babe coos and smiles; but it will be of God. The mistakes and failures of the pulpit, in word, gesture or tone—the lack of power—springs always from self-consciousness. Yielding to the slightest touch of the Holy One in all things, he will ever preach, through us, in power. He will so magnify little things as to send a message and leave a lasting impression in the motion of the hand. I remember gestures to-day, after many years, and feel the power of God in preaching, when all things else of the sermon is forgotten. Though betrayed into such long speech, the mission of this paper is to recall one such, that seemed to have in it the force of a divine punctuation.

It was in a great meeting. Five thousand people were hanging on the words of the preacher. Many preachers—some of no little note—were listening and watching, seeking to know, most of all, the secret of his power. He said simple, easy, ordinary things; just such things as anyone could say; such as many had said. But there was a strange power in the frail, delicate-looking man. There was power in his sometimes awkward attitudes and gestures; in the motion of his hands, in his blazing eye; now with scorn and now with tenderest sympathy and deepest pathos; in the facial muscles, in all things; he seemed the incarnation of preaching power. I had gone many miles to see him, hear him, know him. I had heard him severely criticised by preachers, and bitterly denounced by wicked men. I was there as one at school; sitting on the large platform, near and just behind him, was swept from all my moorings by the power of the man. I felt that I had never heard preaching before. The great mass of people seemed paralyzed, motionless, suspended, as though in mid-air. The preacher was but "a voice"—"a voice in the wilderness crying, Make straight the way of the Lord." Yea, in a higher sense than John ever realized—"For the least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than John." He was that voice, but on a higher plane—in the stead of Christ. There was no self-consciousness in him. Self was dethroned. Christ was enthroned, and the Holy Ghost was the inspiration. The iron rails stretched their way along the center of the street. The meeting was held in an immense cotton shed. The preacher was touching the culmination of effort and interest in the sermon, and the people leaning forward, almost breathless, to catch each word, when a large freight train passed slowly by. The very atmosphere of the place seemed burdened with the universal regret of the crowd. He would have to stop. The people wanted him to go on and on and on. The thought came to me: "How will he, without great injury to the service, get through the interruption?" We did not know what was in store for us. As naturally and gracefully as a child, without the least self-consciousness, he stayed the flow of burning words. Facing the street, his elbow on the cushion of the stand, his head resting on his hand, his body in an easy attitude, restful and graceful, his face in perfect repose, he stood and looked out at the passing train, as though he was born into the world for that one thing alone. The vast throng was looking at him. He seemed, and I believe was, wholly unconscious, for the moment, of the presence of anyone. Sitting near by, and having now a full view of his face, I watched and studied him. The train seemed long in passing; but sight and thought of it passed from the people, and all eyes were fixed on the preacher. There was power—yea, a holy beauty—in the man as, silent, thus he stood. There was no sense of embarrassment or interruption, now, to anyone. It was a divine parenthesis. The cars finally went by, and, as though gently roused from a pleasant dream, this Elias turned to the audience and began his sermon again, with an evident increase of power. I recall but little, except in a general way, of the sermon, but have never felt a release from the power of that moment of speechless preaching.

LAKE CHARLES, La.

Letter from California.

BY REV. Q. A. OATS.

California has been visited during the last two months with severe and almost continuous rains, and the floods have been severe and exceedingly disastrous. Old Californians say that, in some respects, especially the great destruction of property, it is without a parallel. The railroads have suffered greatly, and communication and travel entirely suspended. Of the numerous roads running into the city of Los Angeles, not one escaped; and for several days not a train could leave or enter the city. All the bridges on private roads were destroyed; so that no communication or travel could be effected in that way. It has been over two weeks since we have had a train here, the first having come to-day.

The country here is a valley, or plain, extending from the Coast Range of mountains to the Pacific Ocean. It is entered and traversed by numerous streams that rise up in the mountains. After winding through the canyons for hundreds of miles, they enter the level country. During the greater part of the year they are dry, a portion of the water being drawn off at the base of the mountains for irrigation, and the remainder sinking in the sand and loose alluvial soil; but during the winter, or rainy season, they become mighty torrents, pouring immense volumes of water from the mountains into the valley. They bring a vast quantity of timber, stones, soil and sand from the mountains, which fills up the beds of the streams, frequently causing great devastation.

The soil is all alluvial, formed by the joint action of the winter floods from the mountains and the tidal waves of the Pacific Ocean. The work has been carried on through many ages till the peculiar mixture of soil has an immense depth. This foundation is not very sure, and the torrents have it all their own way when they reach it.

Many of my leading members have been almost, if not entirely, financially ruined by the flood. Among other things, this means short finances to the work of the church; but "the Lord will provide."

I am more and more impressed with the peculiar state of society and religion in this section. Between 1777 and 1781 the Spanish took possession of this country, then inhabited by tribes of peaceable and defenseless savages, unlike the ferocious and warlike Indians of the Atlantic slope. The conquerors, under the direction of the priests, planted twenty-three missions in what was then termed Alta California. The priests went zealously to work to convert the natives. This they did by scouring the country with bands of cruel and sensual soldiers, and capturing and baptizing the people by force—a ceremony that they knew nothing concerning its meaning. They were then enslaved, and subjected to the most cruel treatment, and kept in the most abject ignorance and degradation. They retained all their former superstition, but accepted the name and such forms of Christianity as the ignorant, bigoted and cruel masters imposed upon them, but learned nothing of its enlightening and saving influences. There was a rapid amalgamation between the conquerors and the aborigines, cruelly enforced by the former, which gave rise to a mixed race. The priests became rich, and began to menace the authority of Spain. That government finally confiscated much of their property and freed their slaves. The country was inhabited by this mixed race when the country came into possession of the United States. Many of them are still here. They still hold with a superstitious tenacity to the Catholic religion, but are only Christians in name. They speak their own language (a corruption of the Spanish), and have their own society. They are lazy and thriftless in their habits, and said to be very unreliable. They live generally in huts made of corn-stalks, without floors. Ex-Governor Pio Pico lives near here. He was governor of Alta California when it was wrested from Mexico by the United States, and was active in efforts to defeat the invaders. He accepted the change, and has since lived a good citizen of the United States.

We have the Chinaman, not very numerous comparatively, but in numbers sufficient to be found in every section. He peddles garden vegetables and washes clothes. In these industries he has a monopoly. He comes to every house in country and in town daily, and cries out, "Vegetables," "spinagee," "letticee," etc., "awful cheapee." He will sell vegetables enough for fifteen cents to supply an ordinary family a whole week. He has nothing to do with white people in any other respect. He remains just as much a heathen in the midst of our civilization as in China. He wears the peculiar costume and as long a cue as his brother in the Flowery Kingdom. Some few have been converted to Christianity. In this line of good work the Baptist Church seems to be taking the lead. The various churches in Santa Ana combined last year to conduct a mission school for their benefit, each church sending them teachers night about. I was teaching one one night. After he had finished his lesson, he addressed me in his broken English, and with manifest embarrassment, and said, "Me wantee axee you a questionee." I told him to ask it, and I would answer, if in my power. He made copious his apologies, then said: "You say Godee he-be goodee; then why don'tee he killee devilee?" I was stumped, you may be sure, with the weighty question.

We have no Sunday law in California, and all sorts of secular business are pursued on the holy day with little interruption. This is one of the most serious impediments to the operations of the church. May the day soon come when Christianity shall permeate and leaven this great conglomerate, seething mass of humanity, and save this glorious land for Christ!

A New Year's Greeting.

BY MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

As the Northeastern south-bound cannon-ball sped by our home on the first bright morn of the glad new year, a hand waved, a folded paper fluttered and fell, and the train was gone. Away went Clarence, my little grandchild, to find the paper. It proved to be a note pinned with a nail. Opening it, I read:

To Mrs. L. Crary Sadler and Family:

Dr. T. S. West and family present their compliments with New Year's greetings. May a kind Providence direct and guard you all through the year!

ON THE TRAIN, Jan. 1, 1890.

Who but a presiding elder, that always "hits the nail on the head," would have thought of bullasting a New Year's greeting to a lady from a flying train with a nail? Who but an itinerant Methodist preacher itinerating would have had a nail in his pocket on New Year's Day? Thanks to the cannon-ball that was behind time, for it gave that itinerant a chance to pencil the note in characters that were a little more decipherable than hieroglyphics. Thanks to the itinerating nail that turned up even in such a "questionable shape" at the opportune moment. Thanks to the brotherly heart that sent the note freighted with Christian love and weighted with a nail. Not a common square nail, little at one end, with just enough increased width at the other to puzzle the wits of a woman to know which way to drive it with the grain, so as not to crack the wood, if she should happen to have occasion to use one. This nail was a round, straight-up-and-down, all-the-way-alike nail, with a small head. In fact, it was a regular clincher; too valuable to throw away, and being, perhaps, the last nail at the parsonage, after all its mates had done duty in safely securing the lares and penates of an itinerant's household, while they were en route for the new one, where the pillar of fire should stop. So this nail found its way into the good Doctor's pocket. It might have been unkind to have left it where it would be a reminder to the incoming brother that nails would soon be in demand, even in such a cosy home as that. The nail had a mission to perform, and that was to carry that note safely to the ground, and keep it from being whirled back under the flying train. No more, perhaps, would I grasp the hand that penned the note until the greeting beyond the floods, where dwell the "great majority."

Three years we had held Christian communion, and sometimes walked to the house of God together, and now the paths diverged again. The boast of the Cæsars, that "all roads led to Rome," was but a vanity of vanities; but the humblest Christian can truly say, All our paths lead to Christ, for they are "paths of peace," and peace is Christ. With the Psalmist we can say, "Hide will hold my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not." Though sorrow for a time hath filled our hearts, that in this happy New Year's greeting there was also a sad farewell, yet we take comfort in the thought that when all these diverging paths shall lead us Home,

"our embracings shall be sweet,
When we each other greet
At our dear Redeemer's feet,
Who have loved, who have loved."

May our dear old presiding elder find the rest in his new pastorate that he so richly deserves, and, at the same time, be "always abounding in the work of the Lord!" So shall goodness and mercy follow him this year, and all years, even to the end."

Letter from Japan.

I have time to write you but a few lines, as the mail for the United States leaves in an hour or two. I have been absent some two or three months, laboring principally on the large island of Shikoku. Wherever I have gone, I have been received kindly by the Japanese, and great numbers have attended our services. In one place a large number of women were deeply interested; the greater part had never heard of the name of Jesus. It was then I felt more than ever the need of Bible women and missionary ladies to work among the women of Japan. Oh, what a blessed work can be done for the Master in this land by consecrated women from America! Are there not some who will give themselves to this work among the women? I am sure there are. I wrote you of the people of Tadotsu writing me letter after letter to go to them, and then sending a telegram. I went, and spent three days with them; Dr. W. R. Lambuth and Bro. Dunaee being with me. In three weeks from that time I again visited them, Dr. W. R. Lambuth meeting there. Six persons were baptized, and one received by letter from the Canada Methodist Church in Tokio, and four on probation. There is much interest among many persons there in studying the Word of God. Two days since a telegram came from Dr. W. R. Lambuth, at Oita, saying, "Glorious revival" at that place. I hope to hear some particulars to-day; but I fear it will be too late for the home mail. Pray for us, dear brother, and let all the church pray for the extension of Christ's kingdom in this land.

Your brother in Christ,
J. W. LAMBUTH.

MORNING STUDIES.—Dr. W. M. Taylor, in a recent article in the Congregationalist, says: "Four hours in the morning given, not to reverie, or to newspaper reading, but to steady, earnest work, will make a minister independent for the rest of the day, and be amply sufficient for meeting all the demands of pulpit preparation; then the prosecution of pastoral work in the afternoon will furnish a needful alternative and some little exercise." If every pastor would devote even two or three hours daily to solid study in preparation for his Sunday work, there would be new freshness and life in our pulpits.

A PICTURE.

BY ELIZABETH Y. MERRILL.

Yes, she was old. Hard be counted by
How many times the flying years had told
Their rosary of months above her head;
For more than seventy times her eyes beheld
Hoar Winter swathe the shining earth in snow,
Blithe Summer lead the pageant of the flowers.
And from her withered cheeks all furrowed o'er
With many a line of pain and care, so long,
So long the rose had fled and silvery white
The smooth locks lay upon her brow. Dear Heart!
We could not deem her old, for age is poor,
Meager, and querulous as a fretting child,
And she was love itself, and love informed
Her very soul and shone from every line
And furrow of her faded cheek, and kept
The light of youth perennial in eyes
That years dimmed not. Men looking in her face
Forgot to doubt, repressed the cynic sneer,
And thought of God and heaven and holy things;
And little children nestled at her feet
And hid within the shelter of her arms,
The pain that others suffered, that was hers,
And that she sought to comfort and to soothe.
Her own she told not, bearing all the load
In silence, giving not a sign except
The tell-tale lines about the patient mouth,
That never murmured though the gnawing pain
Remorseless racked her poor, worn frame,
Which as it waxed, like an alabaster vase
Polished and wrought, thereby, the more revealed
The spirit's luminent light contained within.
She sleeps, may we not think like him
Who climbed the height of Pisgah, then lay down,
—So say the rabbis—dying by the kiss of God.

Missions.

WHERE SHALL THE EMPHASIS BE PLACED?

All who are in possession of the invaluable treasure, the New Testament, and give credence to its divine authority, will not question for one moment that the duty of carrying the information it contains, of the saving grace of its Author, to all nations is imposed upon all those who profess to be advocates of its teachings. The unhappy state and condition of the heathen world must be conceded by all who give credit to the statements of those who write and speak on the subject from a personal knowledge gained by observation. But the question we propose is this: Does their unhappy condition, their idolatrous surroundings suggest the conclusion that all who are thus are to be lost forever?

This is the conclusion to which one is likely to reach, if he is shaped in his mind by what he hears or reads upon the subject of missions, as relates to the ground of its importance and necessity. But are we justifiable in placing the importance of mission work on the ground that the heathen, as such, are hopelessly lost, because of the lack of a knowledge of God in Christ? We think not. There are too many objectionable features suggesting themselves from this hypothesis. The heathen is not responsible for having a being, nor for the surroundings of his early life. If being born in the midst of such surroundings involve the certain damnation of the soul, it appears useless to talk of the justice of God, or to be horrified at the doctrine of undisguised fatality. The case is made more objectionable in the fact that the heathen is made to feel his accountability. The same restlessness which exercises the conscience of the man in a Christian land is experienced and manifested in the heathen man. This fact is sufficient to justify the conclusion that the heathen may be saved if he is faithful to act in concert with that light which "lighteth every man that cometh into the world." This must be accepted as true, else we find God, in the manifestations of himself to the heathen, "tormenting them before the time," in that that he gives consciousness of guilt without accompanying this given sense of guilt with the light and means sufficient to guide to eternal day.

We do not claim that our church teaches that the heathen are all lost; but most all who write and speak upon this all-important subject stress the lost condition of the heathen as the main ground and reason why all Christians should respond with unstinted liberality in the support of missionary enterprises.

The undue emphasis at this point, as given (I mean compared with other grounds of importance) by the Methodist people, joined with the wholesale consignment of the heathen to damnation by most all other churches, has given rise to the doctrine of a probation after death, and this in order that they may escape the horrible conclusion of God consigning men to remediless ruin without a chance to escape it. Such a conclusion is enough to incline men to seek a different solution of this perplexing question. I say perplexing, because you may approach the question from any conceivable point, and in the process of reasoning you will be forced upon problems that have never been satisfactorily solved. But, with all this, we who have the Bible are not left in darkness as to our duty, unless it be willful. If we fail to see our duty, as relates to this subject, it is not because the great Teacher has been silent, but that we have found it convenient to construe what he has said wrongfully.

With the light and developments of this age, the question is one of the highest moment: How can we, how can I be saved, if I fail to do something; something which will measure well up to my ability, to carry into execution the plain and simple command, "Go teach all nations"? This is the point to be stressed. Bother not about the heathen, as to the possibilities or impossibilities of his salvation without the gospel; but settle the question in the light of this command, as to whether we can be saved in this gospel land, knowing its benefits here (to say nothing of the hereafter), if we fail to send the good news to those who have it not.

All who know the teachings of the New Testament know that the conditions of spiritual life and growth are made to depend on keeping the commandments. So the conclusion is, Send or perish. R. A. ELLIS.

WINONA, MISS.

Endowment Fund of the Mississippi Conference.

At the last session of our Conference, Bishop Galloway appointed me agent of the Conference Endowment Fund. The object of this fund is to raise an endowment to help support the superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of the deceased preachers of our Conference. Only the interest will be used to help support our Conference claimants.

It is not designed that this should interfere at all with the ordinary assessments and collections raised in all our pastoral charges for the superannunted preachers. And I hope no one will contribute to this endowment fund, thinking that it will finally do away with the usual collections for this purpose. God has laid upon the church the obligation to support his ministers. And it is as much our sacred duty to support in competence these old preachers and our widows and orphans as it is to sustain the active ministry. I blush with shame at our sinful treatment of these old prophets of God in the past. And, while we thank God for the enlarged liberality of our people, we wish to measure up to our obligations in this respect.

We are legally organized into a corporate body, having a charter and a full and competent Board of Trustees. Bro. T. L. Mellen is president; Dr. C. G. Andrews, secretary; and Bro. R. J. Jones, treasurer. So we are fully competent to hold secure and invest any funds committed to our trust. Now, will not some, with large means, and all with small amounts, step forward and endow this sacred and worthy institution of our Zion.

Brethren, let me hear from you. Remit any amount to me at Jackson, Miss., or Rev. R. J. Jones, treasurer, at Vicksburg, Miss.

I wish to visit as many of the pastoral charges as possible. Brethren of the ministry, let me hear from you as soon as possible, so I can arrange my plans. I will be able to help the brethren in revival work, provided they will allow me to collect money for this fund.

W. W. HOPPER,
Agent Miss. Conf. Endowment Fund.

Reply to Bro. Cassity.

My Dear Brother: I have just read your proposition in the last issue of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Amen! dear brother. Away over among the rocks, hills and vales of North Arkansas you awake an echo. Will you let me join you? Though not now a member of the Louisiana Conference, yet all the service which I have so imperfectly rendered the church has been within its bounds. I love her preachers and her people. Wholly from health considerations am I trying another clime. I still claim an interest in her struggles, and in her success.

I like your plan. Will you let me join? Then, here's my hand. Handed the paper to my wife to read your "proposition," and, with woman's ready instinct, she replied: "Well, I am willing." At once the agreement was to give two and a half per cent. each. So you may put us down for five per cent. of our annual salary, until the mission is "self-supporting." I suppose, of course, Dr. C. W. Carter, editor of the grand old organ, is constituted treasurer. And let us move right on for the third $1,000 and for the third missionary to Japan, through the ADVOCATE office, and for a permanent self-supporting mission in a benighted land. And may God, in his great goodness, accept and bless the enterprise! Yours, etc.,

ED. B. GALLOWAY.

ALEXANDER, ARK.

Bro. Cassity's Proposition Seconded.

I arise to second the motion of Bro. Cassity as to that mission in Japan. And, as my salary is a nebulous, intangible, airy, variable quantity, not easily calculated, nor divided at present; having also a family about the size of Bro. Cassity's, with a district—while larger—less thoroughly worked, I propose to make my contribution the same, yearly, as his.

A Correction Needed.

There are many calls made by the church for aid to educate young ministers. Many of these calls are unheeded and the church is condemning the selfishness, as it is termed, of her members. I have been much interested in this matter and recently have made efforts to ascertain this apparent indifference on the part of laymen.

I find that many of these young men (not all), who are having their tuition and board paid by benevolent institutions and individuals, are living in such ways at colleges as to disgust their benefactors. If sustained in such practices, they can not be a blessing to this age and generation. We know of students at some of our colleges who are obtaining free tuition and board who indulge the expense of having all their dormitory work done by hired servants, while sons of their benefactors do all their own work. These facts are being made known to those who are called upon to raise educational assessments, and when demands are made to meet this assessment, we are answered that these young ministers live better and easier at college than our sons who are there with them. We teach, or try to teach, our own sons economy that we may be enabled to assist in the benevolent calls of the age. Our sons should have good examples set them by those who are being educated for leaders in the great moral and industrial movements of the age. It pains me to notice these facts; but the young men of the church and the church itself should know and feel the justice of the criticisms being made upon them and it.

Yours kindly, PETER JAMES.

Exhibit of Another Church's Finances.

In the last number of the Quarterly Review, Dr. Harrison, in reference to the grand work done last year by Rev. B. F. Haynes and the McKendree congregation (the total amount raised by them for all purposes being $35.297 49) editorially says: "The per capita of $30 22 for 1,168 members is an exhibit that is, we believe, without precedent in the history of Methodism in America."

For the year 1888, the pastor of Felicity Street Church in New Orleans reported as raised for all purposes, $16,740 81. The membership being that year 401, the per capita for the Felicity members was $41 74. There are no railroad magnates, bank presidents nor millionaires in her membership. Would McKendree head the list her 1,168 members must raise about $19,000, which would carry her per capita beyond that of Felicity. May that great Nashville Church, so favorably situated at the hub of Southern Methodism, do that very thing this good year.

IDENBURG.

State Normal College.

We are requested by the president of the State Normal School at Natchitoches to announce that hereafter the annual session will be divided into two terms, of four months each, and new classes will be organized in the normal department at the opening of each term. By this change many students who find it inconvenient to remain at the school continuously until graduation, will be enabled to attend during either term for several successive years, until they complete the course of study.

The Normal School has enrolled during the present session 207 students—a number much larger than ever before; and the demand for its graduates as teachers is steadily increasing.

The next term will begin on Monday, February 3, 1890.

The Louisiana Lottery.

AN INCENTIVE TO CRIME.—Governor Buckner, in his recent message to the Legislature of Kentucky, speaks of the evils of the lottery in the following terms: "Your attention is invited to the legislation on the subject of the Frankfort Lottery. It is believed that the scheme thereby authorized has exhausted its privileges, and has no longer any right to exist. It seems to be conducted now in the interest of a few persons, who derive from it large individual profits at the cost, chiefly, of the poorer classes of the community, who are debauched and, in many cases, led into crime by being tempted to gamble in its policies. When the General Assembly, by its enactments, denounces crime under severe penalties, it certainly seems opposed to public policy to legalize a corporation which is a constant incentive to crime. It is earnestly recommended that the privileges improperly exercised by this lottery scheme be withdrawn by appropriate legislation."

There are rumors that the Louisiana Lottery scheme is to be suppressed. It is high time. The business has been a disgrace to the State and a curse to the country for many years. Instead of dying out it has grown to enormous proportions. A few years ago the company published only 100,000 copies of the lists of monthly drawings; now 1,000,000 copies are published. If any imagine that the victims of this institution are confined to Louisiana, they are mistaken. There is scarcely a village in the land from which money does not pour into it. How long will the country endure it?—New York Advocate.

A burning shame to our Southland, a source of unnumbered crimes and unknown suffering to our whole country, for years the Louisiana State Lottery has carried on its infamous trade. For several months it has been receiving blow after blow from the religious press of Louisiana and the nation. It can't stand the light, and there are now well-grounded rumors that it will be suppressed. The Christian conscience of our people and the honor of our nation join in demanding it.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

The Holy Family, Roman Catholic organ, published in this city, is unsparing in its denunciation of the Louisiana State Lottery cause. It shows conclusively that this barnacle, which is undermining our institutions and vitiating every element of our moral system, nets annually out of the people that it fleeces nearly $15,000,000. The monstrosity must be destroyed.

The Louisiana Lottery Company wants an extension of its charter for fifty years, and, as a slight consideration to the State for so valuable a franchise, it offers to pay the State debt, a small matter of $12,000,000. If the State accepts this proposition, it ought to have a guardian appointed over its affairs or ought to be confined in an asylum.—Exchange.

I do not know of a more gigantic curse than the Louisiana State Lottery. And not only every Christian, but every citizen in this land should rise and blot it from the statute books of this State, and from the face of the earth.—J. Wm. Jones.

The Louisiana Lottery is the most gigantic fraud of the century, and must "go." The people of every condition are saying so, and the government that permits it to go on in its thieving course is a partaker of its infamy.—Los Angeles Christian Advocate.

Value of The Small Colleges.

No part of Mr. Bryce's "American Commonwealth" shows a keener insight into American needs than his chapter upon our universities. He is able to perceive at once the weak point in the criticism which is so often heard, to the effect that we have too many small colleges and not enough great universities. Like any other observing foreigner who has visited this country, he heard this criticism more generally than any other, for it is the one most often made, both by those who have thought a little upon the subject and by those who have thought upon it not at all. Mr. Bryce says (Vol. II., p. 552):

"The European observer.....conceives that his American friends may not only realize the services which these small colleges perform in the rural districts of the country. They get hold of a multitude of poor men, who might never resort to a distant place of education. They set learning in a visible form, plain, indeed, and humble, but dignified even in her humility, before the eyes of a rustic people, in whom the love of knowledge, naturally strong, might never break from the bud into the flower but for the care of some zealous gardener. They give the chance of rising in some intellectual walk of life to many a strong and earnest nature who might otherwise have remained an artisan or storekeeper, and, perhaps, failed in those avocations."

That is as true as it is well said. We have quoted only a few lines from a chapter which every friend of education ought to read entire. No man can estimate the service which the small colleges of the country have done by setting up "learning in a visible form" in so many parts of the land. Our educated class would otherwise be no more than a fraction of what it is today. American boys are proverbially ambitious of learning, and in thousands of them the spark has been kindled by the presence of the small college near their homes. They could not afford to go miles away to a great university, but they can live at home and walk daily to the small college. In every part of the land where such an institution exists it acts as a perpetual inspiration. When the elder son of a family goes to college, his example becomes at once the model for the younger sons. The tuition is usually low; the ability to live at home instead of having to board brings the education which the college has to offer within the means of any boy who has in him the stuff of which a real man is made. Thousands of American boys have paid their way through these colleges by teaching school and by various kinds of manual labor in vacation time.

Of course the education afforded is limited. It bears no comparison with that obtainable in the largest American colleges, to say nothing of that to be had in the great European universities. But between it and no college education at all the distance is enormous. In some respects the quality of it is inferior to none which is given anywhere. The personal contact between teacher and pupil is closer in the small college than in the large, and wherever there is found in one of them a true teacher, a man of large soul, quick sympathies and high ideals, who has the indescribable and invaluable gift of touching and opening the minds of youth—wherever there is a college with such a man there is a great university in the highest sense of the word. One such teacher, it matters little what he teaches, can make a college a power in the land. It is our conviction that there are many of these teachers scattered throughout the 345 colleges which we have in the United States, and that there is not in the land a more potent influence for the highest good of the nation.

Statistics show that our colleges, great and small, contain about 70,000 students, and that more than 10,000 degrees are conferred each year. There are thus sent forth into the world 10,000 young men—the statistics given do not include women—in whose minds a love of learning has been kindled. It may be that in the majority of cases there will be little growth towards higher learning after the college precincts are abandoned; but in all cases some influence has been exerted. These 10,000 men will not be so easily misled by false doctrines and fallacious theories as they would have been had they never gone to college. In every community in which they pass their lives their influence will be exerted on the side of progress and in favor of the more liberal ideas which find the light there. Among the 10,000 there will be a few in whose larger and more fertile minds the seed of knowledge will continue to grow until it bears fruit. Among them there may be one whose voice or pen shall prove of highest value to his fellows for many years to come.

There never was a time when our country needed the services of these college-bred men so much as it does to-day. We shall always have in this land of inexhaustible resources enough of men who will devote all their energies to the accumulation of wealth and to the increase of our material prosperity. To counteract them we need and shall continue to need the restraining influence of those who are willing to devote themselves to what Lowell calls the "things of the mind." The country must have some men who can resist the temptation to devote their lives to mere money-getting, not because they would not like to have the freedom and power which money gives, but because they love knowledge more. Our colleges alone can supply these men, and they are supplying them, and are thus of inestimable service to the republic.—The Century.

"Life-Work."

The book of Rev. John Pipes, of the Louisiana Conference, on the above subject, is gradually winning its way among intelligent readers. The following letter from a thoughtful young man to Bro. Pipes shows how the book is affecting him:

Dear Bro. Pipes: I am in receipt of your book, and enjoy the perusal of every page of it. It will be another light to help me on the way that grows brighter and dearer to me. Your views on sanctification strengthen me in the divine life, has removed mixed views from my mind and made plain to me the different stages in the Christian life. Yours, etc., J. M. PORTER.

From the Work.

EARLY GROVE CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

At the last session of the North Mississippi Conference I was read out to this charge by Bishop Galloway, and immediately came to my new work, of which I had before acquired some knowledge, having been associated with the pastor last year. I have preached at all the appointments, and find the charge in a moderately good condition. We have two Sunday-schools and two Woman's Missionary Societies.

Our first quarterly meeting was held last Saturday and Sunday. Our new presiding elder, Rev. J. B. Stone, was present—and preached with great power. The Quarterly Conference was very harmonious indeed. All the appointments, save one, were represented. One-fourth of the preacher's and presiding elder's assessments was paid. We are taking steps toward supplying all our churches with the new hymn book. When that is done—and we expect it to be done—we expect to have some grand old-fashioned Methodist singing—just what we need. We need a revival of singing all over our connection. The time has come when this little operatic screaming that we now hear in a great many of our churches, where the preacher in charge is allowed no prerogative in the selection of the hymns, must be done away with. It has already, in a large measure, destroyed our congregational singing in a great many places. And where the singing itself is destroyed, of course its power goes with it, and the cause of Christ suffers in consequence. This should not be the case; but it is, and our preachers are largely to blame.

W. W. MOSS.

GREENVILLE, MISS.

At the last session of our Conference this pastor was appointed by Bishop Galloway to Greenville station, to succeed the peerless J. A. Bowen, the wizard of the pastorate, mighty in faith and works, who moves among his people with a head of steam always up to the pop-valve. Of course, it was with fear and trembling that we came to this heavy station—heavy in the sense of much work in and out of the pulpit, but certainly filled with the kindest and cleverest people that ever greeted a Methodist preacher. Our reception was royal. The parsonage has been refitted and refurnished elegantly from kitchen to parlor, and throughout may be seen the artistic touches from the deft hand of woman. The pantry has been filled with good things without the cost of a nickle to the preacher. The stewards are organized, and have made liberal arrangements for the salary of the preacher and presiding elder. They have assumed all the assessments made upon the church, and everything moves on smoothly, and this scribe and his family are happy, expecting the blessings of God upon their labors, and a year of great prosperity.

The ADVOCATE circulates liberally here, and we are going to give it a wider circulation among this people.

E. L. SPRAGGINS.

OKOLONA STATION, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Bishop Galloway took me up, at our Conference at Holly Springs, from Black Hawk and let me down at Okolona—quite a long move for a poor preacher; but we never get too poor to move; so we obeyed and went cheerfully to our new field of labor. There being no parsonage at Okolona, the good ladies rented a good house for three months. We went to work at once to secure a parsonage, and I am glad to be able to report that we have bought a good lot, and have $1,000 in hand. The lumber has been ordered, and the work will be begun in a few days. We will have, when completed, one of the best parsonages in the Aberdeen district, or any other. We expect to be in the parsonage by the last of March. The people here gave us a warm reception, and we are hoping to have a gracious revival before long. The outlook is good.

Now, Bro. Editor, we want you to come to our District Conference, which will be held at Okolona some time in the spring. R. A. BURROUGHS.

Books and Periodicals.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT. By Mark Twain. Charles L. Webster & Company, New York.

This is Mark Twain's last book, and is fully equal to any that have gone before. The idea of transporting a live Connecticut Yankee back to the time of King Arthur, and making him produce in that barbarous age all the appliances and improvements of the civilization of the nineteenth century, is certainly an original conception. The humor of the book gleams on every page. Chivalry is shown up about as well as in Don Quixote. So fascinating are the chapters that you hardly can cease reading to attend to other and more important matters. The book is as enjoyable as "Innocents Abroad," or "Huckleberry Finn," or "Tom Sawyer."

PERIODICALS.

—THE MISSIONARY REVIEW, for February. The leading paper of the number is by Rev. James Johnston, of London, on Protestant Missions a Hundred Years Ago and Now. The contrast is sharply drawn, and is a bright prophecy for the future. Dr. Pierson's first Letter from Scotland is given, and will be read with intense interest. There is a very remarkable paper on The Charities of Germany, by Dr. A. H. Bradford, which is instructive reading. Dr. Steel, of New South Wales, has a ringing article on The Jubilee of the New Hebrides Mission. J. Hudson Taylor rings out a clarion appeal To Every Creature. Secretary Ellinwood sketches with skilful hand The Credulity of Skepticism. Then follows a graphic picture of pioneer missionary life in Alaska, which will thrill the reader. All the other seven departments are replete with facts, intelligence, correspondence, reports, international papers, Monthly Concert Matter, prepared by Dr. Ellinwood, and Editorial Notes on many live topics. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; in clubs of ten, $1 50. Specimen numbers, 20 cents.

—CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for February, is gazing upon us from among the current periodicals that lie upon the editorial desk, and by the attractive nature of its contents calls for attention. Kate Eyre's serial, To Be Given Up, opens the number. Following this is an article on The Mistress of the White House, by "an Anglo-American," which is illustrated by a picture of the White House and portraits of Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Cleveland, both of which are particularly good likenesses. The Family Doctor discusses My Old Foe Again, by which he means bronchitis and other forms of colds and coughs. As usual his advice is good and easily followed. Edward I. Stevenson, of The Independent, contributes an amusing paper called The Universal Advisory Committee: A Proposal, and then we come to a pretty Boating Song, prettily set to music. Cassell & Company, Limited, 15 cents a number, $1 50 a year in advance.

—THE CHAUTAUQUAN, for February, is a marvel of good, real good things. President Adams, Alfred Church, Prof. Harrison, Prof. Baskerville, Dr. Buckley, Maurice Thompson, Prof. Ely, George Parsons Lathrop, are among the contributors to this number. We don't know how this monthly can be improved, but every number seems to get better. If you want good magazine reading, this is your magazine. T. L. Flood, Meadville, Pa. Price, $2.

—WIDE AWAKE, for February, opens with a Persian ballad, "Ahu Said," by Mary E. Bradley, and then follow articles from various pens to please, tickle, instruct and improve the young reader. The story of Greek boy life, A Boyhood in Athens, will act like a tonic on a thoughtful boy. Get this monthly for the children, and you will get one of the best. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Price, $2 40.

—DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE suits a great many people. The different departments are well filled. The reading matter is of a high order, and the "Mirror of Fashions" will delight the ladies. Demorest Company, New York. Price, $2.

—The QUIVER, for February, is on our table with its full complement of Sunday and general reading. We know of no magazine whose tone is so uplifting as the Quiver. Cassell & Company, New York. Price, $1 50.

—THE HOMILETIC MAGAZINE, for January, has: the Homiletical Commentary on Micah; Sermon Outlines on Scripture Characters and for Special Times; Biblical Illustrations, and Practical Homiletics. E. B. Treat, New York.

—THE MAGAZINE OF ART, for February, comes to us full to overflowing with good reading and beautiful illustrations. Cassell & Company, New York. Price, $3 50.

LESSON VI.—February 9.

Childhood and Youth of Jesus.

Luke ii, 40-52.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man.—Luke ii, 52.

TIME.—A. D. 8.

40. The child grew—As other children grow, only in a childhood of stainless and sinless beauty—"as the flower of roses in the spring of the year, and as lilies by the waters." He simply grew. His doing nothing wonderful was itself a kind of wonder. Waxed—increased. Filled—Rather, being filled. The wisdom which formed the leading feature of this development comprises, on the one hand, the knowledge of God; on the other, a penetrating understanding of men and things from a divine point of view. In the development of John the Baptist strength was the leading feature. Grace of God—Divine favor. "Full of grace and truth." To the question, What sort of a boy was Jesus? this brief passage fernis the whole Scripture answer. He had a true human soul as well as body. He was a genuine natural child, infant, and boy. When as an infant the shepherds paid to him their homage, and the magi presented their gifts, he was, probably, totally unconscious of the nature of the transactions. When, at the age of some two and a half years, his parents brought him from their flight into Egypt to the hills of Nazareth, his body grew; and amid the bold scenes of hill and dale, with the blue Mediterranean in the distance, his mind received its expansion. As the synagogue and the lessons at home unfolded the truths of the Old Testament to his view, telling of the Messiah to come, it is wonderful to think what may have been the first presentiments to his mind that he was himself that Messiah.

41. His parents went ... every year at the feast of the passover—The law of Moses required the attendance of all males at the three feasts, of passover, Pentecost, and tabernacles. The great Rabbi Hillel recommended women also to attend the passover. It was not enjoined by the law, but the Jews admired it as a pious practice.

42. Twelve years old—A critical age for a Jewish boy. Up to this age he was called "little," afterward he was called "grown up," and became a "son of the law." At the age of three Jesus had been weaned, and for the first time wore the fringed or tasseled garment prescribed by Num. xv, 38-41, and Deut. xxii, 12. At five he had begun to learn the law, by memorizing extracts of the more important passages which were written on scrolls. It was in strict accordance with usage, with, perhaps, a slight anticipation of the actual day, that now, at the age of twelve, he should have gone up with his parents to Jerusalem. If the conjecture that the birth of our Lord coincided with the paschal season be accepted, he may actually have completed his thirteenth year during the feast; and so have become, in the fullest sense, one of the "children of the law."

43. Had fulfilled the days—The festival lasted seven days. But with the third day began the so-called half-holidays, when it was lawful to return home. Jesus tarried behind—These words do not imply that he intentionally stayed behind Joseph and his mother. Each day of the feast, after the first, we may well believe the "child Jesus" was seeking wisdom to do his Father's work at the hands of the appointed teachers who "sat in Moses' chair." He continued to go, as usual, when the feast was over; but Joseph and Mary, instead of seeking him there, took for granted that he had started with the other boys of the same age who had come from Nazareth. He was, therefore, left in the strange city by himself. If he started independently, he might miss them. He may have found shelter for a night in the house where Joseph and Mary had lodged during the feast, and spent the day, as before, in drinking in the wondrous things of God's law, and asking questions which showed that he demanded more than traditional or conventional explanations.

44. Supposing him to have been in the company—There is nothing extraordinary in the fact that they did not miss the boy till the end of the first day's journey. The Galilean pilgrims would travel together in a caravan including a large number. In such pilgrim bands the women and elderly men are mounted; the younger men walk; drums and timbrels enliven the march; the caravan stops at every spring or well; dates, melons, cucumbers, are passed around to refresh the pilgrims; the occasion is one of innocent mirth and festivity; the children walk and play by the side of their parents, and wander from one group to another, often getting a ride, when wearied, on some camel or mule less heavily loaded than the rest. Thus the supposition that Jesus was in another part of the great caravan was a natural one. Went a day's journey—The usual rate of traveling in the East is three miles an hour; and as the number of hours devoted to traveling rarely exceeds six or eight hours, the distance of an ordinary day's journey may be considered as twenty or twenty-five miles. On the first day, however, it is not customary to go more than six or eight miles, and the tents are pitched for the first night's encampment almost within sight of the place from which the journey commences.

46 After three days—This, in the Jewish idiom, probably means "on the third day." One day was occupied by the journey to Beeroth; on the second, they sought him in the caravans and at Jerusalem; the next day they found him in the temple. The unsettled state of the country would add to their alarm. In the temple, sitting—Doubtless at the feet of the rabbis, as was the custom of Jewish boys when sitting began to be permitted. The "doctors," or teachers, sat "in Moses' seat;" the older students on a low bench; the younger on the ground, literally "at the feet" of their instructor. In the midst—Not occupying a teacher's place, but sitting in the circle among the doctors and their hearers. The doctors—Rather, teachers. Both hearing them, and asking them questions—There is often as much wisdom evinced in asking questions as in answering them. The idea of receiving is here far more prominent than that of teaching. A lecturing, demonstrating child would have been an anomaly, which the God of order would never have exhibited.

47. Astonished at his understanding and answers—Jesus had given some remarkable answer, or put some original question; and had attracted for the moment all the interest of his teachers. Even at twelve his was not a mind to be content with the literalism and superficiality of rabbinical interpretations of Scripture. It was the depth of spiritual insight indicated by his questions, that astonished them. It is indicative of his childlike character that the central object of interest in the temple was not its architectural magnificence, its music, and its ritual, but its schools, where he might study more deeply than in the synagogical schools of Nazareth the truths concerning the kingdom and the Word of God.

48. They were amazed—A very strong word; the verb meaning, literally, to strike out or drive away from; and so to drive out of one's senses. Our English word "amaze" means to throw into a maze or labyrinth; and so is closely akin to the Greek word used here, and is a faithful rendering. Why hast thou thus dwelt with us—An expression of joyful surprise, with only the mildest possible shading of reproof. Thy father—Then up to this time Joseph had been so called by the holy Child himself; but from this time, never. Such words are not chance. Had Mary said "we," the strong contrast with what fellows could not have been brought out. No mythical writer would have suffered Mary to speak of Joseph as the father of Jesus. Yet this would have been her language. For, though not his true father, he stood in the place of one, and would naturally have assumed the title, as usually does the stepfather and not unfrequently the guardian. But Christ's reply turns his mother's thoughts from the seeming to the real father. To him Joseph is not "father."

49. And he said—The first saying of Jesus which is preserved to us. How is it that ye sought me—This is no reproachful question. It is asked in all the simplicity and boldness of holy childhood. Wist ye not—Did ye not know? It appears as if that conviction, the expression of which now first breaks forth from him, must have been a matter known to them. I must—Literally, it is necessary, or it behooves me. A word often used by Jesus concerning his own appointed work, and expressing both the inevitable fulfillment of the divine counsels and the absolute constraint of the principle of duty upon himself. About my Father's business—Literally, "in the things of my Father." The words will bear this rendering; but the Revision is better, "in my Father's house." Mary's question was not as to what her Son had been doing, but as to where he had been. Jesus, in effect, answers, "Where is a child to be found but in his Father's house?" Does not this expression contain a delicate but decisive reply to Mary's words, Thy Father and I? The salient point of this narrative appears to lie in thy father contrasted with my Father. This was the first time that those wonderful words of self-consciousness had been heard from the holy Child—when he began to be "a son of the law" he first calls him his Father who gave him the work to do on earth of perfectly keeping that law. Every word of these verses is of the first importance to modern combatants for sound doctrine.

50. They understood not—Understood not the deeper sense of these wonderful words. Probably, as Stier remarks, the unfolding of his childhood had been so gradual and natural that even they had not been forcibly reminded, by any strong individual notes, of that which he was, and which now showed itself. That word, "my Father," was the first revelation of a relation which surpassed all that Judaism had realized; and the expression, "to be about the business" of this Father, expressed the ideal of a completely filial life, of an existence entirely devoted to God and divine things, which perhaps at this very time has just arisen in the mind of Jesus, and which we could no more understand than Mary and Joseph if the life of Jesus had never come before us. It was only by the light Mary received afterward from the ministry of her Son that she could say what is here expressed: that she did not understand this saying at the time.

51. To Nazareth—In many respects there was a divine fitness in this spot for the human growth of Jesus—"as a tender plant and a root out of the dry ground." Apart from the obscurity of Nazareth, we may notice (1) its seclusion. (2.) Its beauty and peacefulness. It was a home of humble peace and plenty. Subject—In this willing subjection of Christ, despite his real superiority to his peasant guardians, and in this cheerful abandonment of the congenial life of a student for the uncongenial work of an artisan, is a lesson to the children of our day, who find it difficult to yield, in their fancied superiority, to the wisdom of their parents. This was a part, not the least part, of his chosen humiliation. His mother—Treasured them up and pondered them; a hint of the source whence Luke derived them, if not directly, at least through other hands. Joseph is not again mentioned in the gospels. It is generally believed, from this circumstance, that he died before Christ's public ministry began. In the ordering of God's purposes for the salvation of the world through his incarnate Son, the conditions of his human education were a matter of infinite importance, and this high duty was committed (under God) to Joseph and Mary. The conduct of Joseph in all these things is in the highest degree admirable. Nowhere does he show any weakness of either faith or purpose, and his whole life appears to have been devoted to the interests of his wonderful foster-child. But to Mary, the mother of Jesus, does the whole of mankind, and especially the redeemed church, owe an unbounded debt of gratitude; for to her was given the awful duty of fashioning the human character of the world's Redeemer. It is a beautiful thought, and equally truthful, that through the ministries of motherhood have come to our race some of its highest and holiest blessings—that our salvation has come to us through the mingled joys and sorrows of maternity.

52. And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man—This declaration is not to be modified to suit any preconceived theological theories concerning the person of Christ. He experienced a fourfold growth—in stature or age, in wisdom, in divine approval, and in popular favor. A sinless childhood, a sinless boyhood, a sinless youth, a sinless manhood, spent in humility, toil, obscurity, submission, contentment, and prayer. Thankful should we be that this beautiful fragment gives us a glimpse of that long period between the Savior's infancy and the commencement of his ministry. It is embosomed deeply in the natural texture of Eastern life; it is perfect in its fitness to the human-divine character of the youthful Jesus; it bears in its clear simplicity the signatures of historic truth. The modesty, the filial piety, the perfectness of self-control, contentment in mechanical labor, conscious sovereignty undisclosed, a wealth of nature kept back—in short, the holding of his whole being in tranquil silence, waiting for growth to produce his ripe self, and for God, his Father, to shake out the seed which was to become the bread of the world—all this is in itself a wonder of divinity, if men were only wise enough to marvel. Christ's greatest miracle was wrought within himself.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed another gracious meeting at Ameca-meca, where we received eighteen members and baptized ten children. I feel it will be of interest to your readers to hear the particulars of the conversion of three young Roman Catholic women who had never been in a Protestant Church before last Sabbath morning. How they were induced to come or what they came for I have no idea. I only know they came and were converted and joined the church. At eleven, on Sunday, Bro. Watkins preached on "Repentence," and I am sure I have never heard him preach with such power. At one time nearly everybody in the house was in tears; but the preacher did not seem to observe the fact, as he threw himself deeper and deeper into his theme, and the power of the Highest was upon him. I saw during the service that two of them were yielding, but the third was fighting a most desperate battle. They were all at the love-feast in the evening, and one of them rose, and said: "I am thankful for a gospel that is for everybody." After the night service we celebrated the Lord's Supper, and when the invitation for membership was given two of them came forward and were received. The other, however, looked cold and determined. But last night she broke down completely and joined the church.

Oh, Doctor, if I could only make you all see and feel the opportunity for the church, and our great need of men and money, in this field, I know that after the May meeting of the Board our burdened hearts would be made joyous by the coming of relief! How would you feel if fathers and mothers should gather round you and beg for a teacher that their children might be taught to read, so that they might sing our hymns and read the Bible, and you were forced to say, "I can not give you a teacher, because there is no money"? And then they should say to you, "We will furnish her a home and feed her, if you will pay for the work." And still you must reply, "I can not." I have had just that experience. I am not selfish and ask for Mexico at the expense of the needs of other fields. If they must suffer, we will suffer with them. But why must we suffer? Let the missionary watch-word of the church for 1890 be: For China, Japan, Brazil and Mexico one hundred thousand dollars each! Too much for thirteen hundred thousand members? If anyone thinks so, in the name of my blessed Lord, I reply by referring to Malachi iii, 10.

I came in to-day just at the moment when dinner was announced, and at the table I told my wife I had just heard the Woman's Board had re-entered the Central Mexican work. You may be assured there was much rejoicing and but little eating in our mission home at that meal. Is it true? Ah! is it true? May our Father grant us this blessing as our New Year's gift!

My own health is good now; but my wife is just out of bed from an attack of fever. She was in bed for several days, with no one to minister to her but her faithful Protestant Mexican servant. But the Lord is with us, as he said he would be.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Another Good Man Gone.

Rev. C. B. Stuart, of Marshall, is dead. He died on the twenty-fourth instant at 4 P. M. Formerly he was president of Mansfield Female College for thirteen years. During all these years we were intimately acquainted with him. He was a good man, a faithful preacher, a good teacher, a good citizen and a true friend. He has served his day and generation and has gone to his reward, leaving an example worthy to be imitated. We shall see him again, but not here. J. P.

The Secular Press and the Sam Jones' Meetings.

Dr. R. Q. Mallard, a prominent Presbyterian divine in this city, gave last week the readers of the Southwestern Presbyterian his impressions of Sam Jones and his revival services. Dr. Mallard touches up the conduct and attitude of the secular press in regard to these meetings in the following manner:

The coming of this noted evangelist was heralded by our secular press, arrangements made for a daily report of his sermons, and two very excellent synopses of them presented in the columns of at least one of them; but suddenly the newspapers seem to have been struck dumb, and with the exception of an occasional and very brief notice in one of them, so far as I can learn, others have preserved the silence of the sphinx!

Was it because he had been too hard upon sleeping churches; or did they tremble for the reputation and life of that cherished institution, the gift of a reconstruction Legislature, which was "incorporated by it for educational and charitable purposes, and its franchise made a part of the present State Constitution in 1879, by an overwhelming popular vote?"

Now, we submit, that whatever the motive for this silence in *news*papers, which give, or one of them, a full account of sermons preached every Sabbath by a celebrated preacher a thousand miles off; and one discourse, at least, as delivered to a full congregation gathered upon the ashes of his tabernacle; whether it be enterprising or fair, to pass by the sermons preached by a celebrated evangelist in our city; to give the roughs the latest news of Kilrain and Sullivan, and their associated law-breakers, the sporting people the news of the races, and society people the most recent intelligence about weddings, and euchre, and theatre parties, and toilets of ladies, down to the minutest particular; and not give a little space voluntarily to home news, as interesting to the thousands of their religious readers and advertisers, who hope they are Christians and pay their subscriptions and bills as promptly as any hoodlum! Our public will not allow a pugilist to strike, without censure, beneath the belt; and will it approve of this conspicuous want of fair play?

Our readers can judge from the above what sort of newspapers we have. Any news against the Lottery must be squelched!

"Listen!" A man was sitting in the audience with a Lottery ticket in his pocket and ten dollars from a friend in the country to invest in the same wickedness. Rev. Sam turned his "search-light" upon that abomination and showed it in its true colors, and that man tore up his ticket and sent the ten dollars back to his friend, saying, "I am done with the Lottery forever."

The Curse of Meroz.

A few Sabbaths ago our pastor preached to his congregation on this subject. Our pastor is always a plain, practical and, therefore, forceful preacher, and on the occasion of preaching the sermon referred to gave his people some straight gospel. There are some people in every congregation to whom such preaching is not applicable; but our pastor knows his people well, and is too wise a man to waste time and nervous energy in preaching about things that will not be appropriate to the majority of his hearers. So he gave us an earnest sermon, which, it is hoped, will do us good in the way of stirring us out of our spiritual sloth and putting us energetically to help in the great battle of righteousness against sin.

We heard a preacher say, not long since, that "only about one in ten of the church members are any account in helping to fight the Lord's battles." We thought at the time that it was a mistake; but the more we have pondered the statement the less disposition we have to contradict it. At any rate, every pastor and every observing man and woman in the church and out of the church know that there are scores of people in the churches in their own vicinity who are actually doing nothing, absolutely idle in the vineyard of the Lord. Every man, who reads and takes observations as he goes along, knows that the workers in the vineyard—the soldiers in line of battle, are in the minority as to numbers. The majority are members of the church, pass before the world as consistent professors, get credit for what the church does, and yet, like the inhabitants of Meroz, "they come not up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

It is not said of the inhabitants of Meroz that they were a very wicked people, or that they were not a patriotic people, or that there was no place for them to occupy in the campaign against the enemies of Israel. Nothing of that sort is laid to their charge. The complaint was that they had done nothing in the fight which resulted in driving back the enemy and achieving the glorious victory. While their brethren had adventured their lives and fortunes and their all upon the result of one short, sharp campaign, they had remained at home indifferent as to the result. Strange to say, this very Meroz was the center of the seat of war. They could hear the clash of arms and the noise of battle at their very firesides, they knew it was liberty or the extinction of Israel, and yet they did nothing for one side or the other. Their brethren might pour out their blood and grapple in the death-struggle with the enemy to save God's heritage, but they would do nothing. And the curse is called down upon them for that reason only.

As far as the general cause was concerned, they were not needed, for the victory was gained without them; but as far as they were concerned, their neutrality brought upon them the direst curse. When God teaches a man or a community, by an actual fact, the great truth, "He that is not with me is against me," it simply becomes appalling. These Merozites were the "do-nothings" in Deborah's time, and, like all "do-nothings," they reaped the curse of God.

God has always had his controversies with wickedness. It is the only thing that he fights, and in an issue, where God is on one side and Satan on the other, no man or woman in the church or out of it can be neutral without incurring the curse of Meroz. Every true soldier of the cross stands for righteousness against wickedness. If he leans toward the latter, he is disloyal to his Lord and has broken his vows and may expect the curse. If he stands to his colors with the resolution to die rather than yield to sin, he may expect the victory.

God is mapping out a campaign for the Christian Church in Louisiana. For twenty years this fair State has been "mightily oppressed" and her children fleeced by the operations of that monstrous iniquity, the Louisiana State Lottery. The cry of the oppressed has gone up to heaven, and the answer has come back in the fact that God is moving upon men and women and churches and labor assemblies to speak out against this appalling wickedness. Through these very words we are penning God is calling to every Methodist in this State to come forth, like an honest Christian, and take his place in the ranks and never cease his efforts until this curse shall be swept from our midst. The fight is righteousness against wickedness; God against the Lottery. No Christian can be neutral. Remember the curse of Meroz!

The Revival Services.

Wednesday night Bro. Jones preached from the text in Acts, "Repent ye and be converted." We have read a good deal about Bro. Jones' defective views on the subject of repentance; but it seems to us that he was sound on the doctrine, and his illustrations made the subject as plain as it could well be. On the subject of conversion or regeneration, he said that he did not know enough about it to explain it to others. He was much in the attitude of the cured blind man: "Whereas I was blind, now I see." The discourse was listened to profoundly by the great audience, many of whom had to stand during the service. The after-meeting was a gracious season, very many coming forward asking the prayers of Christians, and several making an open confession of Christ as their Savior.

The crowd on Thursday evening gathered early, thereby showing their interest in the service. The great hall was filled, many standing in the rear. The preacher took his text from the Psalms: "What wait I for; my hope is in God." He gave a resume of the reasons operating to hold back men who are convinced of the truth of religion from a public profession of Christ. As he showed the unreasonableness of these reasons, many were convinced and, at the close of the sermon, came forward and gave their hands and promises to start out on a new life. Many hundred Christians stood up in token of their determination to do more for God and the right than they had been doing.

Friday evening, at an early hour, every seat was occupied, and yet the people kept coming until hundreds were standing in the aisles and in the rear of the hall. The choir rendered some choice songs, Bro. Frank Parker led in an earnest prayer, and the evangelist announced his text: "And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." For an hour the great preacher talked, as only he can talk, upon "Unselfishness." His manner, the tones of his voice, the emphasis upon special words, the illustrations from every-day life, all went to show the earnestness of the speaker. There can be nothing so grand, so sublime, so beautiful as an unselfish life, but human nature is so weak, that the world has never had the exhibition of but one. Jesus never thought of himself. His work and speech and methods of life were but a manifestation of unselfishness. "He went about doing good." So marked was the effect of the sermon that hundreds pledged themselves to live more for the good of others than they had been doing. At the after-meeting at least seventy-five people presented themselves for the prayers of the people of God, and a most unctious prayer was offered by Dr. Mallard, of the Presbyterian Church.

Saturday night the sermon was preached by Bro. Stuart. The rush of this man's thought is something remarkable. Go as fast as he can speak, he does not seem to be able to keep pace with the rapidity of his mind's working. He discoursed on deliverance from "the snare of the fowler." His pictures of the saloon snares and the Lottery snare will never be forgotten, and the pathos with which he tried to scare the poor birds away from these delusive and destructive snares brought tears to many eyes. The discourse was short and sharp, and the people went away convinced that the devil was the most successful fowler that ever spread a snare.

Sunday evening and night Bro. Jones preached to a packed house; in the evening to a mixed audience, and at night to men only. The text for the evening sermon was: "In Christ Jesus," and at night, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Two thousand men listened eagerly to this terrific sermon against saloons, profanity and gambling. This sermon was taken by a stenographer, and, we understand, will be published in pamphlet form and scattered broadcast over the State.

The last service was held at ten o'clock Monday morning.

Bro. Jones preached a most delightful sermon on, "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." It was a refreshing draught from the "well of salvation," and all the Christian people were gladdened and strengthened by it.

This being the last service, quite a number publicly expressed their thanks to Bros. Jones and Stuart and Prof. Excell for their work among us. Dr. Carradine, of the Methodist Church; Dr. Bussey, of the Baptist Church; Dr. Mallard, of the Presbyterian Church; Dr. Cole, of the Baptist Church; Bros. Carter, Beard, Sawyer, Walker, Ahrens and Manly, of the Methodist Church, gave words of thanks and cheer to the evangelist. Mrs. Merrick, in behalf of the mothers, spoke words of grateful acknowledgment for the service rendered the homes of New Orleans by the revival services. Bro. Jones responded to these speeches in tender love and gratitude. The congregation sung the doxology, and the great meeting came to a close.

We have, as yet, no means of determining the amount of good done. Hundreds, we know, have been influenced towards a better life, and we expect to see the reaping during all the year.

The prayers of the churches of New Orleans accompany this remarkable man wherever he goes.

Our Growth.

This, from the St. Louis Christian Advocate, is interesting reading on the above subject:

At the close of the Conference year of 1845-6 the first year after the division in 1844 was effected our total membership was 455,217, of whom 124,961 were colored people and 2,972 were Indians, with 1,433 traveling and 2,830 local preachers. Fifteen years after that or in 1860 there were 2,615 traveling and 5,353 local preachers, with a total membership of 757,605, of whom 171,857 were colored people and 3,395 were Indians. So, in those fifteen years, we gained over 300,000 members, averaging 100,000 every five years, or 20,000 a year. This is the bright side of the picture. Now let us turn over and look on the other side.

In 1866 the membership was 505,101, a loss of over 250,000 in six years or really in the five years of the war, but in 1866 was the earliest full statistics could be gathered. This loss covered five-sixths of the gain in the fifteen years. Of this loss nearly 100,000 were colored members, and of the 3,395 Indian members in 1860 only 701 were found in 1866. The 174,857 colored members in 1860 were reduced 78,742 in 1866, and these soon after were, at their own request, organized into a separate body. So, in about six years our loss was some 300,000. Is it any wonder other denominations and many friends should have regarded our case as hopeless? But let us turn the picture once more.

Twenty-two years pass, and in 1887-8 we see the church with 1,107,456 members, 4,530 traveling and 6,192 local preachers; 11,724 Sunday-schools, 82,205 teachers and 649,104 scholars, with missionary and church extension societies, colleges and high schools—one or more in almost or quite every Conference. To all these particulars the results of the Conference year 1888-9 are yet to be added.

The Blessings of Revivals.

The Watchman gives us a good article on "Revivals from on High," several paragraphs of which we give our readers. After producing facts from the history of individual churches to show that prosperity hinges upon revivals, the Watchman says:

Let this blessing be withheld from a church, or from an association of churches, through a long period—through a succession of years it may be—and what is seen to be the result? There is not only the failure of growth in numbers, but the failure of all other growth as truly. Indifferentism and formalism, if not a Laodicean lukewarmness, fall upon the membership of any given church in the long-continued absence of a revival from on high. Missions and all good causes languish in consequence. A pure and genuine revival of religion has come to be—not less than ever in the past—one indispensable means of keeping alive the graces and the activities of professing believers, even as it has increasingly come to be the recognized and the reliant means of recruiting the ranks of God's sacramental and elect host. From the spiritual outpouring at the feast of the Pentecost until our day this has never failed to be as operative as it is true.

Ministers—pastors of churches in a particular manner—should organize instrumentally those under their leadership—should construct, at least, a proportion of their sermons, should preach and pray and labor as well in prayer meeting as in pulpit, to the single end of promoting revivals of "pure religion and undefiled"—all this with the broadest comprehension of all the great and the vital issues thereby involved. And the officers and the membership of the churches, male and female, should in these respects earnestly and perseveringly co-operate with the pastoral leadership. Let this be done throughout the land, in its length and its breadth; in every church and in every community let this opening year witness the prompt inauguration of this large endeavor, and who shall say that as in prophetic prevision the year 1890 shall not prove to be a year of unwonted spiritual benediction from on high; the very windows of heaven being opened to shower down blessings, so that there shall not be room enough to receive them?

Prohibition and the Pulpit.

The Caligraph, published at Ruston, La., and one of our most valued exchanges, speaking of a sermon preached on prohibition in that town by Rev. T. B. Harrall, of the Baptist Church, says:

The discussion of this subject from the pulpit and the application of the ecclesiastical lash on the question to the namby-pamby, milk-and-cider element in the church is eminently the correct thing. If the church is not in duty bound to take an aggressive stand and lead in the fight against this arch-enemy of mankind and destroyer of human souls, in the name of consistency who is? It is a lamentable fact that the ineffectiveness of prohibition legislation is due, in a large measure, to the lukewarmness and neutrality of the church on the subject heretofore. But happily that day has now passed, and the church is now beginning to "come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

That was a good thing to say, Bro. Pearce. Now, reader, substitute the Louisiana Lottery in place of prohibition and see if the above wont read about right also. The fact is, the church in this country can control anything it wants to control, and if she would only say so, the Lottery would go and prohibition would come.

Notes.

We have written Bro. Jones' New Orleans epitaph, and it stands in these words: "We shall not look upon his like again."

"A man ought to be either a believer or an infidel," said the Mercurius of the occasion, and set a whole congregation of practical skeptics to hard thinking.

Professor Excell always excels in his difficult art, but it is doubtful if he has anything in his repertory to compare with the old favorite, "He saved a poor sinner like me."

Though the revival was not a veritable Pentecost, it was a great success in many particulars, and a modest estimate would not fall short of several hundreds of convictions and conversions.

Rev. George Stuart is not Summerfieldian exactly, but it has occurred to us that he might be the moral and physical image of a man to whom this adjective has often been applied, viz: Rev. Elijah Steele.

The tide of holy song that swept nightly upon the vast sea of upturned faces is neither lost onergy nor vanishing refrain, but rolls sweet and clear through the spiritual auditorium lifted up to receive all hallowed impressions from the kingdoms beyond.

Turning to the rich men prone to cast their gifts of widow's mites into the treasury, he satirized the utter recklessness of their conduct in risking a whole nickel upon the contribution plate. "Why," he said, with inimitable drollery, "you might never see it again."

"The controversy between Christianity and infidelity in its last analysis is this," said the preacher, "that the former builds school-houses, hospitals, asylums, churches and happy homes, and infidelity tears down these conservators of our country's freedom and morality. It is a plain question of old Bob and destruction, or of Jesus Christ and construction."

Here is a sample of how the evangelist's illustrations illustrate, and his scriptural and classical insinuations insinuate. "To walk circumspectly," is not only to look to the front, but also to right and left and rear, and it is not only to look about us thus comprehensively, but it is also to look above us and to look beneath us. When the Indian bids farewell to the inhabitants of his wigwam and goes forth to the chase, they feel no anxiety concerning him, for they know that he will walk circumspectly. No wild beast can attack from the front and no secret foe approach him unobserved from behind; the panther can not leap upon him from arboreal retreat nor cunning serpent dart upon him from the brushy path he treads. He trusts the Great Spirit, but at the same time looks narrowly to his own steps." Who but a philologist could have seen all that in one familiar English word, or, having seen it, could convey it to others in images so vivid.

On Sunday night next preceding that which witnessed the close of the meeting, the great hall was "rammed, jammed and crammed," the actual and possible attendance ranging from four thousand to eight thousand persons, many having been turned from the doors, and the speaker projected himself upon that ocean of humanity in great waves of inspired eloquence which gave quite the effect of a storm at sea with white billows assailing an inky sky and incessant phosphoric gleams adorning vistas of dense cloud. In the midst of this elemental furore a disillusioning voice said, "Listen!" and every human wave, caught as by the wand of a magician, hung in mid air of suspense while the speaker told first of the love of God to a lost world and then of his love to a lost sinner. An impossible task for the logician might be to demonstrate that God loved the sinner more than the saint, his human enemy more than his human child; but there is an art higher than logic, even as there is a conjuror's skill higher than that of mountebank, and this latter-day son of thunder proved it to the satisfaction of every soul open to conviction of any kind, first from Scripture and second from nature. A familiar illustration taken from the former was the parable of the lost sheep, and from the latter a mother's love for an afflicted child.

Personal and Otherwise.

Quite a number of preachers from the Conferences attended the revival services: Bowen and Standifer, of North Mississippi; Hunnicutt, Hopper, Wood, Ellis, Adams, Watkins, Chambers, of Mississippi; Grace, F. N. Parker, of Louisiana, and many laymen.

When the preacher said to his congregation, "I want to love you into the kingdom of God," he was on the right tack. If love can't win, the case is hopeless.

If you want your people to have a full and correct account of the doings of the General Conference that is soon to meet, press upon them the fact that our paper will give the best account to them that they can get. Use this point in your canvass for the paper.

A presiding elder from the North Mississippi Conference, in our office, the other day, made us feel grateful by the way he spoke of the influence our paper was having in his district. Our only desire is to do good, and when we hear of its being done we "thank God and take courage."

We again call the attention of obituary writers to the note at the head of the obituary column in our paper. If you send more than thirty-five lines, without the money for the extra lines, you need not expect the obituary to appear. Don't send the obituary and request us to send bill. Send the money with the extra lines, and it will be sure to appear; without the money it will be sure to disappear. We actually have not the time to go through obituaries and shorten them.

We are indebted to D. M. Ferry, seedsman, of Detroit, Mich., for a package of assorted flower seeds.

We have received the program of the Florida Chautauqua, which begins its exercises February 20, and ends March 27. A number of eminent lecturers and preachers are engaged, and the assembly promises to be a brilliant affair.

Rev. Sam Jones is to lecture on "Temperance," March 15; to preach, March 16, and to lecture, March 17, on "Mother, Home and Heaven," at the Florida Chautauqua.

Mr. Grady's last speech can be found on sale at the Christian Woman's Exchange in this city, "the net proceeds of which are to be put in the alms' coffer of the Conference of Charities."

We are pained to read in the Texas Christian Advocate of the death of Rev. Samuel Armstrong, a superannuate of the North Texas Conference. He died in West Dallas, January 17. Bro. Armstrong was a member of the Louisiana Conference from 1860 to 1875. We knew him well and loved him much. He had reached his seventy-seventh year.

"Brethren, listen!" A postal card is just the thing on which to send us news "from the work." You don't know, perhaps, how many facts can be written on a postal card! Try it and see. We have many complaints about long uninteresting letters purporting to contain "news from the work." Brethren, try the postals awhile.

Miss Bennett, the traveling agent for the Kansas City Missionary Training-school, gave us a call last week. The prospects for the success of that institution are brightening every day.

Brother, suppose you give one day in the week to canvassing for the ADVOCATE. You may not get everybody to subscribe, but you will learn some things that will help you to preach. Try it and see!

The author of "Sermons and Sayings," which latter, by the way, are only samples of his luminosity, as sparks may proclaim a journeying sphere, loves to joke his friends and admirers especially, and to his audience, in a fit of ill-suppressed risibility, he said, with sepulchral manner, "Intelligence never giggles!"

"Political freedom is nothing," quoth Bro. Jones, appealing to the brother in black, who hung like a funeral pall on the western boundry of the audience; "Abrahnm Lincoln could not free a man, only Jesus Christ could do that. Christian freedom is everything. A drunken white man (elsewhere the devil's riding horse) is a subject of compassion for a sober black man."

Mr. Jones' train to Heaven was a realistic picture. At Conviction the cars were crowded. At Conversion they were all in a happy mood. At Brotherly Love their joy ran over. At Obedience they were as one determined to hold out to the end. But when the porter shouted, "Next station is Generosity!" nine-tenths of the passengers jumped from the train and broke their necks. They would not go to Heaven by way of Generosity, and yet, said he, "that is the only way."

Rev. Sam Jones left the city for his home, at Cartersville, Ga., Monday, at 3:30 P. M., where he will spend a few days resting, preparatory to holding meetings in Tyler, Texas. Bro. Jones carries with him the good wishes of the Christians of New Orleans.

The New York Sun says truly when it says, "The main purpose of a good English style is to convey the idea with the least friction."

Some People Wonder.

The Hattiesburg Courier quotes from the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE as follows.

"It is a very curious thing that the newspapers in this city, professing to give the news, have no mention of the greatest movement for right against wrong which was ever started here. It looks like they were against the right and in favor of the wrong."

It then adds:

So we have thought and wondered why it was that staunch, reliable and, in our esteem, the favorite among New Orleans secular papers should, after having reported for several days the religious exercises at Rev. Sam Jones' meetings, suddenly shut out from its columns all mention or allusion to the labors of the great evangelist. The Times-Democrat and States, the other leading dailies, have fallen into line too, and all of them ignore the work and success of a man who, under God, has been the instrument of more good than any other living man.

Why, as a matter of news the exercises of these meetings are worthy of note. Artillery Hall packed nightly till there is not standing room and extraordinary crowds attending commodious churches on week days, morning and afternoon. All of this not worthy of mention? Oh! no. There is something wrong about this strange, unprecedented action. Cincinnati, San Francisco, Kansas City, Nashville, Lynchburg, Jackson, Meridian, aye, every place except New Orleans, have had daily press notices of the labors of this man of God. His sermons have been reported, criticisms both favorable and unfavorable indulged; but the extraordinary course of the New Orleans secular press is without precedent.

As we have said before, there is only one solution of this strange conduct. Rev. Sam poured hot shot into the Lottery, and every boom of his gun was greeted by "tremendous applause." In the reports that were given, all reference to the Lottery were excluded. The inference is too plain to be pointed out. One hundred dollars a day is a mighty persuader, no matter how the poor people suffer.

Rev. D. W. Dillehay and the Mississippi Conference Brotherhood.

Another member of our Brotherhood has passed away. Bro. Dillehay was the eleventh member of our order to fall on sleep since its organization in Natchez, December, 1882. It is in order now for each surviving beneficiary member to send $5 to our treasurer, Rev. I. W. Cooper, Hattiesburg, Miss. The mortuary fee of non-beneficiary members is $1. Would it not be well for us all to try now to secure new members. And any person who may feel disposed to aid a good cause may send his or her contribution to the treasurer.

—Rev. J. E. Benson writes from Washington, La.: "After some unavoidable delay we are at last domiciled in our new home. The kind ladies and friends have succeeded in making us very comfortable in the way of household furniture. Last evening quite a number of our friends called to welcome us in their midst, bringing with them such a shower of good things in the way of edibles that this preacher and his fractional part are in danger of becoming indolent from surplus flesh. May God enable me to supply them with the bread of eternal life!"

—A good sister writes us follows: "I liked your editorial on 'The Profits of the Publishing House.' We want not only a 'better literature,' but a cheaper literature. The bright boy or girl is not going to give fifty cents or a dollar for a book when they can get a novel for a dime. Make pure, good, attractive literature, as cheap as the devil's literature, and you will have solved one problem and put the Sunday-school a long stride ahead of where it is now."

A new paper, called The Round Table, a weekly of half the size of the Independent, is about to be started in Nashville, Tenn. "It will contain articles on politics, religion, science, art, the leading topics of the day, serials, short stories, etc." We understand that Dr. D. C. Kelley is to be the editor of this new paper.

A boon to the people is Salvation Oil. You can afford to pay 25 cents for a good liniment.

In 38 States and 13 Territories of the United States the people use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

The Catholic Population.

"Hoffman's Catholic Directory" is said to be the official directory of the Catholic Church in the United States. The Morning Star, of this city, publishes some statistics from this directory which we give our readers to show them what the figures are. There are 2,126 regular and 6,337 secular clergy; 7,420 churches, 2,718 stations and 1,539 chapels; 202 orphan asylums and 22,761 orphans; 30 theological seminaries, with 1,631 students; 125 colleges, 632 academies, 3,209 parochial schools, with 651,838 children attending. The whole Catholic population is estimated at 8,301,367. We presume this is about correct. So we see from this view that the whole Catholic population is not quite equal in numbers to the Baptists and Methodists put together. If we add the other denominations, we see that Protestantism is far, far ahead.

Our Young People.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

I am the happy father of
A half a dozen boys;
Nobody knows how much I love
Those solid little joys.

And no one knows how much I pay
To furnish them with fun—
For children nowadays don't play
As when myself was one.

I lots of pleasure used to find,
In happy days of yore,
In little trousers patched behind
And jackets darned before.

But now the children must be dressed
In uniforms complete
Before they can with proper zest
In any game compete.

Red tennis shoes and belts and hose
And blazer coats and caps
And knickerbockers are the clothes
That grace my little chaps.

And when those tiny experts go
With rackets, big as they,
To tackle tennis, 'tis a show
Worth all I have to pay.

The world moves on. The games and toys
That I in childhood prized
Are by my high-toned little boys
Uncared for and despised.

And if they had to wear the clothes
I reveled in when small,
They'd tell me, turning up each nose,
They couldn't play at all.

A Spelling-Bee.

BY ROSA GRAHAM.

"I'm going to have a spelling-bee to-night," said Uncle John, "and I'll give a pair of skates to the boy that can best spell man."

The children turned and stared into each other's eyes.

"Best spell man, Uncle John? Why, there's only one way!" they cried.

"There are all sorts of ways," replied Uncle John. "I'll leave you to think of it awhile;" and he buttoned up his coat and went away.

"What does he mean?" asked Bob.

"I think it's a joke," said Harry, thoughtfully; "and when Uncle John asks me I'm going to say, 'Why, m-a-n, of course.'"

"It's a conundrum, I know," said Jo, and he leaned his head on his hand and settled down to think.

Time went slowly to the puzzled boys, for all their fun that day. It seemed as if that after-supper time would never come; but it came at last, and Uncle John came too, with a shiny skate-runner peeping out of his great-coat pocket.

Uncle John did not delay; he sat down and looked straight into Harry's eyes.

"Been a good boy to-day, Hal?"

"Yes, n-o," said Harry, flushing. "I did something Aunt Mag told me not to do, because Ned Barnes dared me to. I can't bear a boy to dare me. What's that to do with spelling man?" he added, half to himself.

But Uncle John had turned to Bob.

"Had a good day, my boy?"

"Haven't had fun enough," answered Bobbie, stoutly. "It's all Joe's fault, too. We boys wanted the pond to ourselves for one day, and we made up our minds that when the girls came we'd clear them off. But Jo, he—"

"I think this is Jo's to tell," interrupted Uncle John. "How was it, boy?"

"Why," said Jo, "I thought the girls had as much right on the pond as the boys. So I spoke to one or two of the bigger boys, and they thought so too, and we stopped it all. I thought it was mean to treat girls that way."

There came a flash from Uncle John's pocket; the next minute the skates were on Jo's knee.

"The spelling-match is over," said Uncle John, "and Jo has won the prize."

Three bewildered faces mutely questioned him.

"Boys," he answered gravely, "we've been spelling man not in letters but in acts. I told you there were different ways, and we've proved it here to-night. Think it over, boys, and see."
—Selected.

A SLIP OF THE TONGUE.—Louise and Polly were on their way to take tea at the minister's house, and Louise was giving a few last words of advice.

"Do be nicer, Polly, than you were at Mrs. Carleton's last week, and not take everything that is offered you. If they have two kinds of a thing say, 'I like both; I will take either.'"

Polly promised to be very polite.

"Well, Polly, what shall I give you, chicken or tongue?" and Dr. Brown smiled pleasantly at the little figure next him.

"I like either; I will take both," said Polly, as she glanced brightly at Louise for approval.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please publish my little letter in your paper? I have never written for your ADVOCATE; but I get to read the letters from the cousins. I am a very little girl of eleven years of age. I have two sisters and one brother. I have a very good father and mother. My mother keeps a hotel, and my father is a merchant. I am a member of Sunday-school, and attend regularly. I go to school all that I can. I study fifth reader, grammar, history, arithmetic, geography and Swinton's Word Book. My teacher is Miss Annie Baldwin; she is loved by every one. The mumps is in Enterprise. My mother had them about three weeks before Christmas, my oldest sister and myself had them Christmas week, and my younger sister has them now. My friend is writing now. I will ask a question: Where is "lilies" first mentioned in the New Testment? I will close with much love to the cousins. Your little friend,

MAGGIE EDMONSON.

MR. EDITOR: I hope I will not tire the little cousins with my numerous letters to the ADVOCATE. Our dear preacher, Rev. V. D. Skipper, who had been with us two years, was sent to Rocky Springs this year. We all loved him so much, and have been sad ever since he left; but we have another preacher, Bro. T. M. Williams, whom I think we will love very much. We have had quite a change in the weather here in the last two days. It has been very warm, but this morning there is ice everywhere. The pear, quince and peach trees are all in full bloom and the fig trees have large leaves, I am afraid we will not have any fruit. I will ask the little cousins a question: Where is "gold and onyx stone" first mentioned in the Bible, and where were they found? With many kind wishes for the dear old ADVOCATE and the editor. Your little friend,

KATE E. GRAMLING.

MAYERSVILLE, Miss.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl three years old, and I want to tell you how grieved we are that the Conference sent our dear pastor, Bro, J. N. Tucker, away from us. He is such a good man, and we all love him so much. I was one of his pets. As soon as he would come to see us I would run to meet him, and he would take me in his lap and tell me about Jesus. Our new pastor, Bro. W. W. Cammack, has come, and I think we all will love him very much. He has such a sweet little wife. Whenever mama asks me who I love I always say I love Bro. Powell, but best Bro. Tucker. I do hope he will be loved and appreciated where he goes like the people of Fannin have loved him. May the Lord bless him wherever he may be sent!

His little friend,

ADA L. ALFORD.

FANNIN, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: I got a great many nice things Christmas morning. Father gave me a nice writing-desk, paper and pencil, and Sister Sweatman sent me a tool-chest with all sorts of nice tools in it—a saw, a plane, a hammer, a square, etc. Sister Trotter sent me a basketful of nice fruit and cake and a pocket-book with twenty-five cents in it. Little brother got a candy basket with a nice bouquet. New Year's morning I received a "fish pond." I wrote Santa Claus a letter to bring me a wagon and a yoke next Christmas, and I am going to get me two billy-goats, and then I will have a nice time.

I will ask a question: Which was the more illustrious woman, Vashti or Esther?

Your little friend,

IRVINE A. LEWIS.

WINONA, Miss.

Household.

Doing One's Best.

One's best is a very variable quantity. Duties must be done, obligations met, responsibilities discharged, irrespective of our moods and often of our capabilities. When the hour strikes for certain work to be done, we must be on hand and do it with little regard to whether we can do it well or ill. But all that is required of us is to do the best we can at the time; and it is accepted of a man according to that he hath, and not according to that he hath not.

The house-mother often rises in the morning feeling quite inadequate to meet the requirements of the day. As she sees what her children need, and compares their needs with her ability to meet them, she can but exclaim, "Who is sufficent for these things?" There is nothing for her to do but to do the best she can, even though it be a very poor best.

When nine o'clock calls the teacher to her pupils, not always is she in the best mood for answering that call. But she is required only to do the best she can.

The student sits down to a hard lesson, perhaps with an aching head, with dull perceptions, with unretentive memory, and his very best efforts fail to make him master of it. His conscience may give him the peace his standing in the recitation room denies.

There are some things for which we may be held responsible in the matter of doing our best. Whatever that is avoidable by us, and that robs us of that ability, we are in duty bound to avoid. We can not knowingly and willingly put it out of our power to do our best and then complain of the result or deny our responsibility for it.

Sometimes the very "stars in their courses" seem to fight against us as they fought against Sisera. The skies are clouded, the storm howls about us, the atmosphere is oppressive, and our "environment" suppresses, chokes us. Even then all we are required to do is our best, and leave results with a higher power.—Christian Weekly.

A MOTHER'S COUNSEL.—The great men of the world have generally owed much to the character and training of their mothers. If we go back to their childhood, we see there the maternal influences which formed the aims and habits of their future life.

Bayard, the flower of French knighthood, the soldier without fear or reproach, never forgot the parting words of his mother, when he left home at fourteen to become the page of a nobleman. She said to him, with all the tenderness of a loving heart: "My boy, serve God first. Pray to him night and morning. Be kind and charitable to all. Beware of flatterers, and never become one yourself. Avoid envy, hatred, and lying, as vices unworthy of a Christian; and never neglect to comfort widows and orphans."

When Bayard was foremost in battle, confessedly the bravest warrior in the field, or when, in his own great thirst, he was giving water to a dying enemy, he was only carrying out his mother's counsel, and striving to be worthy of her name. The memory of a mother's love is a talisman against temptation, and a stimulus to a good life.—Selected.

UNHAPPY HOMES.—There is a great deal of talk about the duty of women to make home happy. But, if the home is not happy, whose fault is it? Not in one case in a dozen, it may safely be said, does the blame rest with the woman. If a man makes his home simply a convenient place where he may take his meals and possibly growl or sulk over them, whose fault is it? If his house is simply a lodging-place of last resort, to which he must repair when he is shut out everywhere else, whose fault is that? And if, while he is in his home, he is evidently there under constraint, preoccupied with matters abroad, and fidgeting to be gone, who is to blame for that? Not certainly the woman who, forgetful of past and even of habitual disappointment, has looked forward with hope for his return to enliven her solitude and to make care a pleasure by dividing it with her.

If you have catarrh, you are in danger, as the disease is liable to become chronic and affect your general health, or develop into consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying and enriching the blood, and building up the system. Give it a trial.

Iodine for Rattlesnake Bite.

Dear Doctor: In a late issue of the Advocate, I noticed an article on "Remedies for Snake Bite," setting forth olive oil and ammonia as good and safe remedies. As to the virtues of olive oil I know nothing as touching snake bites. Ammonia is good when you can get nothing better; but I write this to say that tincture of iodine is a specific in this trouble. If you can get it in time, apply in full strength to the wound, and give the patient one to five drops in water every ten minutes, for, say an hour, or until improvement sets in, then lengthen out to an hour. Some fifteen years ago I was called to treat a dangerous case of snake bite, where the whiskey remedy had been faithfully tried and had failed, and my patient was fearfully swollen, and appeared near dying.

I gave the iodine in one drop doses every five minutes, and was astonished to see the prompt and rapid recovery. In twelve hours the lady was able to resume her household labors, and suffered no further inconvenience from the snake bite. I have treated perhaps one dozen cases with this remedy, using no other, and each case with the most gratifying success.

Nine years ago, this past summer, a white lad whilst plowing for me was bitten on his ankle by a ground rattler. I was from home, and did not see him for three or four hours after the occurrence; when I did see him the limb was badly swollen up to the knee, and he was in great suffering. Too late to make an outward application, I put ten drops of iodine in as many teaspoons of water, and gave him a teaspoonful of this mixture every five minutes for a few times, then lengthened out to thirty minutes. I gave him about twenty drops in all, and the next morning he resumed his plowing without any inconvenience.

Some years ago I happened at a friend's house a few minutes after his dog had been bitten by a monstrous Florida rattlesnake, and gave the dog iodine in five or six-drop doses when he was thought to be dying. In six hours he was able to go out with his master cow hunting.

In every case I have tried it, it has proved so satisfactory that I consider it a perfect antidote to the bite of the rattlesnake, or moccasin, or tarantula, and recommend it with confidence as such. Yours, truly,

THE ALASKAN ALPS.—Though by no means the highest mountain in the world by actual measurement, yet Mt. St. Elias probably appears as large as, if not larger, than any other, for it is plainly visible from the sea throughout its entire height of eighteen or nineteen thousand feet, though situated from forty to fifty miles inland. The Swiss mountains, which are all under sixteen thousand feet, are generally seen from elevations varying from four to eight thousand feet, while in the Himalayas the plane of observation is considerably higher. It is certainly true that, with the possible exception of Mt. Wrangel, about which little is known, Mt. St. Elias presents the greatest snow climb of all the mountains in the world, on account of the low point to which the line of perpetual snow descends in these northerly regions. Beside St. Elias such mountains as Cook and Vancouver sank into insignificance.—Scribner's Magazine.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Hamlesinger, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

Christ says to every lost sinner, "Come;" to every redeemed sinner, "Go."—W. S. Aspey, D. D.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

We value everything in this world by comparison. Water and air have no intrinsic value, and yet Jay Gould, if famishing in the desert, would give all his wealth for a pint of the former, and think it cheap; hence life and health are the standard of all values. If your system is full of Malaria, you will be very miserable; a few doses of Shallenberger's Antidote will make you well and happy. Is one dollar a high price to pay?

Ayer's Hair Vigor

IS the "Ideal" Hair-dressing. It restores the color to gray hair; promotes a fresh and vigorous growth; prevents the formation of dandruff; makes the hair soft and silken; and imparts a delicate but lasting perfume.

"Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. I tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given me satisfaction. It is an excellent dressing, prevents the hair from turning gray, insures its vigorous growth, and keeps the scalp white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for promoting the growth of the hair, and think it unequaled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Fever, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant."—Mrs. M. V. Day, Cohoes, N. Y.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. J. Culien, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

STEGALL.—Mrs. ELLEN L. STEGALL, wife of William M. Stegall, died at her home, near Smithville, Miss., October 8, 1889. She was the daughter of a Methodist preacher, Rev. D. Horkey, a strong and able preacher. Sister Stegall was born in North Carolina, but raised near Selma, Ala. Her father moved to Mississippi when she was about grown, where she lived when she married the man whose name she bore for more than thirty years, without shame or regret, for he was a kind and provident husband.

Sister Stegall was far from being an ordinary woman. Mentally, she was strong. She was a great reader and had stored her mind with a rich variety of knowledge. You could hardly approach her upon any subject that she could not converse intelligently upon, and most always give you some information upon it. Often when we would be talking around the fire-side she would raise her eyes from her book or paper and correct us about men and things. Her mind was a great storehouse of knowledge, and this she used to help you and not to make you feel your interiority. It was far from her manner of life to hurt by any means any soul, for a great, warm and noble heart beat in her bosom. This was evidenced in her dealings with her fellow-creatures, from the smallest negro child that played in her back yard to the preacher that enjoyed her rich hospitality, for to her preachers were the greatest men in the world. How she loved them! What a pleasure to her to bestow upon them her labor and care! And this she often had the pleasure of doing, for her large and comfortable residence was the preacher's home. Oh, how many weary and tired preachers have found shelter and rest under her roof! I had some oppertunity of knowing Sister Stegall, for, as her pastor, I made her home my home for four years. She was to me a mother. How thoughtful and kind! Her sweet, gentle Christian character is daguerreotyped upon hearts and minds of all classes of people, for in deeds of kindness and acts of mercy she knew no class or color. A great woman, indeed, is gone. That last stroke of paralysis was too much for her, and she gently passed away. But she is not dead, but alive for evermore. When I was with the family a few days since I noticed her chair in its accustomed place; but that benevolent face could not be seen.

Bereaved ones, look up; you know where to find her. She waits upon the other shore. May God's blessing rest upon you all and his grace strengthen you in this great bereavement, for it is, indeed, a bereavement; but only for a time. We can but bow in humble submission to the will of him that doeth all things well. W. S. SHIPMAN.

PARISH—While Bro. E. W. and Sister A. E. PARISH were visiting the parents of Sister Parish, in Yazoo county, the little bright-eyed daughter, VERGINA OLIVIA, fell on sleep in the arms of Jesus. She was just at that age to make glad the hearts and sweeten the home of any parent, being one year seven months and twenty-six days old. This little lamb went to sleep August 2, 1889, to wake no more until the graves all give up their dead. But, thank God, it is only the body that is sleeping; the little spirit is close by the throne of God, freed from all suffering; and now that she, the only daughter, is there, heaven has one more glittering star to attract the parents and friends to that place of happiness. How sad we feel when God takes these little ones home, and yet how blessed the thought, that he, who took the little lambs up in his arms and blessed them, cares for them better than we can.

R. A. BURROUGHS.

ROGERS—Mrs. D. W. ROGERS (nee Miss Margaret Hurd) was born in Amite county, Miss., in 1825; was married to D. W. Rogers in 1843, near her last earthly home, which is one mile north of Water Valley, Yalobusha county, Miss. She sought and obtained religion when a girl, and her fidelity to it until God took her to a sublimer sphere than this was continuous and beautiful.

The grace of God had so completely permeated her nature that obstinacy and arrogance were gone; yet she ever held to the solacing, soul-lifting principles of Christianity. With a willing mind and submissive spirit she gladly let the religion of Christ control her. She was noticeably gentle and kind. Gentleness and kindness beamed in her countenance, spake in her smiles and flowed in her words. Col. Rogers, her noble companion, says that the Christ-light steadily shining from her good works drew him into the pathway of gospel truth. Why is it that everybody does not so live, and thereby win souls to Jesus? They had but one child. He died a soldier boy in the late war, sending the precious message to his fond parents before leaving the battle-field of carnal warfare that he would meet them in heaven. Sister Rogers loved the preachers, and entertained them as a great privilege and with much joy. God graciously bless her lonely and sad husband! By and by he will go to her in our Father's house, where there are many mansions. J. M. WYATT.

BILLINGSLEA—WALTER R. BILLINGSLEA, an old and honored citizen of Warren county, Miss., died at his home in that county, October 14, 1889. He was born in 1824, and was first married in 1844. After the death of this wife he was married, in 1886, to Mrs. Ellen Wilkins, who is left in widowhood and sorrow by his death.

His fellow-citizens regarded him as an intelligent and honorable man, and more than once selected him to represent them in the Legislature of the State. He was an affectionate and kind husband, a good neighbor and a faithful friend. He was long a member of the Methodist Church, and for many years a steward. His house was the preacher's home, and many an itinerant preacher can recall with grateful joy his generous hospitality. He died full of love to God and all mankind. W. L. C. H.

COLEMAN—Mrs. ELIZABETH COLEMAN, wife of J. Coleman, of New Orleans, was born in Germany, December 24, 1812, and died December 18, 1889. Sister Coleman professed conversion and united with the Felicity Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1873. In 1886 she transferred her membership to the Parker Chapel charge, where she remained until transfered to the church triumphant. The last year of her life was spent under my pastoral care. During this time she impressed me as a deeply consecrated character. She grew daily in the likeness of her Lord. She was a helpful parishioner. Her fellow-Christians will miss her in the services of God's house and the walks of life. She died in peace with God and man, having rejoiced in the blessing of a perfect love casting out fear.

F. N. PARKER, Pastor.

HEARD—LEWIE MILLER HEARD, son of Thomas W. and Alice Heard, was born October 16, 1887, and died October 21, 1889.

He was like the flower that blooms in the morning and withers in the evening. He came to make glad the hearts of the parents and to lend sweetness to the home but for a little while, and then he went unto him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," He went away leaving the hearts of parents sad and the home desolate; but this is only for awhile, and since he can not come back to them they are striving to go to him. Heaven is made the more attractive since this bright little gem has gone thither; and as the years roll on, little Lewie will be waiting and watching for the fond parents to come.

R. A. BURROUGHS.

GAMBLE—IDA PEARL, youngest child of E. J. and Anna Gamble, departed this life at St. Maurice, La., January 2, 1890, aged one year and one month.

This sweet little girl is the first of five children to cross death's cold river and land safely on the other side. May papa, mama, brother and sisters all meet her in her heavenly home!

J. F. WYNN, P. C.

DON'T BRIBE YOUR OWN JUDGE.—A man's mind is a court, and his passions are, all of them, tricky lawyers. In ordinary times you can not go into any court and hear the statements of the counsel without feeling that there is a great deal of ingenuity exerted to cover up some things, and unduly magnify other things, so as to make out the best possible case for the side whose interest it is the desire of the special pleaders to advance. But there sits that old stupid judge—stupid because he will be just—and he puts the lawyer right on this side, and puts the lawyer right on that side, and holds everything to the law and to the fact that he may come at justice—at least, in theory. Now, every man has a judge within him—his conscience; and there are many men whose consciences have been bribed; and when these bribed consciences are presiding over the court which is constantly held in the heart, they are all the while excusing themselves for giving their adherence to things that are wrong. They need to be reminded that in every case they should look at everything in the light of eternal justice.—Selected.

Miss Larkins was bilious and feeble and sick,
And it seemed as if nothing would ever relieve her.
Her liver was clogged with impurities thick,
And her stomach was constantly burning with fever.
Of the great G. M. D. she bought a supply,
And directions for taking pursued to the letter,
'Twas the best thing on earth she could possibly try,
And soon, very soon, Miss Larkins was better.

The G. M. D. which she took was Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the great remedy for bronchial, throat and lung diseases, sick headache, scrofula, dyspepsia, and all diseases that have origin in impure blood and a disordered liver.

The cleansing, antiseptic and healing qualities of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy are unequaled.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The most important measure that will probably emanate from the Committee on Agriculture in Congress is the bill to tax cotton seed oil. Such a bill was reported in the House in the last Congress after a prolonged contest in committee.

Senator Ingalls spoke at length on the race question in Congress, on January 23. He extolled the negro's fidelity and forbearance, and denounced the alleged outrages to which the South subjects him. The speech was scored by the Eastern journals, which derided his treatment of the race problem and the South.

The Naval Policy Board, which was appointed by Secretary Tracy, recommended the construction of 227 ships of 610,035 tons, at a cost of $349,515,000. The above total includes $67,905,000 already expended and authorizes an expenditure of $281,500,000.

Thirty leading sugar planters of Texas met in Houston, on January 24, and organized the Texas Sugar Growers' Association, $20,000,000 being represented.

The Ways and Means Committee has finally begun the preparation of a tariff bill, working upon the lines of the Senate bill of last Congress.

The Senate commerce committee has referred the two New Orleans bridge bills to the Secretary of War. The secretary has referred them to the chief of engineers, and the chief of engineers has referred them to Gen. Comstock, president of the Mississippi River Commission, with whom they are at present.

Representative Catchings, with the mayor of Vicksburg and the editor of the Vicksburg Herald, and other Mississippians, had a long conference on January 23 with Gen. Alger, of Michigan, commander-in-chief of the Army of the Republic, looking to a reunion of the Blue and the Gray on Decoration Day, next May, in Vicksburg.

The snow blockade on the Central Pacific and California and Oregon roads continues. San Francisco's rail communication is cut off and business is carried on by boat.

During the confirmation services at St. John's Episcopal Church, in Philadelphia, on January 26, the congregation was startled by the actions of an apparently demented young man, who arose from his seat in the church and pointing a revolver at Bishop Whittaker, who was taking part in the services, fired a shot at him. Immediately there was great confusion, but it was quickly seen that no harm had resulted from the shot.

Violations of the civil service law in the New York Customhouse have been investigated and reported by Commissioner Roosevelt, who states that clerks are compelled to subscribe to campaign funds.

Senator John W. Daniel delivered an oration upon the life and character of Jefferson Davis before the Virginia Legislature on January 27.

A terrible accident occurred on the Monon Route, near Indianapolis, on January 27, the train being thrown from the trestle by the spreading of the rails, and the shattered cars fired by overturned stoves. Six passengers were crushed and burned to death and twenty injured.

The village of Bunker Hill was almost wiped out by fire on January 26.

FOREIGN.

The Swiss Bundesrath has decided to convoke an international conference in May next for the purpose of establishing regulations relative to factory labor.

It is said that a split is threatened in the ranks of the Boulangist party. MM. Lauer and De Roulede favor the adoption of an anti-semitic policy, while M. Naquet and others oppose such a course and threaten to resign if their views are not approved.

Damage to property in Great Britain by the storm is general. Numberless houses have been unroofed. The river Shannon in Ireland and a number of rivers in Wales have overflowed their banks, flooding the adjacent country.

The German government met defeat in the Reichstag on January 23, as the House rejected the clause of the socialist bill authorizing the government to expel socialists from the country.

Enormous damage has been done by gales in Great Britain. The Severn has overflowed its banks, and many railways are temporarily stopped.

Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, was entertained by Mr. Gladstone, at Hawarden, on January 24.

The London News says that the Turkish minister has been instructed to demand of the United States government that it will suspend the publication of the Sourhantag, an Armenian paper, printed in the United States, but circulated in Armenia, which advocates Roumanian independence.

The capital for the great national banking institution, to be known as the National Bank of the United States of Brazil, was subscribed within four hours. The capital is $100,000,000.

Advices from Mentone say there has been a further development of gout in the case of Mr. Spurgeon and that he is now unable to leave that place.

The Czar has been invited to arbitrate the dispute between Holland and France in regard to the boundary line between Cayenne or French Guiana and Surinam or Dutch Guiana.

The British ship Loch Moidart was wrecked on the coast of Holland, and thirty of her crew were lost.

It is said that London is to have an Eiffel tower that will out-Eiffel Eiffel. It is 1,200 feet high, overtopping the wonder of Paris by 100 feet. The company has been formed, the stock subscribed and the contracts are being let.

January 27 was the thirty-first anniversary of the Emperor William's birthday. It was observed in a very quiet manner. The Emperor received a number of princes, generals and other high officials, who came to congratulate him.

Alcoholic Inheritance.

The Christian Inquirer gives an impressive report of a lecture on this subject at Gresham College by Dr. Symes Thompson. He said:

"We doctors are often tempted to wish that the human race could be propagated with as much care as is shown in the breeding of horses." The lecturer followed with a really terrible list of the evils to which "alcoholic subjects," or the children and children's children born of drunkards, are liable, not the least of which are insanity and every form of mental aberration. It was very noticeable, said the doctor, how much the moral character of the drunkard was destroyed, and the same effect of the parent's sin was traceable in his children. Again, drink was the greatest destroyer of brain power in the world, and its results were wonderfully manifested in the drunkard's issue. It was well understood that drink destroyed self-control, and a great necessity of the present day was the training of drunkard's children in self-control. The doctor thought that philanthropists would be well repaid were they to pay attention to this important matter. A curious remark was that in which Dr. Thompson called attention to the untidy state of a drunkard's clothes, and asserted that this same carelessness was visible also in the sober children of drunkards.—Congregationalist.

Does Experience Count?

It does, in every line of business, and especially in compounding and preparing medicines. This is illustrated in the great superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla over other preparations, as shown by the remarkable cures it has accomplished.

The head of the firm of C. I. Hood & Co. is a thoroughly competent and experienced pharmacist, having devoted his whole life to the study and actual preparation of medicines. He is also a member of the Massachusetts and American Pharmaceutical Associations, and continues actively devoted to supervising the preparation of, and managing the business connected with, Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Hence the superiority and peculiar merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla is built upon the most substantial foundation. In its preparation there is represented all the knowledge which modern research in medical science has developed, combined with long experience, brain-work, and experiment. It is only necessary to give this medicine a fair trial to realize its great curative value.

The population of Atlanta, Ga., has increased 10,000 in one year! So says the Constitution. In 1880 there were 37,000; there are now 87,000 inhabitants.

SPIRIT-BLIND.

BY DR. ECOB.

I see the morn's eternal youth;
I see the saintliness of even;
But blindly thro' the fields of heaven
I wander, never seeing truth.

I see night's heraldries unfurled;
I feel her majesties and motions;
But hopeless thro' her desert oceans
I drift upon a shipwrecked world.

I see the sorrow of the earth,
Its sin and heaviness and tears,
The long drear labor of its years;
I see its ashes, waste and dearth;

But can not see that promised earth,
Enfolded like a growing thought,
With prophecies divine inwrought,
And rising to its second birth.

Lord, that I may receive my sight!
I hear thee in the mingled throng
Of nature as it sweeps along;
But here I stand in rayless night.

O touch these sightless orbs of mine:
And let the first and great surprise
That falls upon my raptured eyes
Be that celestial face of thine.

"Of Free Will."

BY "GILDEROY."

By virtue of the gracious estate of man, indicated in our first article, we find him in the world capable of co-operating with grace given, and constantly continued, or of rejecting the offers of mercy to his own destruction. Grace here, as everywhere else, has the pre-eminence, since the universal influence of the Spirit is the true secret of man's capacity for religion. The influence of the Spirit, proceeding from the Father and the Son, is universal, inevitable, and irresistible. The co-operation of the human will, however, is real, since the free agent must himself decide whether he will resist or yield to these blessed influences. No power, not even divine power, will, or can, be brought to bear to coerce the will in any matter involving moral action. Accountability and moral responsibility are predicated upon and grow out of the freedom of the will; so that man is not worthy of blame, nor entitled to reward for anything that does not rest upon the free and untrammeled decisions of his own will. There is not the slightest mention in the Scriptures of any arbitrary act of divine power in the things that accompany salvation. He who works in us to will never forces us in the matter of willing. The act is always our own. The grace of God is brought to bear upon the human will through the affections of hope and fear—the hope of reward and the fear of punishment. The truth of God is presented to the understanding, and, as truth, it is irresistible. The judgment, the understanding, is convinced; the truth of God admitted; sin is acknowledged, if not confessed; but the innermost act of accepting and obeying the truth is deferred, if the truth is not openly rejected. This is a deep and insoluble mystery. It is the profound and awful "secret between God's Spirit and man's agency." The Spirit "affects an appropriating desire and acts without the slightest interference with the natural freedom of the will." Man is never so free as when, by the aid of grace, he determines himself to salvation. Amid the most gracious influences he may reject offered mercy and seal his own doom forever. This is a large and very gracious endowment of power, and one that entails a fearful responsibility. It is just this that constitutes man's distinct personality—the substantial person in him. All the affections and attributes, of what we generally consider the man, belong to this inner self, this hidden man. It is my intellect, my sensibilities, my will, as if there were another person inside who owned me. Doubtless, this hidden man, back of the man that is seen, is the one spoken of in Romans vii. It is on this man the Spirit of God operates, producing conviction for sin, giving repentance unto salvation, inspiring faith that is of the operation of God, and aiding, guiding and sanctifying in the entire process of salvation. This is the man that is regenerated, born again, and created anew in Christ Jesus—the hidden man of the heart. This new life, generated by the Holy Ghost, the seed of God in us, is the power behind the throne, and the impelling motive that leads us to live free from sin. We unravel ourselves; but the inner end of the skein lies deeper than we can go. It was inside, in this unexplored region, that sin wrought its greatest ruin, and here grace works the great salvation. If we open this door, Christ will come in and sup with us, and we with him. The main altar of the heart, on which he must be enthroned, is situated in this inner court. The intellect needs information, the sensibilities quickening and refining, the will toning up and strengthening; and the Teacher, the Refiner, the Divine Strengthener sits behind them on the throne of the soul, ready to help at a moment's warning. Indeed, he forecasts our wants, and we are strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man.

"The Catholic Population."

BY REV. J. A. PARKER.

Your paper, of January 30, contains a paragraph under the above head-line, taken, in part, from the Morning Star. Commenting on the figures from the Star, you say: "The whole Catholic population is estimated at 8,301,367. We presume this is about correct. So we see from this view that the whole Catholic population is not quite equal in numbers to the Baptists and Methodists put together. If we add the other denominations, we see that Protestantism is far, far ahead."

Now, what I want to know is this: Why couple "the Baptists and Methodists" together, and then go out and bring in "the other denominations" in order to get "ahead" of "the Catholics?"

Dr. Baird, than whom there is no better statistical authority on "Religion in America," after years of patient study and elaborate investigation, ascertained that the "population" of a "church" (or sect or denomination) was a little less than three times as great as its actual communicants.

Now, apply this rule, even on a reduced ratio, and you will "see that" Methodism alone is "far, far ahead" of the Catholics. Eliminating all fractions, and estimating the number of Methodists in the United States at 4,000,000, we proceed thus: 4,000,000 multiplied by $2\frac{1}{2}$ equals 10,000,000. This is the number of our adherent population. Now, deduct from this the 8,301,367 claimed as the population of the Roman Catholic Church in America, and you will see that the Methodists alone outnumber the Catholics 1,698,633, or more than twenty per cent. I have often called attention to this erroneous concession as to the importance of numbers, as reported by the Church of Rome, and now I want to show that I have authority for this method of computation. I have before me "The Religious Statistics of the United States," published in 1883 by Gaylord Watson, New York. The compilation is by Dr. Brockett, statistical editor of Johnson's Cyclopedia. Dr. Brockett puts the communicants of the Catholic Church at 3,970,000; the adherent population at 6,078,000. This proportion, you see, is a little less than 2 to 1. But the Methodists—Episcopal, and Episcopal, South—are put down as having a membership in 1878-9 of 2,252,514, while the adherent population of these two churches alone is estimated at 10,136,589, or nearly 5 to 1. It is easy to account for the difference in the proportion of communicants to the adherent population among the Catholics and Methodists. The rite of confirmation in the Catholic Church is the basis of communion, and a greater proportion of their adherent population have actually become communicants than of ours.

Now, look at another fact. This authority—Dr. Brockett—gives the entire seating capacity of the Catholic Churches at 3,178,420. This is only about one-half of their population. Does anybody believe that the Catholic Church has not provided sittings for more than one-half of her people? By this table—Dr. Brockett's—the two Methodists, as above explained, have provided sittings for 6,194,211. From this it is seen that my estimate is practically correct, because the seating capacity of the Methodists bears about the same proportion to the adherent population that that of the Catholics does; while if we reckon the seating capacity to refer to the actual communicants in each case, the Catholics have 791,580 who can find no seat in a Catholic Church, while the Methodists have seating room for 3,941,697 more than she has members. Hence I reaffirm that the Methodists alone are more than the Catholics. We have more churches, more sittings, more property, and more friends; and I do hope our people will cease to tacitly acknowledge that the Catholics are so nearly equal to all Protestants in America. Our wits have been almost scared out of us by the formidable array of Catholic figures. Wont somebody "bid that ghost down?"

Mr. Editor, you are a good hand on statistics. I wish you would try these that I have before me.

BATON ROUGE, LA.

P. S.—Since writing the above, a friend asks what the difference is between communicants and adherent population. Allow me to answer.

Communicants are those who have assumed the vows of membership, and have partaken of the sacraments of the church.

Adherent population are those who have not assumed the vows of membership, nor partaken of the sacraments, but who, nevertheless, endorse the doctrines and polity of the church, and, by their presence and with their means, support the organization.

The Secret of the Lord.

BY REV. JOEL T. DAVES.

"Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you."

To know God personally, to walk with him in companionship, to know his will concerning us, to have his image and likeness in us, as it was in the beginning, is not only man's privilege, but his duty. It is not only the source of his happiness and abiding peace, but the only ministry of usefulness in the world. It is man's only way of success in all his engagements, and the only means of safety in that success. It is the only account of any apparent failure, of trouble or clouds, and the only light and relief in such a season. Besides all this, it is a matter of pure justice to God. To this end, and for these reasons, was man made. If not, then he seems to have been made in vain. He is God's king of earth—the divine representative—or he is nothing. Endowed with divine gifts, with powers and capacities, beyond even the angels, he commits an act of gross injustice—a kind of personal injustice—not to do these things, and thus meet the object of his being. He robs God; he robs man; he robs himself. The essential law of essential being is to walk in "fellowship with God." The one falling thus to live fails, comes short of the one single law of his life. He is "the barren tree," the choice vine planted in the vineyard, bearing "wild grapes." And he has not been left without help. All that the Father could do has been done. "What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it?" The full strength of God in all needful things and ways is freely given, as his capital in business. He has but to invest, and, being "diligent in business," the increase is of God. He is responsible for the doing. This is all he can do, and it is all that is required of him. Having life in himself, he has given us to have life in ourselves. The vine planted in a "fruitful hill" responds, if a good vine, naturally to the conditions of success. Man, as a choice vine, thus planted, is to do intelligently and religiously just what the tree does naturally. When he is barren, it is of his own will, his own doing, of his own election. "Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." The natural tree, failing to bear fruit, is cut down. The spiritual tree suffers the same fate, and none can prevent it. It is justly cut down.

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do? For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment." Here is the condition—fearing the Lord, with its fruit; commanding his children, etc. God's knowledge of the man—"For I know him." Man's knowledge of God, shown in obedience. The man, in such case, has the secret of the Lord's will concerning him relative to personal duty. As a loving, thoughtful Father, he has a plan and a way for his child. "I will guide thee with mine eye." "My times are in thy hands." "The secret of the Lord" is with him. This is the only condition upon which it can be given, because the only condition upon which it can be received. As a loving, thoughtful child, such a man has no will of his own. The question always is, "What will thou have me do"? God's will and way will be his will and way. The man will walk in peace and safety. So also the secret of the Lord's word will be with him. He will see the deep things of the Bible. It will never become stale and commonplace. He will need no creed or systematic theology to make him wise therein. "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee." The word of Christ will dwell in him richly, in all wisdom. New things will come to him from those things most familiar. And so, again, he will have the secret of his great love, and, through this, a knowledge of his own value in being. He must be worth much who cost such a price—who comes to the birth through such a travail. "The secret of the Lord" will be in stronger form than the strongest logic. It is in a realization above all knowledge or speech. For in the final analysis of the divine love we get beyond formula or utterance. "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." "And to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge." But it may be further written that such an one has the secret of the Lord in his providence. He knows that it was not accident or chance that gave him being, and all his wealth of mental and moral powers. He is in the hands of one who loves and cares for him. Whatever may come, in affliction or sorrow or disappointment, he will look and listen for the reason; he will learn the lesson or duty of the hour. There will be no syndicate of hard thoughts and rebellious things formed within. In the midst of clouds the sun will shine for him. Self-correction and purity will come. He will hold himself in solution, and under the divine microscope the smallest things will be seen and analyzed. In a word, he will walk with God as Enoch walked. His life, his business, his leisure, his companionships, his face, his hands, his feet—the whole man will be a living benediction to the world. "The widow woman" of Zarephath said to Elijah: "Now, by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth." So all men will say of this man. He will have the secret of the Lord in prayer, in thought, in reading, in preaching, in knowledge of men—will know when to speak and when to be silent. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him."

LAKE CHARLES, LA.

Erroneous Sunday-School Teaching.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

Sunday-school theology ought to be plain, simple and unmistakable. Above all, it should contain no doubtful lessons. It is a primer school. In Hurlhurt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, lesson eleven, for June 16, as published in your paper, of June 6, touching the rent vail of the temple at Jerusalem, we read as follows:

The great work of salvation was now, at last, completed; prophecy fulfilled; the ancient covenant at an end; the new inaugurated. Judaism was forever obsolete, etc.

I do not so understand the Scriptures. What ancient covenant was at an end? What new one was inaugurated? And in what sense was Judaism made obsolete? The term covenant is used in several different senses in the Bible. In this place it may be presumed to mean the merciful arrangement or plan of Providence for the salvation of men; and the reason for calling this a "covenant," which implies a mutual agreement between two or more parties, seems to be the figurative supposition of a mutual arrangement between the Sacred Three. But this is expressly declared in Isa. lxi, 8, to be everlasting. Moreover, it requires something more than doubtful definitions and uncertain translations to fix the belief that God set about the enterprise of human salvation, and after a few years found his plan defective, and set it aside for a supposed improved one. And, further, we see with our eyes that God has, in fact, pursued one and the same plan, or "covenant, for the salvation of men, and not two, from the days of Abel to this day. It will not do to teach our children that the ancient coveaant came to an end, and a new one was inaugurated.

Again it says, "Judaism was forever obsolete." By Judaism is understood the religion taught in the Old Testament. That is the only thing existing at the time of the death that was ever called Judaism. That, word for word, doctrine for doctrine, is the Christianity of to-day modified only by such modes of teaching—not things taught—as naturally and necessarily preceded the advent and incarnation of Christ. That is not "obsolete," nor is it likely to be.

Another thing highly antagonistic thereto, that has come into existence since the crucifixion, is also called Judaism, viz.: the religion of modern, or apostate Jews. Neither can that be called obsolete, for Bible religion never had anything to do with it. That, we may hope, will become obsolete in the next century or so.

And so, why print such consummate nonsense? Why publish such stupid characterization of plain Bible truth? The man who wrote it can not believe it. Nor can all the Hurlburts and Simpsons and Phillips and Hunts give it currency, except among the children and the thoughtless. It is out of all patience to see learned teachers of teachers perpetrate such senseless absurdities, and use good printer's ink and paper in the dissemination thereof!

Publishing House Profits.

BY W. L. C. H.

What do you editors mean by proposing to rob our superannuates, widows and orphans of their vested rights? You admit that the church has been starving them, and propose that we shall continue to starve them, lest the privilege of doing so should be taken away from the church, and lest the sympathies of the people be taken from those needy ones who suffer, not for sympathy, but for lack of money. Until the yearly paid allowance of a superannuated preacher shall be, at least, half as much as he was accustomed to receive as a pastor, let the church relax no honorable efforts to increase the Conference Fund. The idea that the income from the Publishing House would tend to lessen the collections in the congregations, is met by the confident belief that it would have no such effect, but rather the contrary. Men love to help those whom others help.

That the Publishing House should be purposely turned into a money-making machine for this object, would be as unwarranted a misdirection as for it to be so managed as intentionally to deprive these worthy beneficiaries of any surplus whatever. To abrogate the sixth restrictive rule now would be a procedure ex post facto in its nature and unjust in its results. It would be subversive of that great constitutional principle which forbids the passage of any law which would invalidate the obligation of contract. For forty years some preachers have been laboring under a constitutional provision that in certain contingencies they or their heirs should be entitled to shares in the surplus revenues of our Publishing House. Now, just as the House seems to be yielding something for them, they are told by some that they ought not to have anything from the Publishing House, and that the law guaranteeing them its surplus proceeds ought to be repealed.

Brethren argue against a stated income for these parties from the Publishing House, lest thereby charity should be stifled in the church! Yet upon the almost unanimous request of the Mississippi Conference, one of our Bishops recently appointed an agent, whose sole work is the raising of an endowment fund for the benefit of these same claimants on the funds of the church. Nobody objects to cheap and abundant literature; but we need not wrong widows and orphans to get it.

I have not time to argue this question, but ask that the brethren look somewhat at this side.

The Minister a Thinker and a Moulder of Thought.

BY REV. W. D. ATWATER.

None have more profound problems with which to deal than the ministers of the Christian religion. The questions they face are the broadest, deepest, farthest-reaching of any that try the mental fiber of the world. Still it must be admitted that a man may successfully carry water from Lake Superior without bailing it dry, or even touching its bottom; so there are many ministers who are efficient promoters of the moral and spiritual interests of their people who are neither profound thinkers, logical reasoners, nor clear-headed theologians. They do not need to know all things in order to know and say many things their people greatly need to know. Still, it remains true that in every department of life the men who think laboriously and to a purpose are the leaders of the world; and in the ministry it is the men who think persistently and profoundly that make it possible for men of mere surface habits to succeed.

Foundation lines of thought, however, like the bottom stones of a stately building, are too much out of sight to interest the masses. Perhaps the ministry needs more broad thinkers than deep ones. It needs many who, while not dwelling much on absolute ideas, do think earnestly and carefully on all topics of practical concern; but especially does the ministry need live thinkers. To think to a purpose is to think consecutively, basing one inference on another till each conclusion is plainly seen firmly standing on its base. It is to think connectedly, so that each conclusion is seen in its correlations. The correct thinker sees truth as a unit, but a fibrous unit, a woven web of facts. A live thinker sees where every fact touches humanity; and the live minister is never so happy as when he so magnetizes these touches that men about him leap into new life inspired by the enthusiasm of newly realized relations to eternal facts, and his interest is enhanced by the fact that he seeks eternal rather than merely present results.

When a true man, with God and eternity in full view, sees a series of facts making vital connection with human destiny, while exposed multitudes are unconscious of their peril, his soul takes fire and he thinks not only deeply, but eloquently. Whether the words with which he relieves his entranced soul be homely iron or glowing silver, he thinks with a rapt spirit that becomes contagious. In other words, he makes other men think; and just in proportion as he thinks more or in advance of most men, he will mould as well as inspire thought. By far the larger proportion of our people are so occupied with care and toil in the strife for bread that they have but little opportunity for the most painstaking mental effort. Yet they have soul yearnings and brain power, and many of them long to keep pace with the mind-throbs as well as the heart-throbs of the world. These expect their pastors to help them to think. Ours is a grave responsibility. Are we struggling to adequately meet it? I do not forget that Christ should be the central theme of every sermon; but there is scarce a field of proper thought or action which does not yield abundant bloom from which a thoughtful man may weave a garland with which to wreathe the cross of Christ. Tribute to the Redeemer is due from every region of thought, and it is meet that we gather the tribute and lay it at his feet.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

ONLY A WORD.

BY JOEL BENTON.

Only a word this lips to fall,
A careless word in wanton play;
He did not think of it at all,
And life went upon its way.

But in a heart with sorrow sore
The cruel gibe produced its smart,
And what he never thought of more
Convulsed a crushed and bleeding heart.

Only a word a other spoke—
A simple word lit by a smile—
And mental clouds their darkness broke
Which shadowed all the sky erewhile.

A life which hope had seemed to leave,
Grew stronger from its generous might—
A heart bowed down with utter grief
Felt the rare radiance of its light.

The future rose serene and fair,
And sorrow lost its bitter sting;
A single word, though light as air,
May seem a very little thing;

But hope, joy, sorrow and despair
By it in human hearts are stirred;
There is no thing more foul or fair
Than one slight utterance of a word.

Missionary Watchword for 1890.

Yes, two hundred thousand dollars for Mexico, Brazil and Mexico for 1890!

How many members and friends of our church are there who will make up their minds and hearts that this shall be so, and place the amount they will pay at the disposition of the Board before the May meeting? Please do not wait for your pastor to present the cause of missions from the pulpit, but pray over this proposition, and when you have determined the amount you will invest in the Lord's cause in these fields hand it to him. I am sure if you could be with me for a few days, you would feel as I do—that we must have the money. No less than eight cities and towns, where they are without the gospel, have sent requests to me during this week to send them the gospel, and I have four men waiting to go as soon as I have the money to send them. Shall these people have the gospel or not? And shall these men preach, or must they turn away to other callings in life? These are questions for you to answer. And there are many places where they are waiting for us to come, and would most gladly receive us. But do you ask why these people do not help themselves? They will most gladly help if we will only show a disposition to go to them. Only last Sabbath we held services, and received eighteen members into the church, in a house built by a poor man and given to us for use free of rent. Another brother has built the walls of a house and offers to deed it and the land free of charge, if we will only cover and seat it. Another brother, quite seventy years of age, walked four miles to offer me the choice of one of three lots, with the assurance that the people would help, if we would only build a church in their town. The old man was pleading for a church before he died. Will you give us the men and the money?

I do not know but it would be well for the authorities of the church to call for the men and send them to the fields, and let the church say whether we shall live and work or perish in the field. If the cause of Christ must suffer and die in Mexico, because the church will not support it, his workmen here can well afford to perish with it. So send the men along, and we will trust Christ in the church for the future. There are thousands of people who know Christ as a personal Savior and the Savior of their households, and their neighbors, who have not realized that he was equally the Savior of China, Japan, Brazil and Mexico. Indeed, they need an introduction to Christ, that they may know him as he really is and not as they imagine him to be. And this is no reflection on the good sense or the piety of anyone. Paul had to have it, Peter had to have it, and the whole church at Jerusalem had to have it before they knew Christ as the Savior of the Gentiles. But how are you thus to introduce the church to Christ? Only as in the examples given: by creating an emergency that will bring her and Christ face to face in his relation to this great work.

A few years ago, when our Publishing House was more than three hundred thousand dollars in debt, it was all soon paid. But you might have preached to and begged the church for twenty-five years, and you would not have raised that amount of money to build a new house. It was the emergency that awoke the slumbering powers of the living body of Christ. And you may preach and write and talk until we all are dead, and these millions of souls are all lost, and still the church will not have fully known Christ as their Savior.

Oh, for the sake of him who died in blood and shame for our sins, do something to awake the sleeping church at home! Do it with the full consciousness that you are throwing yours and our daily bread into the experiment. We will risk it and, if the worst comes, will suffer the consequences.

Pastoral Instruction of Children.

BY REV. V. D. SKIPPER.

No question is of more vital importance to the church at the present time. Our church recognizes this fact, and the powers that be have framed wise and good laws upon this subject. Each itinerant preacher is obligated to faithfully instruct the children. No preacher is ever received into full connection in an Annual Conference without giving satisfactory answers to questions found in our book of discipline, on page 88. Among these is this: "Will you diligently instruct the children in every place?" Then again the preacher promises the Bishop and Annual Conference, on the day of his ordination to the office and work of a deacon, that he will "instruct the youth." Discipline, page 288.

In his pastoral visitations, let him pay special attention to the children; speak to them personally and kindly on experimental and practical godliness, etc. Page 121.

Each presiding elder asks in each Quarterly Conference: "Is there a written report from the preacher in charge of the number and state of Sunday-schools, and the pastoral instruction of children?" "It shall be the duty of the preacher in charge of every circuit and station to be present in all the Sunday-schools in his charge as often as practicable to catechise the children." These are wise and good laws; and, if faithfully observed, will bind the children to the church and ministry. An experience of seven years has taught me that there are many difficulties in the way of observing these simple and useful directions. I mention three of the most prominent:

1. But few men have the natural or acquired ability to interest children.

2. There are grown people in every house where there are children. These seem to claim the attention of the preacher, and often he naturally yields to their demands.

3. Success depends largely upon knowing each child by name. This requires a kind of study and thought which a great many do not practice or enjoy. Nothing is more natural than for people to want their names remembered. The children desire the preacher to speak to them. Once a preacher passed a little boy and failed to speak to him. He went home and asked his mother what Bro. C. was mad at him about? Once a Methodist preacher visited a family, and while there put his hand on a little boy's head and spoke very kindly to him. As soon as he ceased talking the boy went away, sat down on a log and wept bitterly because of his little sins. That boy is now a Methodist preacher, has seen many troubles, experienced many joys, but has never forgotten the impression made upon his childish heart. He always loved that preacher.

The Roman Catholics understand the importance of instructing the children. This is the secret of their success. Their make Catholics of almost everyone under their instruction. One Archbishop said: "Give me a child seven years and I will make a Catholic of it."

Shall we neglect the children committed to our care for instruction, and let them grow up without being thoroughly instructed in the doctrines of our church? Too many of them grow up in Methodist homes and afterwards become members of other churches, and others never unite with any church.

Just at this point, we might learn a lesson from our Israelitish brethren. Their children rarely ever become Christians. This is because of the instructions given them in childhood. If the Christian, in every instance, talked up Christianity like the Jew talks it down, the children of Christians would be as strongly attached to the Christian Churches as the Hebrew child is to the synagogue. The missionary in all foreign fields has to begin his or her work with the children. Let us learn lessons from each of these, and be faithful to our obligations.

A Suggestion to the Church.

The year 1892 is the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America: is to be celebrated and especially observed by the people and government of the United States, and is meant to be an exhibition, on the largest scale, of the advances in the arts, sciences, literature, the improvements in the industries, and mechanical inventions. As our government leads off in this, and will locate the scene for this display, though the nations of the earth are invited to participate, it is meant to bear the stamp of American institutions and to emphasize the United States among the nations. Certainly no expense will be spared which will contribute to the attractiveness; while other nations, stimulated by a commendable rivalship, will do much to add to the supreme interest.

Such an interest of itself would create a vast assemblage. Then add the usual inceutives which draw people to such places—travel, curiosity, sight-seeing, pleasure, business and profit—and we may anticipate an assemblage such as has never registered in any one city on any special occasion since the world began. Why not the Christian world take some steps to be seen and heard and felt in such a convocation? The translation of the Sacred Scriptures into so many languages and dialects, the rendering of the text books of our normal schools and colleges, the founding of institutions of learning, where learning was unknown before carrying the civilizing influence of the Christian religion to so many savage and barbarous lands, the bringing millions—hitherto unknown to such enterprises—in contact with trade and the mercantile interest of the world, and adding millions and millions of dollars to the commerce of nations—I say, why not the leading element in civilization, letters, trade and commerce have place in such a convocation?

When pioneering colonization pushed out from the original thirteen colonies into Tennessee, across the "dark and bloody ground" of Kentucky, up where the great Mississippi plays with the silvery lakes of the North, on where the mighty Missouri embraces the Rocky Mountains of the West, down southward to untamed Mississippi, into the mysterious and uncertain depth of Louisiana, across the plains, across the mountains, across the continent, the Methodist preacher has gone with the pioneer and settler, making life bearable to the wife and daughter, and being the very torchlight of the nation in its bringing that vast empire into a unit with these United States. Would there be the slightest presumption, would there be the least approach towards an impropriety, for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in its General Conference, now soon to convene, to take some decisive steps looking to a great ecumenical council of all Christian peoples and Christ-loving denominations of the world at the same time and place of the great fair? Such a call, from such a source, fixing some basis of representation, would command the attention of the wisdom and piety of the day. Such a council might be entirely independent of all government and legislative movements. The general government could not consistently ignore such a presence, as the church and religion have chiefly made its history.

Bro. Cassity's Proposition.

I am ready to accept Bro. Cassity's proposition, provided the missionary, thus supported, go from Louisiana. I like the plan very much, and I don't see why almost every Conference in the connection could not adopt it. At the same ratio some of the larger Conferences could support two. Brethren, let us do this, and set the example, and, perhaps, the others will fall in; and then what a wonderful increase in our missionary force! We can do this and, at the end of the year, not feel it—except to feel better. Who next?

Lotteries.

BY SAMUEL M. SHELTON.

During the long contest which preceded the final suppression of lotteries in England, it was demonstrated that no greater enemy ever existed than lotteries to prevent the accumulation of wealth by the poor and middle classes, and that in every country where the lottery exists savings banks have always been a failure. The night of the drawing of one lottery, with a capital prize of one hundred thousand pounds sterling, was signalized with the suicide of over fifty unlucky ticket-holders. The testimony taken by the various committees appointed by the House of Commons during this contest, shows a degree of misery produced by lotteries that would shock and astonish one who has never investigated the subject. This testimony came from all portions of the kingdom, and from men in all the vocations of life and all classes of society, and demonstrated beyond question that it made bad husbands, bad wives, bad children, and bad servants; that it was the most fruitful source of suicide, hardly a day passing that one of its victims did not cut his throat or hang himself. The fight in England for freedom from the clutches of this monster, which had fastened its fangs upon the very vitals of the body politic, was a most desperate battle. It was a battle of giants. Wilberforce, Canning, Buxton, Lyttleton and Castlereah, opposed to the lottery, met Eldon, Wellington and Peel, and for a time the contest seemed doubtful, but when the immense mass of testimony taken by the committees of the House of Commons came pouring in, reeking with statements of vice, crime and misery, the English people became aroused, and there was wiped away one of the darkest stains that ever rested upon Britain's proud escutcheon.

The main fight against lotteries in the United States began in 1833 by the Pennsylvania Society for the Suppression of Lotteries, organized in Philadelphia. This society obtained an immense mass of information as to the effect of lotteries in this country, and in their report, made in 1837, they say: "If a committee were appointed by each State Legislature to ascertain from living witnesses the effect of lotteries within their respective jurisdictions, a mass of private distress and public injury would be brought to light, the magnitude of which it is difficult to conceive. We should witness the severance of the closest and dearest connections of life, the violation of the sacred vows of wedlock, and the disruption of the tender ties of consanguinity and nature. Woe would meet our gaze in the various forms of hopeless bankruptcy, cheerless and unmitigated penury, incurable intemperance and infamous vice. The colors of the picture would be too sombre, the scene in its collected deformity too hideous, for exposure to the open day."

Tracing the careers of several victims of the lottery, the committee say: "He becomes poor by successive losses. His poverty leads him to petty villainies. He slowly proceeds from one impropriety to another, till at last his feelings become blunted and his reputation tarnished. Low dissipation and idle phantasms of golden showers, from being long indulged, have so impaired his faculties and weakened his character as wholly to destroy his ability for any useful pursuit. He looks around for assistance, but the avenues are closed. He is in debt beyond hope of extrication. His native energy is gone and his respectability is wasted. Thus prepared for some reckless effort to repair his fortune, where can he seek refuge but in the principles he has imbibed? What counselors can he listen to but his desperate necessities?"

A distinguished representative from Louisiana, speaking a few years ago on the floor of the National House of Representatives in reference to the Louisiana Lottery, said: "It has existed as a blot on the body corporate for over fifteen years, and no cause so mighty has ever operated to bring every branch of the government, State and national, into more general disrepute. The reports of courts, both State and national, show the general demoralization. The ermine of the judge is sullied; the administration of justice prostituted to the most unworthy ends; the press, that palladium of liberty, bought up or mazzled by fear or ignorance; the official head, from governor to constable, dependent on its good-will; every office-seeker at its beck; the whole commonwealth prostrate at its feet; no institution existing but at its mercy. This is not an exaggerated condition of a once powerful sovereignty." Thus we see that the lottery not only corrupts all who deal with it, but, growing powerful on the money stolen from its victims, becomes the master of a whole State, and defies even the people assembled in their Constitutional Convention to destroy it. Its agents are everywhere. The law has no terror for them. The boats that ply our rivers carry these agents, and at their various landings the colored laborers come aboard and invest their small earnings in the lottery ticket, dreaming of sudden wealth, and waking to find themselves disappointed, but anxious to invest again.

In the light of such facts, can anyone wonder that the French Convention should have denounced the lottery as an invention of tyrants? And let it be remembered that this convention was no Puritan body, straight-laced in religion and austere in morals. It was a body that had denied the existence of God. It had abolished the Sabbath day. It had trampled on every precept of the moral law, and, in the language of Mr. Allison, the historian, it had torn down the altars of religion, and reared on their ruins the altar of reason as their only god. Yet, reeking with the blood of hundreds of victims, they shrunk from fellowship with this monster of vice and crime, and, laying hold of it with the mailed hand of power, in the name of liberty and patriotism they hurled it from its high estate. And the same war is being waged against it to-day; not, certainly, by the infidel and the atheist, but by the enlightened and Christian sentiment of the age. The laws against it are but the crystalization of that sentiment.—The Lottery.

From the Work.

SOUTH BOSSIER CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

To a veteran itinerant, who has been serving his beloved church a long series of years, receiving from time to time from the Bishops many a one of the good appointments at their disposal, the making of the appointments, what a grand and interesting scene it is! Behold one of our Bishops standing in the presence of Annual Conference, of a hundred or more preachers of the everlasting gospel, by virtue of the authority invested in him by his peers. Having surveyed the broad field lying before him, all white to harvest, he assigns each a pastorate, suitable to his gifts, grace, and usefulness. The preacher, at the close of this, another annual convocation, sits before one of the chief overseers with feelings of great desire and expectation, regarding his own destiny; listens with attention to the preliminary remarks of this chosen man of God to the anxious expectants before him, prior to announcing the result of his carefully arranged plan. In slow, measured tones, pleasantly, though solemnly, he says, in purport: "Brethren, I have, with much anxiety, perplexity and sympathy, arranged the appointments. There are hard and difficult fields, it must be admitted, that can not be omitted or left uncultivated; but I have considerately, impartially and prayerfully done the very best of my ability, not intentionally burdening or afflicting any brother, for we have passed through the same ordeal ourselves; but should any brother's appointment fall below his expectation, and he feel himself aggrieved, I beseech such a one to consider the word of exhortation, and go to the place assigned him in the spirit of the Good Shepherd, remembering his promise, 'And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.' And if you find the appointment not a good one, in your estimation, bind yourself the closer to it, and make it good, for he hath said, 'He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.'" A scene like this would make an angel's heart rejoice, and he would gladly receive an appointment, even if it were to the poor shepherds in the fields of Bethlehem, and gladly go to them and tell them to "Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." From such an exhibition—having been reappointed to South Bossier circuit—I return gladly; but not, I am pleased to say, to an unappreciable people, but to Methodists whose warm hearts are all aglow to receive the pastor of last year, who has been returned to them again as a manifestation of their loyalty and appreciation. They do not pound him with pantry samples, nor by a committee placing in his hand a gold-headed cane; but, having confidence in him as a man of sense and judgment, capable of managing his own finances, through their steward they place a sum of money in his hands to supply his wants in the beginning of a new year, judging that nobody knows the necessities of a traveling preacher better than himself.

As our work increases and develops, divisions of circuits becomes necessary, and the organization of new ones, to be occupied by fresh laborers from the Master coming into the vineyard. Under this regime, South Bossier has the honor to be the mother of several circuits; and, with a good deal of grace, the good old mother, with tender maternal affection, sets off to themselves her children, handsomely with ample territory, and each a good parsonage, a snug home for their preachers; but, in this respect, she is homeless. Her great anxiety for the comfort and prosperity of her children, and her liberality, has left her without a shelter, and exposed to the weather, and much inconvenience; so that when her preacher comes from Conference, newly appointed, it matters not how bad the weather is, upon a cold, wet wintry day she can not send one of her stewards to the railroad station to conduct him to a nice comfortable home for himself, wife and children; but they must abide and endure until arrangements are made. But the good old lady does not complain; neither is she desponding. She has done much pioneer work; she finds good work pays well—it comes back with many fold. Her children, in their prosperity, will not forget their dear old mother, and others will see her wants; and the preachers and their wives know that when the old lady says that a parsonage is a good thing, and that she must have a home for her preacher, that she is not in her dotage; for when they are privileged to become her preacher, the first thing that they will want to know of her will be the location of the parsonage.

Brethren, we want to make South Bossier a good circuit; one desirable for any preacher. In what could a preacher, or any brother or friend, invest one or more dollars better than in building a home for the preachers? Oh, what an unspeakable comfort and satisfaction it is to a preacher, when he arrives on a circuit for the first time—perhaps among strangers—to have one of the stewards of the church meet him at the station, greet him warmly, and conduct him to the circuit-home of the preacher! If you want to know, ask the preacher's wife.

This subject grows upon me; but I must close. I find it is a thing that concerns everybody, and everybody ought to take stock in it, and get the dear old lady comfortable. Please send us a subscription at your earliest convenience.

We had a profitable preachers' meeting at Haughton, last Monday. Two ex-presiding elders were present. It was thought that such a meeting, held monthly, would be profitable for the work and the preacher. For such a meeting a room at the parsonage would be apropos.

LEWIS A. REED.

HAUGHTON, LA.

HATTIESBURG, MISS.

Though I am not a pastor now, my heart is still in the work, and my very soul is drawn out in gratitude to God when I witness the signs of his approval of the labors of my brethren and the demonstrations of his power attending the ministry of those who have "given up all" to follow Christ, as all true itinerant Methodist preachers are required to do.

While modesty may forbid that our new preacher, Bro. George D. Anders, should report at this early day anything special from his circuit, yet I think it is due, and I am sure I voice our church and community here, when I say that we all feel that his appointment to Hattiesburg circuit was providential. No man would have been more cordially welcomed. Evidently, he has come in the spirit of the Master, and has gone to work in good earnest. Bro. Anders is greeted with fine congregations, and our people, though hitherto unaccustomed to provide for a "stationed preacher," or a pastor having only two appointments, are yet determined to provide for him and his family to the extent of their ability and to a degree that shall not admit of embarrassment to him.

We have no parsonage, but have rented a cottage temporarily and furnished it, until we can build a parsonage. The preliminary steps to this end have been taken and we are confident of success in a very short time.

Bro. Anders has already, under God, awakened an interest among the people of his charge that we have never seen equaled in so short a time. Today (I write on Sunday night) he received three members into the church, baptized one sweet little infant and had an altar well filled with earnest seekers of a "deeper work of grace." The signs are hopeful. He has gone from house to house, visiting and praying with the people. We are very hopeful of a prosperous year. Our new presiding elder, Bro. I. W. Cooper, we gladly receive; while it is no disparagement to him to say that all regretted to part with Bro. West. Bro. Cooper is young and able-bodied, an excellent preacher and goes unto his work earnestly. He will, no doubt, if spared, bring up a good report next Conference. Thank God the true spirit of primitive Methodism survives in the hearts of the sons of the men of God I used to know, long before these sons were born!

H. J. HARRIS.

VOSSBURG, MISS.

We have in the northeastern corner of the Mississippi Conference something that is strikingly phenomenal in nature. The locality is a sort of promontory or high point projecting into a beautiful valley of the Wahalak Creek and Noxubee river, and connected with a range of high hills east and south of those streams, and not very far from their confluence. The point is about 300 feet above the level of the valley, and near the site on which the old Wahalak town used to stand, and four miles west of Binnsville. On this high point there used to stand a Baptist Church, and the graveyard still remains with slab, tombstone, iron railing, etc. On the graveyard, and near by, stand red oak, post oak, black-jack, and scattering cedars. Now, Mr. Editor, the phenomenal feature is, that it rains on that spot every day, whether there be clouds or clear sky. The area upon which it rains is said not to be more than an acre. People go there to test reports from every direction, and wonder, and retire satisfied. I went there in a dry time, when the roads were dusty up to the place, and walked in among the graves, and a slight shower fell upon me, visible and tangible; then a slight cessation; then another, and so on for an hour. Several people—ten to fifteen—were there at the same time from Binnsville, Wahalak, and elsewhere.

Now, Mr. Editor, have you any science explanatory of this strange affair? I think this will puzzle the most astute scientist of the day.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

First Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON VII.—February 16.

THE MINISTRATION OF JOHN.

Luke iii, 7-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matt. iii, 2.

TIME.—A. D. 26. When Jesus was thirty years old.

PLACE.—The wilderness of Judea near the river Jordan.

7. Then said he—Luke gives the substance of the Baptist's preaching summarily. The multitude—Rather, multitudes. Different crowds came from different directions. Baptized of him—Baptism proper, doubtless, was inaugurated by John the Baptist. It was an appropriation and concentration into a single rite of all the lustrations and washings of the Old Testament dispensation. It proclaimed to the Jew that he needed yet to be introduced into the kingdom of God. O generation of vipers—Rather, broods of vipers. The serpent being a Jewish symbol of the devil; they are characterized as offspring of vipers in contrast with their ancestral pride as children of Abraham. It describes the venomous hypocrisy which turns religion itself into a vice, and hides a deadly malice under the glittering semblance of a zeal for orthodoxy. Who—He does not call for the name of the man, but rather calls their thought to the point that he had no word for men not in earnest to escape God's wrath; that sinners were the men he came to call to repentance, and that for men drawn only by the crowd and the passion for seeing novelties, he had words of rebuke—but none of comfort. The wrath to come—The Jews had been taught by prophecy that the advent of their Deliverer should be preceded by a time of anguish which they called "the Woes of the Messiah."

8. Bring forth—The verb implies instant effort. "Produce at once." Fruits worthy—Practical reformation is the only evidence which God recognizes of the genuineness of repentance. Repentance—The Greek has the article: the repentance which you profess in coming to my baptism. Begin not—With the first accusing of your conscience. We have Abraham to (better as) our father—This, taken together with the confession of the creed of Israel, "the Lord our God is one Lord," was supposed to be enough to insure for every Jew an admission into Paradise. Of these stones—The words were obviously dramatized by gesture, pointing to the pebbles on the banks of the Jordan. In their spiritual application, they are remarkable as containing the germs of all the teaching of our Lord, and of St. Paul, and of St. John, as to the calling of the Gentiles, and the universality of God's kingdom.

9. Now—Rather, already. Is laid—Literally, lies. The notion is that of a woodman touching a tree with the edge of his ax to measure his blow before he lifts his arm for the sweep which fells it. Is hewn down, and cast—The present tense is graphic, denoting what is to happen at once and certainly. Judgments that were only partial or corrective were as the pruning of the branches. But now the ax was laid to the root, and the alternative was preservation or destruction.

10. The people asked him—Such preaching took hold of the hearts of the people mightily. Of this we have the best evidence possible; it moved them to press the great inquiry, What shall we do? What are the fruits meet for repentance which we are to bring forth? Luke's words in this sense mean that they were constantly asking this question; it was general and persistent.

11. Two coats—Two tunics. Let him impart to him that hath none—Give to those more destitute. A second coat no man could want, as his neighbor who had none wanted his first. Meat—Rather, food. The word has now acquired the specific sense of "flesh," which it never has in our English Bible. For instance, the "meat-offering" was generally an offering of flour and oil.

12. Publicans—The collectors of Roman imposts. The Romans farmed out the direct taxes and customs-dues to capitalists, on their payment of a certain sum into the public treasury, whence they were called publicani, publicans. Sometimes this sum, being greater than any one person could pay, was paid by a company. Under these were the sub-magistri, living in the provinces; and under these again the portitores, or actual custom-house officers, who are referred to by the term publicans in the New Testament. They were often chosen from the dregs of the people, and were so notorious for their extortions that they were habitually included in the same category with harlots. The word "publican," as a popular term of reproach, was used even by our Lord. Master—Rather, Teacher.

13. Exact—The word is used of the exaction of legal tribute, and excessive exaction is expressed by the following words.

14. Soldiers—Strictly, soldiers on the march. Some explain it of soldiers (possibly Jews) engaged in police inspection in connection with the customs, and hence naturally associated with the publicans. What shall we do—The we, in the Greek, is emphatic, closing the question. Hence the Revision, very aptly, "and we, what must we do?" Do violence to no man—Literally, to shake violently; hence to agitate or terrify; and so to extort money from one by terrifying him. For this process of blackmail "to shake" was used. The word in this passage of Luke has the later, secondary meaning, to extort; and, therefore, the American revisers rightly insist on, extort from no man by violence. John does not forbid the forcible execution of military duties as ordered by the government, but that illegal violence which transforms the soldier into a private ruffian. Neither accuse any falsely—Rather, cheat by false accusation. The Greek implies pettifogging charges on trivial grounds, and is the word from which "sycophant" is derived. The temptation of soldiers, strong in their solidarity, was to terrify the poor by violence, and undermine the rich by acting as informers. Be content with your wages—Without adding pillage thereto. And this very injunction implies their continuance in the military service for which the wages were received. That is, war, as an act of government, is allowed by the divine law. It is remarkable that the Baptist does not bid even soldiers to abandon their profession, but to serve God in it. This is important as showing that he did not hold up the life of the hermit or the ascetic as a model or ideal for all.

15. Were in expectation—The Messianic expectations of the day had even reached the Gentiles, many of whom, even in Rome, and in high society, were proselytes to Judaism. Mused—Rather, reasoned. Whether he were the Christ—Rather, whether haply he were himself the Christ: Showing both the expectation of Messiah's immediate appearing, and the high estimation and even reverence which his own character demanded.

16. John answered—The answer, as we find from John i, 19-28, was given in its most definite form to a Pharisaic deputation of priests and Levites, who were despatched by the Sanhedrim expressly to ask him to define his claims. With water—The "I" is emphasized, as also the baptism with water, as contrasted with that which was to follow. The result of John's baptism, even for those who received it faithfully, did not go beyond the change of character and life implied in "repentance." The higher powers of the unseen world were to be manifested afterward. One mightier—Rather, The Stronger than I. Stronger both to save and to punish; at once the Deliverer and the Judge. Such words could only refer to the expected Christ. The latchet of whose shoes—The thong of whose sandals. Among Jews, Greeks, and Romans alike, the office of untying and carrying the shoes of the master of the house, or of a guest, was the well-known function of the lowest slave of the household. I am not adequate to be his humblest slave. He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire—As heard and understood at the time, the baptism with the Holy Ghost would imply that the souls thus baptized would be plunged, as it were, in that creative and informing spirit which was the source of life, and holiness, and wisdom. The baptism "with fire," would convey, in its turn, the thought of a power at once destroying evil and purifying good, consuming only what was evil, and leaving that which was precious brighter than before.

17. Whose fan is in his hand—The fan was a spade, usually of wood or iron, with which the laborer threw up the threshed grain against the wind, which carried away the lighter particles of chaff, leaving the grain to fall back upon the floor or earth. Thoroughly purge his floor—The scene brought before us is that of the large hardened surface which was the "threshing-floor" of the East, the sheaves of corn thrown over it, the oxen treading on them, the large winnowing fan driving on them the full force of the strong current of air, leaving the wheat in the middle, while the chaff is driven to the outskirts of the field, to be afterward swept up and burned.

18. Other—Rather, various, different. He evidently discussed "live issues." His was "applied Christianity." This practical, aggressive, personal characteristic of John's teaching finally resulted in his imprisonment and murder: Preached he—Literally, he was preaching the good tidings.

19. Herod the tetrarch... Herodias—This Herod was the son of Herod the Great, by Malthace. Under his father's will he succeeded to the government of Galilee and Peræa, with the title of tetrarch, and as ruler of a fourth part of the Roman province of Syria. His first wife was a daughter of Aretas, an Arabian king or chief, named in II. Cor. xi, 32, as king of the Damascenes. Being reproved—The word implies a rebuke which produces a conviction of the error or sin. All the evils which Herod had done—From Mark vi, 17-20, and Matt. xv, 3-5, we learn that John had reproved Antipas for many crimes, and that Antipas was so convinced of his holiness and justice as habitually to listen to him with pleasure, and after paying earnest heed to him was greatly at a loss about him. We learn further that he resisted the constant urgency of Herodias to put him to death.

20. Added yet this above all—The Jews generally regarded the treatment of the Baptist by Antipas as the worst of his crimes, and the cause of his subsequent defeat and disgrace. In prison—This prison, as we learn from Josephus, was the stern and gloomy fortress of Machærus, on the borders of Arabia to the north of the Dead Sea. It is situated among black basaltic rocks and was believed to be haunted by evil demons. The citadel of Machærus was perched on an isolated cliff at the end of a narrow ridge, encompassed with deep ravines. At the other end of this ridge Herod built a great wall, with towers two hundred feet high at the corners; and within this inclosure a magnificent palace, with colonnades, baths, cisterns, arsenals—every provision, in short, for luxury and for defense against siege.

21. Now when all the people were baptized—The expression (which is peculiar to St. Luke) seems to imply that on this day Jesus was baptized last; and from the absence of any allusion to the multitude in this and the other narrative we are almost forced to conjecture that his baptism was in a measure private. St. Luke's narrative must be supplemented by particulars derived from St. Matthew (iii, 13-19), who alone narrates the unwillingness of the Baptist, and the memorable conversation between him and Jesus; and St Mark (i, 9-11) mentions that Jesus went into the river, and that it was he who first saw the cleaving heavens, and the spirit descending. And praying—This deeply interesting touch is peculiar to St. Luke, who similarly on eight other occasions calls attention to the prayers of Jesus. The heaven was opened—The narrative implies that our Lord and the Baptist were either alone, or that they alone saw what is recorded. "The heavens were opened to him" as they were to Stephen. The Baptist bears record that he too beheld the Spirit descending (John i, 33, 34), but there is not the slightest ground for supposing that there was any manifestation to others.

22. The Holy Ghost—Better, Spirit: Matthew has "the Spirit of God:" Mark, "the Spirit." In a bodily shape—The words are peculiar to St. Luke, and tend to confirm the traditional symbolism which finds in the dove the emblem of the Holy Spirit. They, at least, fall in naturally with this view; but the other construction, that the Holy Spirit descended after the manner of a dove, first hovering and then resting, in a bodily form (undefined) of some sort, is, at least, not excluded. Voice... from heaven—As true a voice, with as true an articulation, as ever came from human or superhuman organs of utterance. It was no dream or conception of John's, but a reality to his perception. And such a voice and articulation are no more difficult to divine power than the inarticulate thunder through the medium of electric fluid, and no more incredible when properly authenticated. Thou art my beloved Son—Literally, Thou art my Son, the Beloved. So Mark. But Matthew, This is my Son, the Beloved. This is one of the passages which so distinctly imply the doctrine of the Blessed Trinity. How can God's Spirit move from place to place? God's Spirit, we reply, is not a pantheistic, moveless vapor—a universal, fixed, and stagnant essence—but a living, personal, powerful Being, omnipotent to operate according to his own will. And if angelic spirits, like Gabriel, can invest themselves with visible embodiments, or if even a human spirit can be clothed with a material body, so beyond all question can the Divine Spirit.

Temperance.

One of two things is inevitable—the country in the future will be ruled by the good people of this land, or it will be under the dominion and at the mercy of the rum-dealers and their drunken mobs. Our cities are already dominated by men elected by the votes and at the bidding of brewers, whisky-sellers, and those who patronize the bar-room and the brothel. There is money in the trade, and shrewd, unprincipled lawyers take advantage of legal technicalities, and it is hard to convict a law-breaker, or, if convicted, next to impossible to punish him. Unless checked, these same men will dictate candidates for State and national offices, and then not only cities, but the whole land will be subject to this common enemy of God and man. The good people must unite—united at the caucus or the primaries and at the polls they can succeed. We must wrangle less about method, and go straight for the extirpation of this idol on our civilization. It is this or destruction.—Mid-Continent.

"Should I find a man in my house, tempting my children with a bottle of whisky, I'd break his head so quickly he'd never know what happened."—From a speech in favor of high license.

But if you found a man in your town who wished to open a gilded palace, with music and pictures and club-house attractions in order to allure your children into his place that he might tempt them with a bottle of whisky, you would tell him, "My dear sir, it is an awful thing to tempt my children and the children of other people with whisky, but pay into the city treasury $500 and you may have full swing with your temptation."—Mid-Continent.

When it is said of a youth that "he drinks," and it can be proven, what store wants him for a clerk? What church wants him for a member? Who would trust him? What dying man would appoint him as his executor? Letters of recommendation, the backing of business firms, a brilliant ancestry can never save him. The world shies him off. Why! It is whispered all through the community, "he drinks! he drinks!" That blasts him. When man loses his reputation for sobriety, he might as well be at the bottom of the sea.—Mid-Continent.

A Woman Two Hundred Years Old.

A case is on record of a woman who lived to this advanced age, but it is scarcely necessary to state that it was in "the olden time." Nowadays too many women do not live half their allotted years. The mortality due to functional derangements in the weaker sex is simply frightful, to say nothing of the indescribable suffering which makes life scarcely worth the living to so many women. But for these sufferers there is a certain relief. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will positively cure leucorrhea, painful menstruation, prolapsus, pain in the ovaries, weak back; in short, all those complaints to which so many women are martyrs. It is the only guaranteed cure; see guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

Cleanse the liver, stomach, bowels and whole system by using Dr. Pierce's Pellets.

All attempts to hurry God's dealings are sure to be productive of bad results. Let us remember that God gives liberal interest for every year that he keeps our prayers unanswered. The richest blessings are often those which take longest in coming: impatience is almost always accompanied by loss.—Rev. P. B. Power.

Endowment of Our Colleges.

It is a matter of congratulation to Methodism in Mississippi, that its new school, Millsaps Methodist College, will begin its career with an endowment fund of one hundred thousand dollars. This is now an assured fact. It has been made sure by the energy and eloquent addresses of Bishop Galloway. Bro. Watkins, the agent of this new college, informs us that the endowment notes given last year are being readily collected and turned into interest-bearing securities. There is a strong probability that when the college begins operations next fall a large proportion of this one hundred thousand dollars will be drawing a good interest, and the institution will start on its career of usefulness unhampered by lack of financial resources. We regard this as an admirable start. An income of six or eight thousand dollars a year, independent of tuition fees, will go a long way in placing the college upon a solid basis. That, of itself, will secure four first class professors. It being known that such is the case, there will be no trouble in "getting the pick" of the teachers in the land. First-class teachers make first-class colleges, and first-class colleges graduate first-class men from their halls: but it takes first-class salaries to secure first-class teachers. You may make a syllogism here, and the conclusion is easily seen. Four first-class professors, who are assured of decent salaries, will start a school with a momentum that will override difficulties which, under other circumstances, would crush it almost at its inception. So we are glad our brethren across the border have such flattering prospects for their new institution.

Soon after Bro. Millsaps made his offer of $50,000 to found this new school, another Mississippian, Bro. Peter James, offered to give $25,000 to Centenary College, provided the church would raise a like sum. This was a very generous offer, and made in good faith by a Christian man and an earnest advocate of Christian education. It was thought by many that the church would soon respond to such an act of beneficence, and that Bro. James would soon see his offer accepted and Centenary College have an endowment fund of, at least, $100,000. It has now been seven months since Bro. James' proposition was published to the church in the columns of the ADVOCATE, and if there has been any response to it, we have not heard it.

Do our people understand the meaning of an offer of $25,000 on such easy terms? Bro. James' proposition is not that some one else give that much, but the whole church. That is, one man will give $25,000, if all the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi will give $25,000. That ought to be an easy matter. Twenty thousand people ought to be able to do as much as one man, yet they have not done it. We know a good many well-to-do Methodists and some tolerably rich Methodists and a few very rich Methodists in Louisiana, and yet here is this Mississippian, who is not very rich, offering to do more for a Methodist College in Louisiana than all of them put together. Surely our Methodist people "do not consider," or else they do not want a school where their sons and their friends' sons may receive a Christian education!

Twenty-five thousand dollars put in Centenary College at this time will more than balance one hundred thousand given to erect the buildings for a new college, for every cent of it would go into an endowment fund. Centenary needs no buildings. She has the buildings right now to accommodate two hundred students; but she does need the endowment, and she must have the endowment or lead a sickly life, and eventually die and be laid to rest.

We think the hitch in this matter is in the fact that Centenary has had no Bishop Galloway to travel through the country and arouse the enthusiasm of the Methodists of Louisiana in regard to this offer of Bro. James. The matter has not been brought home to our people by the personal appeals of a magnetic man whose soul is on fire with his cause. A general proposition thrown out in this way, no matter how generous it is, will accomplish scarcely anything, until some fervid spirit takes it up and carries it as a torch of fire and applies it to the consciences of a sleeping people. It is no use to wait for one man or two or half a dozen men to meet Bro. James' offer. It will have to be met by the church at large. Twenty thousand Methodists in Louisiana, some of them as rich as Croesus, and some so poor they know not where next week's bread is coming from, these are all challenged by the gallant Mississippian to do only as much as he does. In the name of God, who said, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," what are our people thinking about?

Increase the Salary.

Several of our papers have spoken out in favor of increasing the salaries of the Bishops. These workers now are allowed $3,000 per annum when they can get it. It is agreed on all sides that the expenses necessarily attaching to the office of Bishop are much larger than those attaching to any other office in the church. We have spoken to several of our Bishops, and they say that the traveling expenses alone will average $500 a year. Add to this house rent, which we suppose can not be had for less than $500, and you have left $2,000 for family expenses. Now take into the account that a Bishop must "be given to hospitality," and that hospitality costs money, and you reduce the amount left for family expenses still further. Then take into consideration that the Bishop is looked upon as a "leader in liberality," and that he has many calls in this direction that other preachers do not have, and you reduce further the amount left for living. And then he often has to wait for months for his money, and sometimes it don't all come. A Bishop told us once he was paying a heavy interest for money to tide him over till collections came in.

If "the laborer is worthy of his hire," then our Bishops ought to be better paid. They are certainly "laborers" in the best sense of that word. They are truly "the servants of the churches," and the work they do is not only large and varied, but of the best quality. Every consideration of the subject ends in the conclusion that the church ought to pay her chief pastors better. We say not less than $3,500 per annum. The Committee on Episcopacy of the next General Conference will have this matter in charge, and we sincerely trust it will bring in a report increasing the pay of these laborious men of God.

The Wesleyans of England number 511,700, and they raised last year for foreign missions $750,000. How much ought 1,200,000 Southern Methodists raise, at the same rate?

Spiritual Growth.

The partial regenerationists say that there are remains of the carnal mind, which is enmity against God, left in the soul after pardon, regeneration and adoption, to be sons and heirs of God—that old things passing away and all things become new does not really mean that we are altogether "new," that our transgressions are forgiven—but our involuntary depravity is not removed. Hence they hold there must be a "second blessing," as distinct and cognizable by our consciousness, as the blessing of pardon and regeneration. They also hold that we can not, by spiritual growth, attain to that spiritual state which men who have had the "second blessing" have attained to. They state it thus: "You could not when you were unregenerate grow into regeneration. So when you are regenerate you can not grow into the spiritual state of those who have had the 'second blessing.'" Now I submit that this analogy is irrelevant, defective and ill-taken as a proof that we can not grow into a perfect spiritual manhood after we have been regenerated. Before regeneration we are "dead in trespasses and sins"—a corpse, a dead man can not grow—hence we can not grow into regeneration; but a regenerated man is risen with Christ, he is raised from the death of sin, he has passed unto life. Now all living things can grow from a spire of grass to a cedar in Lebanon, and from an ant to an elephant. We can grow—nay, more, we are commanded to "grow." "But, speaking the truth in love, may grow up in all things into him, who is the head even Christ: from whom all the body fitly framed and knit together through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in due measure of each general part, maketh the increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love." (Ephesians iv, 15, 16.) We are commanded to "add to our faith all graces, even unto charity (or love) which is the bond of perfectness." We are commanded to "walk" in the path of the justified, which "shineth more and more unto the perfect day." When the ruler's little daughter was still, cold and dead she could not grow; but when Jesus raised her to life she could grow, and, no doubt, did to perfect womanhood.

Let us grow in the favor and likeness of our Lord, and do so by appropriate and untiring spiritual culture; then our path will shine more and more. Then we shall not have to be converted over at every special service. This fashion must be most damaging in its impression on the unconverted. "If," say the unconverted, "religion is an eel, so slippery and difficult to hold, I don't care to lay hold on it." This continual calling up Christians to be prayed for, after we have failed to persuade sinners to come, looks a good deal like an attempt to make a decent retreat and save the baggage. I confess to be just a bit tired of it.

Ministerial Aid.

For the encouragement of those watching and interested in this movement of ministerial education in the Mississippi Conference, I will record a little circumstance that occurred today. I received this morning a communication from one of the members of our Aid Association, substantially cancelling his obligations because he had thought his note lost, and had placed himself under new obligations. In a few hours I received a letter from one; a stranger to most the members of the Mississippi Conference, a layman not much over twenty-one years of age, living in Louisiana, inclosing five dollars, asking for blank note to fill out for the association. So the grand work moves on. Let no member think his note lost. Dr. Andrews, at Meridian, Miss., holds the notes, and I have chronologically recorded in the secretary's book a complete list of the members and amount of their notes. Let the work move on, brethren. Send for notes, fill them out and be sure they will not be lost. If they should be, there will always be a treasurer to receive your money if there is an association.

Church Extension Funds.

The gravest question confronting us is how are we to secure enough money to pay the appropriations made by the Board last spring, which are now so urgently needed. So clamorous were the demands upon us that we made larger appropriations than ever before, hoping that the church would respond with such liberality as to enable us to pay them all before the end of our fiscal year. That response has not yet been made, and the funds are not yet in our treasury. They may be, and will be, if the preachers will at once take up their church extension collections for the current year and forward the money to the treasurers of their respective Conference Boards. We hope no money will be sent us except by the treasurers. Let it go to them, and let them divide it and send only the part belonging to the General Board, and all confusion will be avoided. Let no one suffer the month of February to pass without taking his collection and remitting proceeds as above suggested. If this be done, many churches will be built this summer which otherwise must be deferred, and it will enable us to make a much more gratifying report to the church and to the General Conference. May we not depend upon our brethren everywhere to help us out in this emergency?

DAVID MORTON, Sec.
LOUISVILLE, KY., Jan. 31, 1890.

Profits of the Publishing House.

Dr. A. G. Haygood has written a short note on the subject to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, which we give our readers:

I thank you, Mr. Editor, for what you have said concerning Publishing House profits and claimants on the Conference Fund. No doubt the agent and Book Committee meant well, but it was a bad day for old preachers and for the widows and orphans of preachers when the book agent began to pay dividends. There is just enough coming from the Publishing House to bring about two results: 1. Make an excuse for those who seek excuses—a large class. 2. Lead honest, but ill-informed people to think enough comes from the House to meet the case.

Aside from the interests of the old preachers, the widows and orphans, it is not the proper business of the Publishing House to make money to give away. That incongruous "restrictive rule" concerning "the proceeds" of the Book Concern might well enough be retired from even nominal service. What a curious looking thing it is anyway, standing where it does! One of the fundamentals of the Constitution—a bit of writing about "the proceeds" of the Book Concern, placed on a level with the essentials of doctrine and government! It is a curious kind of annex and has in its relations to other things very much the effect that is common to annexes—architectural afterthoughts; they spoil what was a decent building.

Our Friends.

The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate closes an excellent article on "Our Intimate Friends" with this fine paragraph:

A man, as well as a boy, may wisely seek intimacy with better than himself. A good man's society is a preparation for companionship with Jesus Christ. If a good man is repulsive because of his goodness, God will be repulsive for the like reason. We may lift ourselves towards God by climbing up to the side of the best men we know. It need not be proved that a tried friend, an elevating and purifying intimacy, is a powerful means of grace. God means by such associations to lift us heavenward. The fellowship of saints ought to be welcomed and encouraged as a divinely appointed agency for building men up into the image of God. And every true Christian man will find a motive for personal purity in the fact that his fellowship acts powerfully upon his intimates. We are always doing good or evil by the silent influence of our real selves. What we are our friends are coming to be. We are sculptors cutting our own image in their natures. The motive ought to send us to our knees for divine help to be worthy to live in intimacy with other human souls.

Claims on the Pulpit.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate says on this subject:

One all-important claim on the pulpit, the claim of all times, is that it shall furnish to the world a character of the highest order of purity, simplicity and unworldliness. The pulpit must give us the Christ-life, not in theory and history but in example; clothed with flesh and blood, not marred as his, but transfigured into matchless beauty; a personal character that defies criticism and is unmeasured in its influence for good. The preacher must be the embodiment of his message, the illustration of his gospel, the brightness of his Lord's glory, the express image of his person. If the pulpit does not furnish the model of a perfect man, where shall it be found? On whom shall the demand be made for this divine good, if not on the pulpit? We may not demand of the pulpit the highest scholarship, the most perfect oratory, the most brilliant or brainiest gifts; but it must be held responsible for this highest form of personal character. If it can not have an archangel's elevation and vigor, it should have an archangel's purity. If it may not have seraph's visions or the seraph's rapture, it should have the seraph's pantings after holiness. The temptation to relax this claim is strong; gifts and learning are exalted to its neglect. The priestly idea discounts personal holiness, literature ignores it, a low grade of personal character is offended by it. It is too exacting and severe for this generation; so we allow the pulpit to live as we do, that we may live as we list. If the modern claims on the pulpit do not demand the example of a perfect life it is because their ideas are debased. The pulpit must satisfy this demand or surrender its credentials. No learning can atone for its lack, no genius can substitute it. If the pulpit can not preach by its life, its voice should be silent. If it can not say, Follow me as I follow Christ, it is fallen from grace, its divinity lost, its commission rescinded.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST AND THE PRESENT.—John Wesley said in one of his last sermons: "After having served you between sixty and seventy years, with dim eyes and shaking hands let me add one word more. I am pained for you who are rich in this world. Do you give all you can? 'Nay: may I not do what I will with my own?' you reply. Here lies your mistake. It is not your own. It can not be, unless you are lord of heaven and earth. Who gave you this addition to your fortune? Do you not know that God intrusted you with that money for his work? 'But I must provide for my children.' Certainly. But how. By making them rich? Then you will probably ruin them. 'What shall I do then?' Lord, speak to their hearts [who can not see the impassioned old man stretching his trembling hands to heaven, as he thus pleads?] else I speak in vain. Leave them enough to live on, not in idleness, but honest industry. And if you have no children, upon what principle can you leave a great behind more than enough to bury you? What does it signify whether you leave ten thousand pounds or ten thousand hoots and shoes? Haste! haste! Send all you have before you to the better world!"

We understand that the eighth thousand of "The Man of Galilee" has been called for. We are glad to know that it is selling at this rate. Everybody ought to study it.

Notes.

When Sam Jones spoke of the "freedom of the press" in New Orleans, the audience was so impolite as to break out in unrestrained laughter!

One pastor we heard of said, with a deep-drawn sigh, that the name of the "Pastors' Aid Society" ought to be changed to "Pastors' Obstructionist Society." Several pastors to hear from.

Our pastors in this city are doing good work for the church. The preaching is faithful and the pastoral visiting done with zest. More than fifty persons were received into the church during the month of January.

The New York Tribune had this, which will bear thinking about:

The best business man we have ever known memorized the entire Book of Proverbs at twenty-two, and when he became an employer gave a copy of the book to every employee, with a friendly inscription, commending it as an admirable business guide.

Hugh Price Hughes, in the Methodist Times, speaking of the "uncharitableness of good men," says: "It is a singularly significant fact that it is seldom mentioned in the pulpit, although it is one of the greatest perils of every congregation in the world, and of the best members of every congregation."

The Interior:

All the money given by all the churches in England, in one year, for the cause of foreign missions, scarcely would equal the cost of two ironclads. The people at large pay freely and liberally for the messengers and engines of war, while part of them give very sparingly to the spread of the gospel of peace.

A Wesleyan minister contrasts two methods of sermon-making thus:

One man brings the sermon out of the text; another brings the sermon into the text. The one opens the text and shows what is in it; and the other piles upon the text materials gathered from afar. The difference between the two methods of producing a sermon is indicated by two words—exposition, imposition.

Men need courage. It is wonderful how little of that article is current among men. Courage to live aright men need a great deal more than courage to die decently. Many a man there is who can face death without a fear, yet he will "face about" and run away from duty, as if it were more terrible than the "grim monster." What men need; all men, is courage to face responsibility and discharge duty!

The committee appointed by the National Council of the Congregationalists have made propositions to consolidate their missionary magazines into a weekly paper of the size of the New York Nation, and to be called The Christian Nation, to be published in New York at one dollar. We consider that a wise move, and hope that our next General Conference will inaugurate a like scheme for our church. It will pay in every respect.

Joint-authorship of poems and books has come to be quite common, but a new joint-authorship of sermons has started up "down East." Two Boston ministers have been holding meetings together, at which one preaches one-half of the sermon, and the other the last half. The experiment is said to have worked to the delight of the audience. The preachers seemed to put each other on the best homiletical metal. Nothing like co-operation in these days!

This, from the Watchman, is worth a moment's notice:

It has been common of late years to hear much in sermons by great men concerning character, character, character. But preaching character is not preaching the gospel. If the word "holiness" were substituted for the word "character" in baccalaureate sermons, it would be preaching much more in the line of Scripture. A man of character may be admirable among his fellow-men, but without holiness he shall never see the Lord in peace. Character is not enough.

No doubt the Boards of Stewards have made provision for the physical necessities of their preachers and families, but a preacher's necessities are not all physical. He has other needs just as pressing. This is a reading age, and the preachers must read to keep up. They ought to read to keep ahead. Have you made provision for his intellectual wants? Why not quietly go out among the brethren and sisters and raise a book-fund for your pastor? Give him bread for his mind, and you will get your pay in fresh, vigorous thought that will do you good for days to come. How easy it ought to be to raise a few dollars to enable the minister to purchase books that will help him and you for a whole year! Suppose you try the experiment!

A FRIGHTFUL CALAMITY.—The burning of Secretary Tracy's residence in Washington City, by which his wife and daughter and servant lost their lives, was a frightful affair. The Secretary himself narrowly escaped suffocation. A defective flue is said to have been the cause of this fearful calamity. By his energy and wise policy in conducting the business of the navy, Secretary Tracy has won the esteem of the nation, and people of all parties sympathize with him in his great loss.

Personal and Otherwise.

If you fail to read the articles by "Gilderoy," now appearing in this paper, you will miss much. Bro. "Gilderoy" proposes to give you a series of doctrinal articles, and you will be instructed and edified by keeping up with him.

Bro. Robert Babington, of Franklinton, La., has our thanks for a copy of The Irish Times, of January 2, which we have read with interest. What papers those people across the water do get out—this one nearly as big as a blanket!

Our friends must have patience with us. We have had an unusually busy time, and that with sickness has put us behind in our correspondence. We hope to be able to "catch up" in a short time.

Are the brethren of the Louisiana Conference who failed to take the collection for the General Conference expenses preparing for that matter. The time is short.

The famous race around the world between Miss Bisland and Nellie Bly was won by Nellie in 72 days 6 hours and 11 minutes. It is said the trip cost Nellie $5,000—that is, those who footed the bill paid that much.

La grippe has tried its hand on several of our preachers, but as yet nothing serious. Bro. Mitchel, our business manager, had quite a serious time for a week, but is now up again and at his post. His case, however, was not la grippe.

If you want your people to have a full and correct account of the doings of the General Conference that is soon to meet, press upon them the fact that our paper will give the best account to them that they can get. Use this point in your canvass for the paper.

A private letter from Rev. P. H. Hieffenwerth, a supernumerate of the Louisiana Conference, residing in Florida, says: "My health is somewhat improved, so that I am able to preach occasionally." We are glad to hear this from our venerable brother.

A letter from Rev. R. S. Trippett, a supernumerate of the Louisiana Conference, residing in Doncaster, England, says: "My health is somewhat better than when I wrote you last, but my wife suffers a great deal and is not able to move about without help." May the blessing of God be upon the aged pair!

Bro. T. B. Maloae has favored us with a copy of the Minutes of the twentieth session (the last) of the North Mississippi Conference.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. G. W. Gordon writes from Coffeeville, Miss.: "The first Quarterly Conference for Coffeeville circuit just over. Rev. J. W. Price, P. E., was with us in the spirit and power of the Master. He has endeared himself to these people to a degree that is not always done by a new presiding elder. His heart's desire and prayer to God is, that a revival flame may sweep his entire district. Amen! Every church on the work was represented by some one and with something for the preachers. Since we came to the charge we have organized two Sabbath-schools, two prayer meetings, and intend to organize others soon. Part of our church houses are in bad repair, but we are arranging to have them made comfortable. The prospects of success are indeed encouraging. Pray for us that preacher and people may be abundantly useful to God and the church this year."

—Rev. Isaac L. Peebles, writing from Brandon, Miss., says: "I was hurt all over last December 17 by leaping from a derailed train running at full speed. I was on my way to Conference, and, because I thought no bones were broken, I tried it again next morning for Conference; but I grew worse all the time, and came home much worse and, finally, had to take my bed, under the advice of Dr. White. I am still in bed, and can't walk at all on my wounded foot. It is true that I can go a few paces on crutches by letting my foot swing, but its swelling troubles me so greatly that I have to prostrate myself, bolst my foot and rub the blood out before I can get any relief whatever. Until recently I did not get any relief at all, day nor night, unless it was during sleep. For awhile I thought I would lose my foot. It is quite likely that if I ever get so I can walk on it, that it will trouble me by swelling. Pray for my family and myself. Pray that I may become much wiser, holier and healthier, and, too, that I may succeed exceedingly well with my work here and everywhere. May God continue to bless you!"

—Rev. B. F. Rayner writes: "On our return to McComb City charge we have, on all hands, met a most hearty reception. We have received many expressions of kindness, both in word and in deed. With largely increased assessment for our support, two hundred per cent. of salary to date paid, and a most hearty 'pounding,' we go on our way rejoicing. A new and elegant church has been completed at Whitestown. We have accessions constantly."

—Rev. Robert Harry writes from Lafayette, La., February 3: "Our first quarterly meeting just over: three good sermons from the presiding elder; good congregations and a first-class collection. His coming has been a blessing to church and preacher. We have had fourteen accessions up to date this year; thirteen at this point, and one at Jennerette. The Board of Stewards complimented the preacher by raising his salary; and, by the way, the salary here is not fictitious, but a substantial reality. This is a beautiful country to dwell in. And the time can not be far distant when (from a business and religious standpoint) the desert shall blossom as the rose. It was a goodly sight yesterday to see the different denominations of this town gathering around the sacramental board. May God bless them!"

—Rev. Wilson Moore writes from Sugar Town, La.: "We have just made one round. Congregations have been good, though the weather has been inclement. We think that the prospects are very favorable."

General Conference Notice.

The committee appointed by the last General Conference to provide for its entertainment at the approaching session in St. Louis, beginning May 7, proximo, has established an office in that city, located in the American Central Building, Room 503, corner of Broadway and Locust street. It is in charge of R. M. Scruggs, Esq., a member of the committee; to whom also has been assigned the duty of making all local arrangements, with authority to appoint committees and assistants as he may deem proper and expedient. Rev. T. M. Finney, presiding elder of the West St. Louis district, has been appointed and has consented to act as secretary of the Local Committee of Arrangements. By request he will also attend the office of the General Committee in St. Louis and conduct the correspondence of both committees. All communications in reference to the business of either committee and inquirers for information are to be directed to him at the above address and will receive due attention.

The committee has in hand the affairs entrusted to its management and is earnestly endeavoring to carry into effect the plan of entertainment prescribed by the General Conference. The Centenary Church has cordially tendered the use of their commodious and imposing edifice for the place of assembly, and it has been accepted. All other arrangements will be concluded in due time and public announcement made. Timely private notice will also be given to each delegate, with ample information concerning railroad rates and the reception of delegates on arrival in St. Louis and their place of abode during the session of the Conference.

Secretaries of Conferences will confer a favor by forwarding a copy of their printed Minutes to the office of the committee at St. Louis.

"Honor to Whom Honor."

An honored sister, well known to many readers of the ADVOCATE, writes a private note to the editor, from which the following extract is taken:

In your last issue you speak of Maj. Millsaps as having inaugurated the scheme of the college. I would not detract from Maj. Millsaps, but "honor to whom honor." The idea of the Mississippi College originated with Dr. T. A. S. Adams, and was presented at Conference in Oxford, I think, in 1883; but the brethren refused to take any action.

What we meant by Maj. Millsaps inaugurating the college is, that he gave the first money to start it, and that started it. If Dr. Adams started the idea, Maj. Millsaps started the thing itself.

Our Young People.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

It was saturday night, and two children small
Sat on the stairs in the lighted hall,
Vexed and troubled and sore perplexed,
To learn for Sunday the forgotten text:
Only three words on a gilded card,
But both the children declared it hard.
"'Love,' that is easy—it means, why, this"—
(A warm embrace and a loving kiss):
"But 'one another,' I don't see who Is meant by 'another'—now, May, do you?"
Very grandly she raised her head,
Our thoughtful darling, and slowly said,
As she fondly smiled on the little brother,
"Why, I am only one, and you are another.
And this is the meaning—don't you see?—
That I must love you, and you must love me."
Wise little preacher, could any sage Interpret better the sacred page?

—Good Cheer.

Birthdays.

We met one day when riding through the Berkshire region in Massachusetts a quaint old lady, who looked every day of seventy, but who was trudging sturdily along, taking eggs to sell in the town four miles distant. She accepted our invitation to ride, and after some talk on various subjects I asked:

"How old are you?"

"Eighteen," was the quick answer.

My brother almost stopped the horses, for he was really frightened, thinking we had taken a lunatic and she might do us harm.

"Yes," she continued, quietly, "that's the way I figure it. You see, I was born on February 29, 1816, and I've never had but eighteen birthdays, so I don't see as how I can be more'n eighteen years old."

She laughed contentedly over her little joke, and we who joined merrily with her will long remember our odd "eighteen-year-old" friend.

Now they tell about an old lady near Pittsburg who has a movable birthday. She had the good fortune to be born on Easter Sunday, and she insists on receiving presents and congratulations on that festival, no matter when it occurs. People have tried to reason with the old lady, calendar in hand, but she replies to them all: "I was born on Easter Sunday morn, fifty-six years ago, and until I die Easter Sunday will be my birthday."—N. Y. Advocate.

"Pride Goeth before a Fall."

A little boy who had won a prize for learning Scripture verses and was greatly elated thereby, was asked by a minister if it took him a long time to commit them.

"O, no," said the boy, boastfully, "I can learn any verse in the Bible in five minutes."

"Can you, indeed? and will you learn one for me?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then in five minutes from now I would like very much to hear you repeat this verse," said the minister, handing him the book and pointing out the ninth verse of the eight chapter of Esther:

Then were the king's scribes called at that time in the third month, that is, the month Sivan, on the three and twentieth day thereof; and it was written according to all that Mordecai commanded unto the Jews, and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces which are from India unto Ethiopia, a hundred twenty and seven provinces, unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, and according to their language.

Master Conceit entered upon his task with confidence, but at the end of an hour, to his mortification, could not repeat it without slip.

Children's Sayings.

Little three-year-old Ethel at dinner one day commenced to scratch her ear.

"What's the matter, Ethel?" Aunt Sarah asked; "got a fly in your ear?"

"No," Ethel replied, "but he stuck his foot in."

Two little girls were looking out of the window during a thunder-shower, when one of them said:

"I would like to go out and get a good ducking."

"Well, I guess you wouldn't want to be lighted on," said her little sister.

A school-teacher asked a newly arrived Irish boy to describe an island. "Shure, ma'am," said Pat, "it is a place that ye can't have (leave) widout (without) a boat."—Youth's Companion.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to your valuable paper, I thought I would write. I like to read the little cousins' letters very much. My mother takes the ADVOCATE. I will answer Josephine Jewell's question. The word "grey" is found in Genesis xlix, 21. I will close.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to write to your valuable paper again. Mama takes your paper, and I like to read the children's column. Bro. B. S. Rayner is our pastor for this year; I like him very much. While I am writing I will answer Olive Calhoun's question. "Crystal" is found in the book of Job xxviii, 17. I wish to ask another question, as my first was not answered: Where in the Bible is the word "crying" found? In fear this will reach the waste-basket, I will close. Your little friend,

JOSIE E. FEATHERSTUN.

HOLMESVILLE, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Thanking you for the children's column in your valuable paper, I will take advantage of the same and write a short letter to let you (Mr. Editor), the little cousins and the world know something of our pleasant little town called Ruston, which numbers some one thousand souls. Ruston is on the V., S. and P. R. R., thirty-two miles from the city of Monroe and sixty-five from Shreveport. We have now three churches, Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian, and three Sunday-schools. I attend the Methodist Sunday-school, superintended by my uncle, W. W. Guthrie, which numbers about one hundred and thirty-five. Mrs. A. A. Kidd is my teacher. I love her very much; she is such a good teacher. We have seven in class and twelve classes in Sunday-school. Rev. T. K. Faunt Leroy is our pastor. I desire some of the cousins to tell me who the Virgin Mary's father was. I will write again if something does not happen to this letter.

Your little friend,

VERMELIA V. KENNEDY.

LOVE FOR MOTHER.—When gruff old Dr. Johnson was fifty years old, he wrote to his aged mother as if he were still her wayward but loving boy: "You have been the best mother, and I believe the best woman in the world. I thank you for all your indulgence to me, and beg forgiveness of all that I have done ill and of all that I omitted to do well." John Quincy Adams did not part with his mother until he was nearly or quite as old as this; yet his cry even then was: "Oh God, could she have been spared yet a little longer! . . . Without her the world seems to me like a solitude." When President Nott, of Union College, was more than ninety years old, and had been for half a century a college president, as strength and sense failed him in his dying hours, the memory of his mother's tenderness was fresh and potent; and he could be hushed to needed sleep by a gentle patting on the shoulder, and the singing to him of the old-time lullabies, as if his mother were still sitting by his bedside in loving mystery, as she had been well-nigh a century before. The true son never grows old to a true mother.—Sunday school Times.

The New Baby.

A mother lay on her bed, and beside her a new baby boy. As the physician would not let her sit up for the traditional nine days, she improved the time in studying the face and movements of her baby, and trying to get acquainted with him. One hour she could see in him a resemblance to her father, another time he looked like her husband's mother, and as the expression of his face changed she could catch glimpses that reminded her of this and that uncle or aunt of the child.

She recognized the fact that the man lay concealed or in embryo in her little boy, as the oak is wrapped up in the acorn, and what manner of man she was eager to know. Certainly this little boy was quite as different from his two elder brothers as they were from each other, and as dependent upon her as were they for the right conditions of his proper development and training. Suppose he should be as obstinate as was one of his uncles, how would she manage that trait in him so it should be but noble firmness? Suppose he were as fiery and passionate as the grandfather whose lineaments now and then appeared in his face, how would she restrain and temper the elements in him so that they should never master him, but being mastered by him make him a power for good to the world?

Perhaps it was because that mother so carefully studied the elements of character in her children, and set herself to training each individually as to her seemed wise, that she was happy in their manhood and womanhood, and that they rose up to call her blessed.

Sir Thomas Brown, in his Letter to a Friend, has this passage, the like of which we do not remember to have met elsewhere. He visited a friend who was dying of consumption, and he says he "seemed to discover that odd mortal symptom in him not mentioned by Hippocrates, that is, to lose his own face, and look like some of his near relations; for he maintained not his proper countenance, but looked like his uncle, the lines of whose face lay deep and invisible in his healthful visage before; for as from our beginning we run through a variety of looks before we come to consistent and settled faces, so before our end, by sick and languishing alterations, we put on new visages, and in our retreat to earth, may fall upon such looks which from community of seminal originals, were before latent in us."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Next to godliness there is nothing like cheerfulness for the making of a happy home. Clouds of fretfulness and fault-finding are easily dissipated by the member of the household who enters the breakfast room with a smiling face, a cheery "Good morning," and words of wholesome mirth. Dreaded tasks look less difficult, and burdens of care press less heavily, in the presence of such people. They radiate hope as naturally as the sun sends forth his rays. To grumblers and despondent ones who complain that there is no bright side to their lot, they have the ready reply, "Then polish up the dark one." In the atmosphere of cheerful homes are found boys and girls like Clive Newcome, of whom Thackeray says, "I don't know that Clive was especially brilliant, but he was pleasant." Suppose this should be said of every member of every family in which this paper is read, during every hour of every day, this present year, what an amount of warmth and sunshine would be diffused throughout our land!—Congregationalist.

"Put the little ones to bed happy," says an exchange, alluding to the habit some parents have of deferring punishments for faults committed during the day until bed-time. "Never whip children just before they retire to rest. Let the father's caress, the mother's kiss, be the last link between the day's path of pain or pleasure and the night's sleep. Send the children to bed happy. If there is sorrow, punishment, or disgrace, let them meet it in the daytime, and have hours of play or thought in which to recover happiness, which is childhood's right. Let the weary feet, the busy brain, rest in bed happy." We like that fellow's philosophy and humanity.—Petoskey Record.

Rest.

We know well enough that if trains are run at fifty miles an hour over roads built to endure only a speed of thirty miles an hour, everything in a short time begins to give way and to wear out, and the whole road and all the rolling stock gets into a dangerous condition. Every rail, every tie, every joint, every nail, every wheel and bit of machinery feels the strain and wear.

The human mechanism is not less sensitive than are railroads and locomotives. The tendency of the time is to increase the speed of individual movement and progress. The over-driven human needs constant rest and repairs, as do railroads and locomotives, and a thousand-fold more, for his mechanism is infinitely more complicated and delicate. Instead of adding more fuel to a disordered engine to make it go, we would send it to the repair shop, and let it be restored by skilled workmen to soundness. So when the mind and body are worn and weary, send them to the repair shop for rest. Sleep, quiet, nutritious food, the absence of all stimulants and whips and goads—these skilled positive and negative workmen of nature will restore (if any thing can) the wasted vitality, and bring back health and strength and soundness.

Such are the demands or seeming demands on many men and women that they feel compelled to work all the time that they are not eating or sleeping. In order to do this they drink strong coffee or strong tea, or beer or bitters or brandy, or use tobacco or opium or quinine or coca, or something that will keep up muscular and nervous tension. In all these there is not one particle of nutrition; they are poisons slow and sure; they are spurs and goads, or destructive tranquilizers. They drive the blood to the brain; they quicken the beatings of the heart; they tighten nervous tensions or relax them. For the moment they may give relief, seeming strength, concentration of mental or physical energy; by and by, under continued applications of these various stimuli, the brain breaks down, the heart becomes diseased, the nervous system is prostrated, the digestive organs mutiny, and general debility paves the way for easy victory for any disease that may come in the way.

Sleep and rest, if taken regularly and in time, will prevent and cure a great many diseases and disorders that otherwise will become incurable.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Observations from a Balloon.

The observations made during night ascensions, or those which were continued into the night, on temperatures at different heights, gave results different from the theories previously held on the subject. An increase of the temperature with the height was noticed after sunset. The rate of decline of temperature with elevation when near the earth was subject to variation as the sky was clear or cloudy. From an elevation of three miles cirrus clouds were seen apparently as far above the observers as they seem when viewed from the earth, and that under such conditions that it was hard to believe that their presence was due to moisture. The audibility of sounds from the earth depended considerably on the amount of moisture in the air. The noise of a railway train could be heard in clouds at four miles high, but not when the clouds were far below. The discharge of a gun was heard at 10,000 feet; the barking of a dog at two miles; but the shouting of a multitude at not more than 4,000 feet. Many differences in the results of observations were supposed to depend upon atmospheric conditions, while these vary with the time of day and the season of the year; so that a great many observations would be required to determine the true laws. Having followed up one of the observations recorded above with a captive balloon and by other means, Mr. Glaisher declared to the Meteorological Society, in 1870, that the theory that the temperature is always lower at higher elevations is not true.—Popular Science Monthly.

The Safest

AND most powerful alterative is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old are alike benefited by its use. For the eruptive diseases peculiar to children nothing else is so effective as this medicine, while its agreeable flavor makes it easy to administer.

"My little boy had large scrofulous ulcers on his neck and throat from which he suffered terribly. Two physicians attended him, but he grew continually worse under their care, and everybody expected he would die. I had heard of the remarkable cures effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the ulcers commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Dougherty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, began to have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is livelier, its skin is fresher, and its appetite better than we have observed for months."—Frank M. Griffin, Long Point, Texas.

"The formula of Ayer's Sarsaparilla presents, for chronic diseases of almost every kind, the best remedy known to the medical world."—H. M. Wilson, M. D., Wiggs, Arkansas.

MASON & HAMLIN

The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since and including that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers, of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated ORGANS $22 to $900 catalogues free.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity. GRAND & UPRIGHT PIANOS for standing in tune and other important advantages.

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments, also rented.

GILBERT—At Fawnsdale Plantation, near Monroe, La., on Saturday morning, December 21, at 6:45 o'clock, the vital spark left the body of Mrs. ELIZABETH GILBERT, and, like a tired child, she closed her eyes for a long rest.

Mrs. Gilbert was born in Green county, Ga., on February 17, 1819, and was aged seventy years ten months and four days. For more than forty years she was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. A woman of noble impulses, she was held in highest esteem by all who knew her. Her affections were of the warmest kind, and her friendships were strong and enduring. In death her countenance was illuminated with a holy smile, which testified that after a long life of usefulness, devoted so largely to the service of others, she had, indeed, fallen asleep in Jesus. In the ripeness of years, full of good and noble deeds, and leaving behind her only the blessed assurance of her goodness, she has passed through the dark valley of the shadow of death to the brighter land beyond, and will find her sure reward in an eternity of peace; and now of that cheerful, hopeful and charitable life, almost childlike in its simplicity, a life that has left its impress here in characters that can not be effaced, a life that will live beyond the skies, there remains but a memory.

Death gathers his harvest at all seasons and from all households, and at this season, when the flush of pleasure and the sound of mirth is filling the air, the sudden death, by paralysis, of this estimable lady has cast a shadow upon our household, and true hearts mourn the loss of one loved and cherished, and a gloom has fallen on the hearts of her relatives and many friends that will not soon be lifted. May her dear soul find that rest which God giveth his beloved! B. R. S.

LITTLE—Bro. ALEXANDER J. LITTLE, son of Duncan Little, was born in Robinson county, N. C., June 26, 1811. In 1826 he, with his parents, moved and settled in Simpson county, Miss., where, in 1836, he was married to Miss Catherine McLaurin, sister of Hon. Lach McLaurin. Soon after his marriage he and his wife joined the (old-school) Presbyterian Church. They, some time after this, removed to Smith county, Miss., where his companion died, September 28, 1852. They had five children—three sons and two daughters. One son and one daughter preceded him to the spirit world. Two sons and one daughter, with many relatives and friends, remain to mourn their loss. Bro. Little lived up to the rules of his church up to his death, which occurred on December 19, 1889, at 6:30 P. M., in Smith county, Miss.

This writer was acquainted, more or less, with Bro. Little for more than thirty years—intimately the last seventeen years—and loved him as a brother. He was one of the most quiet, good men we ever knew; never heard anyone speak against him. He strictly attended to his own affairs, leaving all others to do the same. We miss his presence very much. But we will meet again. The writer visited him several times during his last illness; talked and prayed with him by his request. He said he was ready and willing to go; would be at rest. May his children—all of whom are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—meet him in that bright by-and-by! Adieu for awhile, old brother.

R. A. SIBLEY.

DUNAWAY—Rev. J. B. DUNAWAY, a beloved member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, died at his home, in Bienville parish, La., October 5, 1889. He was born November 30, 1812; was married to Miss Rebecca Isaacson, in Orange county, Fla., August 1, 1866, with whom he lived happily until his death. He united himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1866, and was licensed to preach on October 3, 1885. Bro. Dunaway was a faithful preacher of the gospel. He loved his church, and gave liberally of his income for the support of the gospel. Thus a good man has fallen. Yes, that deceitful disease, consumption, set in and continued for fifty-four weeks. Though he suffered long, not a murmur escaped his lips; but he often said that he was resigned to the will of God. Often has this writer heard him witness for Christ. Yes, earth is poorer, but heaven is richer.

Yes, brother, sleep on until the resurrection morn, and we will meet you where parting will be no more.

He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn their loss. I would say to the bereaved: Be thou faithful until death, and meet husband and father. Yes, he is at the beautiful gait, watching and waiting for you.

PHILIP BURKETT, P. C.

CARMICHAEL—"Bro. DANIEL CARMICHAEL was born January 8, 1801, in Marion district, S. C. His parents were pious Presbyterians, and while young he united with the church of their faith. In 1827 he married Miss Nancy McCormick. They had eleven children; only five of them survive him. In 1836 he moved to Alabama. There being no Presbyterian Church near him, he united with the Methodist Church, to which he remained loyal until his death. In 1856 he removed to Jefferson county, Miss., where his wife died in 1875. His children were separated—some in Texas and others in Mississippi. He lived alternately with his sons in the former State and with his daughters in the latter. In June, 1889, he came to Mississippi to spend his last days. He came not to live, but to die. His last days were wholly consecrated to the Lord. He often said the world had no allurements for him whatever. He died suddenly and peacefully, November 30, in Wesson, Miss., while sojourning with his daughter there. He had no sickness known to anyone. He went to bed on earth and waked up in Paradise."

The above is a short sketch of a long, useful Christian life sent to me by a devoted daughter, who requested me to change or substitute as I thought proper. The pen of love and tender affection has done this duty so well that I find no need of change or substitution. I only add that his last days were a benediction to his associates and the church, including his pastor. Every day seemed like a page in the last chapter of the biography of a saint, filled with illustrations of heavenly life. The biography of Enoch, as written in Genesis, will apply with equal aptness to Bro. Carmichael—"He walked with God: and he was not; for God took him."

His pastor, H. BRADFORD.

TEAL—ELY J. TEAL was born in South Carolina, September 6, 1830. On September 18, 1856, he was happily married to Miss Mary J. Stubbs, a woman of strong faith and deep piety. She is still living, a blessing to her children and the church. In January, 1870 Bro. Teal moved with his family to Mississippi, and settled in Carroll county, where he departed this life, December 31, 1889. He was born of God in 1851, but did not join the church until 1869. The reason of this delay was his unsettled belief as to doctrine. He took the Bible as his guide, and came to the conclusion that he would cast his lot with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was one of the stewards of Smith Chapel Church, on the Carrollton circuit, North Mississippi Conference. He lived eight miles from his church. He was a faithful steward, and was always present at church when possible. No man, perhaps, ever loved his church more than Bro. Teal loved his. The itinerant preacher always found a warm welcome at his house. He would often send some of the good things of his home to the preacher's family. The pastor loved for him to make visits to the parsonage.

Many loved him. We miss him in the church. He leaves a wife and five children who are making for the haven of rest, where they expect to meet husband and father, together with the other six of the family who are with Jesus. He was fully resigned to the will of his Lord. He talked freely of death and of going to his final home. May his mantle fall on his sons, and may they be strong men for God! May his death be a benediction to many! May we meet in heaven!

D. L. CODDELL, P. C.

LIPSCOMB—BEAUREGARD LIPSCOMB, son of Monroe and Jennette Lipscomb, was born in South Carolina, in 1861; removed with his parents to Winston county, Miss., in 1873, was converted and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, October, 1883, from which time till his death his life was that of an earnest Christian. He died of pneumonia, January 10, 1890. He was a true, faithful friend; a thoughtful, dutiful, devoted son; an affectionate brother. No young man was more universally beloved. His death was so unexpected, so sudden, that he left no dying testimony; but his life was such that no fears concerning his future are entertained by those who knew him. We mourn "not as those who have no hope," but fondly hope to meet him where there will be no more sickness, pain nor death. FRIEND.

COWART—Mrs. DORA COWART, wife of William Cowart, and daughter of W. T. and Martha McCraw, died at her home, in Sharkey county, Miss., October 8, 1889.

Sister Cowart was a Christian young woman and a member of the Methodist Church, and was held in high esteem. She gave promise to herself and others of a happy and useful life. But she was resigned to the will of God, and said to her parents and friends, "Weep not for me, for I am going home;" and requested all to meet her in heaven.

Resolutions, expressive of affection and sorrow, and of sympathy for her loved ones, were adopted by the "Alliance" of which she was a member.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

SHARP—Died, near Mandeville, St. Tammany parish, La., Tuesday, January 14, 1890, at twelve P. M., Miss LUCINDA SHARP, daughter of Mr. Zach. Sharp, aged thirty one years three months and eighteen days.

Though for eighteen years Sister Sharp had been a helpless, bed-ridden invalid, she bowed in submission to the will of her heavenly Father, being always cheerful, and never murmuring nor wondering why God had afflicted her. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and strong in the faith. Death was to her a messenger of rest, and before dying she said, "God is with me;" and as the clock was striking the hour of twelve her pure soul winged its flight to her heavenly home. L. W. WOOD.

In 1860 Henry Goethe, of Beaufort, S. C., wrote Dr. Shallenberger:

"I regard your Antidote a specific for chills and fever. It was used on the Charleston and Savannah railroad last summer and autumn in the most sickly region, and under the most trying circumstances. Out of one gang of negro operatives, fifty were stricken down with chills and fever, and every one recovered by the timely use of Shallenberger's Antidote. You possess the GREATEST MEDICINE IN THE WORLD."

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The war between the rival parties in the House was fairly opened last week. An attempt was made to consider the West Virginia election case, and the Democrats declined to vote until the new rules are framed. Speaker Reed claimed the right to count them as part of the quorum, and the proceeding was denounced by the non-voting members.

The Kansas City Star says: "An English syndicate is negotiating for the purchase of all the principal sash and door factories in the country. Options have already been secured on about thirty-five plants, for which the syndicate will pay between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000."

The bill commonly known as the American Tobacco Company bill, and which granted a charter to the alleged cigarette trust, was repealed by the Virginia Legislature.

The constitutional convention bill was passed in the Mississippi Legislature, and only lacks the signature of Governor Stone. The convention will assemble August 12, next; the delegates being elected July 29.

A syndicate of Northern capitalists purchased upwards of 3,600 city lots inside the corporate limits of Galveston, Texas, on the first instant.

The paper mills of the Fox River Valley Company, of Appleton, Wis., have been sold to an English syndicate for $600,000.

The Special House Committee of the World's Fair held a meeting on February 1. There was the usual exchange of sarcastic remarks between the representatives of the competing cities. Mr. Wilson presented the draft of the bill prepared by the local Washington committee and gave notice that it would be presented to the House as a substitute for the special committee's bill. This measure proposes an appropriation by the government of $15,000,000 to defray the expenses of holding of the fair in Washington.

A riot occurred in the vicinity of St. Elizabeth's Church, in a Polish parish at East Buffalo, N. Y., on February 2. The priest who had been appointed to the parish by Bishop Ryan was confronted with a barricade which had been erected around the church, and fully 2,500 Polish women and girls were drawn up at the gate and resisted his entrance. Over 200 policemen were sent to the aid of the priest, and after a fierce conflict the women retired. Several officers were more or less injured, and the woman ring-leader was thrown down and trampled on.

A meteor fell near Granbury, in Western Texas, last week. The meteor will weigh several tons. Fragments of it contain nuggets of what is believed to be gold.

The Washington residence of Secretary of the Navy Tracy was totally destroyed by fire on February 3. Three persons—Mrs. Tracy, wife of the secretary; Miss Mary Tracy, his daughter, and Josephine, a French maid—lost their lives, and three others—the secretary himself, Mrs. Wilmerding, his eldest daughter, and Miss Alice Wilmerding, his granddaughter—were badly injured.

The Cunarder Aurania arrived in New York on February 3 from Liverpool, having on board Rev. Dr. Talmage, wife and daughter. Dr. Talmage left on October 30 for a trip through Europe and the Holy Land. Many friends of the Doctor were at the dock to bid him welcome.

FOREIGN.

The Spanish government intends to impose a new duty upon all sales of sugars and molasses made on the island. The Chamber of Commerce of Havana has presented to the intendent of the treasury an energetic protest against the measure.

At a meeting of the representatives of the various dock companies of London, on January 30, the chairman of the joint docks committee referred to the great decrease in the shipping business at London owing to the strikes of the dock laborers. He declared that £150,000 yearly would not cover the increased cost of labor.

There were several Bonlanglet meetings in Paris on January 31, each of which ended in a free fight.

Five new ships for the Turkish navy were launched at Constantinople on January 31.

Mr. Parnell has issued a circular calling the attention of his followers to the opening of Parliament. He writes to them that in his judgment constant and unremitting attention to their parliamentary duties will be especially necessary in the coming session, because opportunities are certain to arise for rendering efficient service to the Irish cause.

The Hamburg-American Company and the North German Lloyd Company have jointly relinquished the Austrian concession for mail service and closed their office in Vienna. In consequence of the attacks made on them by the Austrian press.

It is said there is a serious divergence of views between Prince Bismarck and the Emperor or those having the immediate confidence of the Emperor upon the proper course of the government in some important internal concerns. The Prince's objection to the tone of the speech from the throne has been commented upon for some days. The fact that the objectionable part was the reference to labor troubles, and that Von Berlepsch had been appointed to a place in the ministry, giving him control of those things practically in place of Bismarck, seems to imply that the Emperor intends that they shall be put in the hands of one in sympathy with the ideas set forth in the speech.

The influenza is spreading in Mexico and has assumed a more virulent form. A number of deaths have resulted from the disease.

The trial of the suit for libel brought by Parnell against the London Times was to have begun on February 3, but when the case was called counsel announced that the suit had been compromised, the Times paying Mr. Parnell £5,000 damages.

Grayness, baldness, dandruff and all diseases of the scalp and falling of the hair can be cured by using Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Bright-colored silk handkerchiefs adorned with representations of wine-glasses and whisky-bottles are now sent into the Congo states by the liquor men for free distribution among the natives who buy their liquor.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep, had night-sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

The business done by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association, Chicago, in the last year, amounts in round numbers to $180,000. The increase in cash receipts the past year is $30,000. A dividend of seven per cent. has been declared for the third time to stockholders. Considering that all this enterprise relates to temperance pure and simple, and is conducted by women, the record is one to which the history of the temperance movement affords no parallel.

Diseases of Women.

It is decided that the different organizations of Good Templars in England shall reunite and form one organization.

Anything that will help you in profitably advertising your business should interest you. It is economical, profitable, and wise to ascertain which method of procedure will prove the best and accomplish the best results for the smallest expenditure of time or money. PRINTERS' INK, a weekly journal issued by Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York City, tells advertisers the long and short of the story. If you advertise, or intend to advertise, PRINTERS' INK will help you. Each number contains articles for the information of intending and inexperienced advertisers, telling them how, when and where to advertise. It interests experienced advertisers by keeping them informed of events in advertising and newspaper circles, and by the timely discussion of topics of interest to advertisers in general. The subscription price is Two Dollars a year. Sample copies are mailed free upon request.

A Seedsman's Enterprise.

J. J. H. GREGORY, the well-known seedsman, proposes to distribute free among his customers of this season, a year's subscription to one hundred agricultural publications, to be selected by the fortunate ones from a list to be sent them, which will include all the papers and magazines of this class published in this country. Full details will be found in his catalogue, advertised in our columns. Of course this is an advertising enterprise, but of a character which will permit all to wish well to both the parties concerned. In response to frequently repeated solicitations he has a likeness of himself in his catalogue of this year.

At the first election held in Kansas under the Woman's municipal suffrage law, the cry went up that the "ignorant black women" of Leavenworth, the largest city of the State, would vote with the saloon and be controlled by the vicious element. Out of nearly seven hundred "ignorant black women," all but twenty-three voted "for God and home and native land." No amount of intimidation could turn these women from their mother instinct of home-protection.

THE ARROW AND THE SONG.

I shot an arrow into the air—
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For, so swiftly it flew, the sight
Could not follow it in its flight.

I breathed a song into the air—
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For who has sight so keen and strong,
That can follow the flight of song?

Long, long afterward, in an oak
I found the arrow, still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end,
I found again in the heart of a friend.

—Longfellow.

Letter from Bishop Galloway.

As official duty called me to Nashville last week, I had opportunity to note a church extension enterprise in that city of which your readers may wish to hear. The day before my arrival the new West-End Church was dedicated, Dr. R. A. Young preaching the sermon and lifting the indebtedness on the stately structure, amounting to $23,081 82. In company with my special friend, Mr. J. D. Hamilton, whose honored father established the Sunday-school out of which that church had grown, I made a thorough and gratifying inspection of the tasteful temple. The design differs materially from any Protestant Church I have ever seen. The auditorium is a complete circle, with spacious galleries around the entire building, the whole capable of accommodating a thousand persons. There is a corner tower of ambitious height; another, opposite, more modest, and an ornamental dome in the center, quite resembling a Mexican cathedral. There is studious and admirable economy of space in the arrangement of chancel and pews. The pulpit platform, however, is rather too contracted for the fervid style of an orthodox Methodist. Preachers who deny the doctrine of post-mortem probation must have no narrow limitations upon their divine earnestness. Just back of the pulpit, in the wall, is a beautiful memorial tablet in honor of Bishop McTyeire, on which is this inscription:

REV. HOLLAND N. McTYEIRE, D. D.
Born July 28, 1824. Died Feb. 15, 1889.

Forty years a Preacher, twelve years an Editor, sixteen years President of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, twenty-three years a Bishop of the M. E. Church, South.

The stained glass windows, several of them memorial, are very handsome, but are appreciated only by those who sit in the galleries. The two memorial windows in rear of the pulpit have the one word, McTyeire. And others are as follows:

MORTIMER HAMILTON,
Founder of West End Mission, 1856.

JAMES W. THOMAS,
First Official Member and Seven Years Sunday-School Superintendent.

MRS. WINNIE TAYLOR CROWDUS,
Consecrated from Her Youth.

A. L. P. GREEN, D. D.,
Sixty Years a Preacher of the Gospel.

ANNA CLARA CHRISMAN,
Missionary to Brazil.

DORA RANKIN,
Missionary in China.

But the one which impressed me most had this beautiful inscription:

To Our Unforgotten Poor, Whose Names are Written in Heaven.

It was with the co-operation of Rev. John A. Ellis, city missionary, now a member of the Mississippi Conference, that Mortimer Hamilton founded that mission in 1856. Through varying fortunes the work was carried on, until the cap-stone of this magnificent temple was brought forth with rejoicing. The church has cost $55,000, and the membership numbers over 700. The building was begun under the pastorate of Dr. W. M. Leftwich, and has been courageously pushed to completion by Rev. Walker Lewis, the present pastor and chaplain of Vanderbilt University. The American, in giving an account of the dedication, aptly said: "The history of this church, briefly stated, is an interesting example of the strength and rapid, substantial growth of the Methodist denomination in Nashville."

Such a church was needed in that part of the city, and our brethren have done well to so happily and generously supply the demand.

The history of the Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund in London, established by the munificence of Sir Francis Lycett, is an eloquent appeal to Southern Methodism to build commodious and tasteful tabernacles in our growing towns and cities. West End will be a potential, though silent, sentinel of Methodism, and its very architecture impress university students and others with the enterprise and mighty movement of our great church. As we build, we grow; and the more tastefully we build, the more intelligently we grow.

I had but little time for social intercourse. A short conference with Bishop Hargrove, who is in labors abundant, and a few words with the secretaries, editors, agent and business manager assured me, however, that there is a cheerful outlook in every department. Gratifying reports will go up to the General Conference. Though below the claims and call of God, the church has had a successful quadrennium. If pastors will take early collections, only equaling the offerings of last spring, the secretary of the Board of Missions will make the largest exhibit in the history of Southern Methodism. To that end, and in order to meet the growing demands of our mission fields, I make here and now an appeal to the patronizing Conferences of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Fraternally yours,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Conversion.

BY "GILDEROY."

Conversion is the process of turning from sin into God. In a broader sense, it is often applied to the entire history of the soul's restoration to spiritual life and to the favor of God. Thus applied, it includes justification and regeneration. Strictly speaking, it means only turning. In this sense the term includes repentance and faith. Repentance is turning from sin, and faith is turning to God. The equivalents of this term run through both Testaments. Perhaps this is the only term for the restoration of the soul that runs through the whole Bible. Those who recognize no saving grace before regeneration, out of which repentance and faith may flow, make conversion include all the moral blessings of a state of grace. With some it means the recovery of a state of grace conferred in the act of baptism. It will be well, however, to remember that it is merely the soul's turning-point—the turning from sin and the beginning of seeking God. The crisis it marks is not the crisis in the religious life of a believer, but a crisis in the soul of a penitent seeker, not yet a new creature in Christ.

Conversion is in the outer court, in the mind. In this work the divine and human agency combine. Rightly understood, they co-operate. This is not true of justification, adoption, regeneration; nor of sanctification as an inward cleansing. Conversion is only a preparation for these—the sinner getting himself ready by the aid of grace for pardon and new life. This preparation is, properly speaking, conversion. When this is done, conversion is ended, and the sinner is in an attitude before God to receive the absolute gifts of grace. These distinctions are not material to the returning sinner, since our God does not stand on such nice distinctions; but they are important to the preacher, to the man who expounds the way of life. They enable us to keep in mind clearly the correlation of the divine agency, and of human responsibility in the matter of personal salvation. In a large part the sinner is responsible for his own conversion. He is commanded to repent because he can repent; commanded to believe because he is capable of faith. The grace of God is always imminent, always co-operant, throughout the whole process of conversion, inspiring, aiding, guiding and working with the sinner in all his efforts to prepare himself to receive what God has to give. If this grace is given in vain, the sinner alone will be to blame for it. It is sufficient for all, and would be efficient in every case if heartily co-operated with by the individual operated upon. If there is failure, grace will not be to blame for it. The whole responsibility will fall on him who receives the grace of God in vain. God would turn every man from sin unto salvation if men would be turned. Some men will not have the man, Christ Jesus, to reign over them. They love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. They hate the light and turn away from it, lest their deed should be made manifest that they are not wrought in God. Christ would gather all men under his wings as a hen gathereth her brood; but men will not be gathered. They will not yield when drawn, will not turn when turned, will not have faith in Christ when moved and called thereto. They harden their hearts and stiffen their necks, lest they be converted and Christ should heal them. To all such the grace of God which bringeth salvation is given in vain.

It remains to consider repentance and faith, both included in conversion, as the conditions of personal salvation.

College Endowment.

BY W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, D. D.

"Endow, endow"—that is the watchword of the colleges now.

The time for argument is past; the time for action has come. No college for males can be sustained without endowment. All over the land our colleges are being endowed. Rich men, and men who are not rich, are bestowing their means to establish on a lasting basis institutions of learning that shall annually send forth educated men, who shall be able to withstand the foes of Christianity, and frown down with an imperious pity the skepticism and infidelity of our times. Such teaching as can be had in Christian schools alone can save our country from being ruined through the agencies of education itself; yes, ruined by education which the American people unconsciously idolize. A godless education is now the curse of the world.

We can and we must endow Centenary College. The work has been well begun. Let her friends in Mississippi and Louisiana unite to carry on the movement. Look at the example in a sister State. Every pastor in the two Georgia Conferences is required to take a collection this year for the endowment of Emory College. That insures success. So many earnest workers in a good cause will not fail. Brethren, pray while you pay, and pay while you pray, for the endowment of Centenary College. God will move the hearts of the people through intelligent appeals to endow this college. Men will be generous when they see the propriety of the generous deed. There are more than half a dozen men in Mississippi and Louisiana who could endow each a professorship, and, by naming it, transmit to posterity the memories of the worthy by monuments more lasting and beneficent than chiseled marble or molded brass. Who will endow a professorship of agricultural chemistry? There's wealth to the State as well as education to thousands in that. Georgia and other States have made millions by the application of the teachings of chemistry to their soils in the last twenty-five years. Who will endow a chair of biblical science? Righteousness on earth and glory in heaven shall be the fruit of its teachings.

The Methodist ministry is the best organized agency in the world, whether for proclaiming the gospel, or endowing a college, or for whatever else they may unite to accomplish. They can go farther, see more people, spread their influence more extensively, and concentrate it more intensively on a point, than any other association of men. The preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi have done nobly in giving their notes and paying the interest. Let them canvass among the people, preach on Christian education, and get notes and cash for the endowment. We invest cash in good securities at 8 per cent. This plan is working well. The people's money brings their hearts with it. Bro. Peter James' $25,000 waits to be claimed by a like amount from other friend or friends. Let the work of endowment go forward. Let us hear from you.

Does the Fig Tree Blossom?

BY G. T. V.

So far as I can learn, there seems to be a general impression that the fig tree does not blossom, and I have often looked most carefully to find an indication of a bloom; yet for many years I looked in vain. Even Dr. Clarke, the commentator, on Hab. iii, 17, declares "the fig tree does not bloom;" and, as usual, flies to a new rendering of the word, saying, to save the prophet, that the original means "to flourish." For many years I took him as authority; but still I often thought how strange the best of fruit should come, exceptionally, without a bloom. till finally I began to think it must be some outgrowth—a tubercle—rather than a fruit, for fruit required blossoms and had seeds. A tubercle contains no seeds, yet figs did; and it seemed to me the prophet thought it bloomed.

Nor have infidels been silent on the contingent assertion of the prophet, "Although the fig tree shall not blossom;" sneering at a prophet claiming to be inspired, who was deficient in the simplest fact connected with the subject; for all men know, they said, the fig tree does not blossom. But the prophet lived in a land of figs, and ought to have known all about them, and, doubtless, did; and if the fig tree does not bloom, it is an exception to every known fruit tree on the earth; and this, with the prophet's assertion, should go further with us than Dr. Clarke's criticism, which was based on slim experience. 'Tis true, the few early figs before the regular crop are called by some "the bloom fig," but they drop off and perish; nor can I comprehend how they can fertilize a fuller, later crop succeeding. They seem untimely, and are doomed to perish.

But, years ago, in opening a half-grown fig, I found inside a number of stamens, or pistils, of a slight pink or purplish color, which compose the pulp or body of the fig, and I wondered (they looked so much like blossoms) if a fig could bloom inside. But there were the flowers, and every little tendril forms a little seed, which we find inside when ripe. I knew a melon forms entire before it blossoms, and why should not a fig form and bloom within it?

This view, I think, is the correct one, and harmonizes with the prophet; and also, from all I can learn from warmer countries, with their view. Dr. Clarke, whenever he got in difficulty, flew to Hebrew; and if in great trouble, sheltered behind the Chaldee, where few could follow him; and all our ancestors were from northern climes, and knew not much of figs. We have too blindly followed our commentator, and either said with him, "The fig tree does not bloom," or thought a few early figs, just like the others, were the flowering figs.

To tell the truth, figs do bloom, but bloom inside, and absolutely have more blooms than any other fruit on earth; and every fig we eat, we only crush some scores of fully matured blossoms.

COVINGTON, La.

Two Resident Methodist Bishops.

Fort Worth, Texas, is now the residence of two Methodist Bishops—Bishop J. S. Key, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Bishop D. A. Goodsell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Bishop Key removed to Texas in May, of last year, and settled in Fort Worth. Bishop Goodsell only recently determined the location of his official residence, and with it comes the announcement that the Northern brethren propose to erect in that city "one of the handsomest Methodist Churches in the State of Texas." Of his removal to Fort Worth, the New York Christian Advocate says: "We trust Bishop Goodsell will be able to promote in that great State the interests of our church and of Christianity, and to contribute to the harmonizing of both races, so numerously represented in its population."

New Orleans, for forty years the home of Bishop Keener, was selected as the location for Bishop Mallalieu, of New England; and now Bishop Goodsell, of New York, becomes a resident of the same city with Bishop Key. There seems to be significance in these Southern residences of Northern Methodist Bishops. Is it a sharper definition and clearer declaration of the policy of that church in the South? Or is it an accentuation of a writer's warning in the Northern Methodist Review against "running too fast after fraternity"?

Sunday-School Convention.

The attention of every Sunday-school worker in the State of Louisiana is called to a proposed Sunday-school Convention to be held in New Orleans on March 21-23, next. Prominent speakers will be prepared to deliver addresses on important topics. Every school should send a delegate, as it is the purpose of the convention to organize a State Association, comprised of members of the various evangelical churches throughout our State. Louisiana, now being the only State in the Union without such an organization, it behooves our live and intelligent workers to interest themselves in "wheeling into line" and unite in the inauguration of an increased momentum in the cause over the entire State. Efforts will be made to secure reduced rates over the various railroads entering New Orleans. Circular notices will be sent shortly to every ministerial appointment known in the State.

E. B. MACKIE, Sec.

The Pulpit and the Lottery.

"Nothing but the pulpit can save this State from the Lottery!"

The source from which this remark came entitles it to the serious attention of every minister of God who reads these lines. The speaker is a well-known gentleman of New Orleans, a member of the Convention which adopted the Constitution with the lottery feature inserted, because, supposedly some, a vested right; a former member of the State Legislature, and now filling a high Federal position; no one who knows him will question for a moment his competency to speak with judicial certainty on this "burning question."

"Nothing but the pulpit!" By this he meant the Christian pulpit, Protestant and Catholic; indeed, he would, no doubt, have included the Jewish pulpit as well. And the reason assigned was that the secular press of this State, with a few honorable exceptions, would not (for reasons of its own) be induced to say one word derogatory to the Louisiana State Lottery; and that many of the representatives to the Legislature have been bought up, and others are too intimidated to speak and act their true sentiments. In his opinion, if the pulpit of Louisiana is silent now, the commonwealth is doomed, with its honest and good people as silent and sorrowful witnesses, to see a public shame perpetuated and legal permission granted to a few rich men and absentees to continue (for a score or more years longer) their highway robbery of the foolish, the ignorant and the poor, and the corruption of the morals of the entire community.

As men, as patriots, as Christians, as preachers, can we innocently remain silent in the presence of so tremendous an evil? Can we stand by and see, without a word of warning, our women and children robbed and corrupted, and without remonstrance allow this vulture to settle down for another term of years upon and batten our body politic?

Is playing in the lottery gambling—the Supreme Court has so decided—and is not gambling sin? Is it a sin to violate the law of labor: "In the sweat of thy brow thou shalt eat thy bread?" or the law of property: "Thou shalt not steal?" or the law of love: "Thou shalt not covet?"

Then in the name of all that is sacred and true, that pulpit is faithless to its trust that fails to denounce it. And let not the pulpit deal in mere generalities, leaving the hearer to guess its meaning or draw his own inference, which few have the ability or the inclination to do. Denounce it, brethren, from every pulpit by name, although it steals our mother's honored name and demands the protection of her Constitution. Denounce it by name, although it claim partnership with the State in educating her ignorant, and partnership with the church in caring for her poor, and plainly tell your people that dealing in lottery tickets, in any shape or form, is sin, whose wages is death.

Oh, for the trumpet-tongue of an Old Testament prophet to show "Jacob his transgression and Israel his sin!"

Oh, for the personal directness of a Nathan: "Thou art the man!" and the courage of the Baptist: "It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife!"

In the name of a disgraced commonwealth, of innocent children and ignorant, poor and foolish young men, assaulted by a perpetual and all-pervading temptation; in the name of wrecked homes, ruined lives and lost souls; in the name of him who came to destroy the works of the devil, I call upon my brethren, if voiceless hitherto, to be silent no longer. In the imaginary security of its impregnable fortress, like Jehus of old, it laughs at the threatened assault of its foes, and like it, in lofty scorn, proposes to man its walls with the "halt and the lame." One of its largest stockholders said to a friend of mine: "We have millions to spend, and every man has his price." No doubt, he judged others by himself. Money is his god, and he believes in its omnipotence. He and his partners should remember that there is One "higher than the highest," and recall the old story of a king who for seven years ate grass, until he had learned the lesson that "the heavens rule." The church may be like the "ones, a feeble folk;" but in its war against wrong and fraud and sin, the Almighty is her ally.

Let the women and everyone pray against the Louisiana State Lottery; let our men in the Legislature and at the polls vote it down; let our preachers lift up their voices in denunciation of it, and what has occurred in more than one war will happen in this. A single veteran regiment has been known to arrest the onset of a conquering foe and retrieve a disastrous defeat. As they have stood like a stone wall, the demoralized fugitives have rallied around their standard, and the infectious valor of a thousand men has won for a routed host the victory.

Let, then, the preachers of every persuasion and all over the State plant their colors and rally their clans, and all good and true and timid men who hate fraud and theft, and scores of lottery victims, will flock to the standard, and the Prince of Darkness and his boastful cohorts shall learn, to their dismay, that "with them is an arm of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God to help us and to fight our battles."—R. Q. M., in Southwestern Presbyterian.

Prudence Crandall.

The death of Prudence Crandall Philleo, a few days ago at Elk Falls, Kan., in her eighty-seventh year, recalls history that ought to teach some people a little wisdom. The brethren who pose as the only friends of the negro, and who are trading in cheap martyrdom, might retrace the history of Prudence Crandall to profit. Remember that she lived in Connecticut, and not in Louisiana or Mississippi. The following facts we republish from the New York Independent:

In 1831 Prudence Crandall, who was teaching a private school in Canterbury, Conn., gave notice that she would receive as pupils young misses of color. The town was instantly stirred up against her. In the judgment of the majority of the cultured people of that town she had no right to open her private dwelling for the instruction of respectable colored girls; it was an outrageous business and must be stopped. After several consultations with an able resident lawyer, Chauncey F. Cleveland, afterward Governor of the State, it was decided to take no action against her if she would give up teaching negroes to read, write, cipher and study the Bible. They told her that she must go somewhere else if she wanted to engage in such business. Miss Crandall decided that she had a right to do good, that her house was her castle and she would use it as she pleased. Then followed the invention of the only original boycotting process of meeting a great difficulty. The boycotters went to the village grocer and commanded him no longer to sell his molasses, ginger or saleratus to Miss Crandall. They told the butcher not to sell her meat, and the poor man who worked in the garden not to handle her spade. They scared the doctor and made him believe that if he sold his calomel and jalap to Miss Crandall he would have no use for his medicines elsewhere. Even the good old minister of the town trembled with agitation. He had a valuable salary of $100, and if he took sides with Miss Crandall and her negroes he would very likely have to go for his bread and butter to another parish. Not satisfied with this, the boycotters entered her dwelling, destroyed her furniture and wrecked the whole premises; not even a Webster's spelling-book or a Daboll's arithmetic was left to tell the tale that it had been a school-house. And this was not enough. They went to the Legislature and had a law passed by the great State of Connecticut that nobody in the State should teach non-resident negroes. She wrote in her extremity to Mr. Arthur Tappan, of New York, who had previously given her substantial evidence of his appreciation in her work. He sent her money and words of sympathy, and promised to continue to help her as long as she needed it. But the poor woman had not a friend left in the town, and was really in danger of starvation, if not of her life. Her pupils were compelled to leave her, and at length she was forced to do as she was bid, and "clear out of Canterbury."

"SUNSHINE ON THE MORROW."

BY EDITH HELENA COOKE.

My mind was full of troubles wild,
And all my heart was filled with sorrow,
When, by my side, a little child
Pointed toward the sky and smiled,
And said, "The sun will shine to-morrow."

And in the paling golden West
The rosy clouds were slowly fading,
And softly, in her hidden nest,
The mother-bird to watch her breast
Her callow young from ill was shading.

I looked, and all my pain had flown;
Would God, who even takes thought of sparrows,
Give me, unless I heed a stone,
Or never heed my weary moan,
Or pierce my soul with many arrows?

Ah, no! I felt that could not be;
He would not leave my soul in sorrow,
But though the present dark may be,
And filled with fear and misery,
He'll send the sunshine on the morrow.

O, weary souls! however black
Your lives may be, this comfort borrow;
Look ever forward, look not back,
But keep upon the homeward track,
And look for sunshine on the morrow.

A Proposition.

"Be of good courage, and let us play the men for our people and for the cities of our God: and the Lord do that which seemeth him good."

The ADVOCATE has said well, strong things concerning the crying sin and shame of the New Orleans press in its shameful silence relative to the Sam Jones' meeting. He was invited there by the best people of the city. Such preparation for his coming was never made for any other man. Such expectations of good to be done was never experienced by the people. From one end of our country to the other this true lover of his kind has been called. He has not sought notoriety. The spirit of the man has been, "See them tell no man." Even "haters of Christ without a cause" have given him credit for purity of life and zeal according to knowledge in his work. He came to New Orleans, in a large sense, as the guest of the city. He came to do good and harm to no man. His presence and labor was telegraphed almost literally from Maine to California. Papers, by no means friendly to the cause of religion, without hesitation, and as a matter of business policy, printed the news. Their thousands of Christian readers read these messages, and felt glad that they had a secular press that would give them such news. Even admitting, if such were possible, that religion is a farce and fraud, Jones represented and labored for man's best good—his was a fight for the right. And yet the New Orleans press, specially represented by the Times-Democrat and Picayune, dared to ignore his presence and his work. They refused to give to Christian readers any account of his daily service, unless a bare notice, that had the appearance of an advertisement, can be called an account. It is true, the Picayune, the first two or three services, gave a dishonest report, suppressing all his references to the State Lottery. But even "the poor old maid" sickened and died. Many were rejoicing to think that New Orleans had one paper that would be true to the right, though they were wondering why Mr. Jones made no reference to the State's cancer. When the Pic. was silent the cause was known. Is it not a shame that a whole city's press can be so influenced by such a monstrosity as the Louisiana State Lottery? Is it not a wonder, that, even as a matter of policy, the Lottery itself did not pay these clean, sweet sheets an extra hundred dollars per diem, to report Jones in full? The old saying is familiar to all—"Those whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." The most hopeful prophecy of the death, in the near future, of this monster, is this outrage upon justice, decency and right of these papers.

But I did not intend to say this much. Your editorials and extracts from other papers have been clear and strong. Too much can not be said. And yet I, perhaps, have said enough for my share.

I have a proposition to make. These papers ought to be rebuked. They ought to be made to feel the righteous indignation of Christian readers. Such would not read, or allow a child to read, an unclean book representing evil—ministering to the evil in human nature. Such ought not to read a paper claiming to be clean, yet, not only advertising and patronizing a great evil, a confessed evil, a monster evil; but by silence, if no more, refusing to support the right. Negatively and positively, they are against the best good of all. No real Christian man can continue his patronage to such a press. So I think. I believe I have the mind of God. No more can the Christian support such a press than he can support the gambling—rotten gambling scheme of the Louisiana State Lottery. If he supports the one, he supports the other. Supporting either, he supports that which is "evil and only evil and that continually." He perpetuates our State's disgrace. He pays to entail ruin upon hapless thousands.

I began this with the thought of submitting a proposition. It has reached a point, when it has the spirit of a demand—a brotherly Christian demand—that every Christian reader of these papers cease at once to buy or read, or allow them to come into his home or place of business. Such a rebuke to an open wrong is called for. It ought to be given. Surely it will be given. We are not dependent upon an open channel of wrong for the news. We had better be without the news than to take it with a portion of death in it.

Respectfully, JOEL T. DAVES.

China Mission Conference.

Dear Dr. John: Our Conference was held at Suchow, December 11-13, 1889, that date being fixed by telegram from Bishop Wilson. The annual meeting of the representatives of the Woman's Board of Missions was held at the same time and place. There was a full attendance, and the sessions of both bodies were characterized by great harmony and good-will. Notwithstanding an unusual amount of sickness during the latter half of the year, the records of work done showed a great advance on any previous year. This, however, is just what ought to have been reported, seeing that the re-enforcements so liberally granted us a few years ago have now been long enough in the field to make themselves felt. The openings now before our missionaries are so great, encouraging, and urgent that there is no disposition to yield priority to the call from Japan. Nor can I see any need for it, however anxious I may be to see our church come up to the full measure of her opportunity in the latter country.

But to return to the Conference. I am sorry I have not time to write more fully; but my lack will, I suppose, be abundantly supplied by the secretary, who was instructed to send you the Minutes for publication in your Reporter.

In our mission meeting the question of unifying our educational work was referred to a committee appointed to devise a plan whereby so very desirable a result might be accomplished. That committee will, in due time, I think, be able to report successfully. All the brethren are in favor of it; and as the time has fully come for such a step—the advance of China, the extension of our work, and the necessity of reducing the individual element, personal jealousies, rivalries, etc., alike calling for it—there is no doubt in my mind whether as to the feasibility of the scheme or its success. We must organize our long-contemplated Southern Methodist University, and now is the time to do it. Our plans are far in advance of those of any other mission here, and we have nearly all the elements or factors necessary for its successful inauguration. It will need to be chartered, or incorporated, at home, and such other steps taken as may be necessary to constitute it a bona fide part of our great missionary enterprise in China. I will not say more about it now, but hope in due time to see the whole matter laid before the Board and the church for acceptance and adoption. Our plans here contemplate great things for China and the church, and we are now compelled to go forward and attempt great things for God and his cause, or yield our place to others and retire in disgrace and disgust.

The following are the more important of the statistics presented at the Conference: Missionaries of the Parent Board, including wives, 18; and of the Woman's Board, 14; stations, 6; sub-stations, 7; native membership, 312; local preachers, 12; probationers, 156; infants baptized, 8; adults baptized, 53; ordained preachers (native), 4; unordained, 10; colporteurs and helpers, 5. Anglo-Chinese schools, 3; pupils, 205; boys' boarding-school, 1; pupils, 78; girls' boarding-schools, 3; pupils, 63; day-schools, 31; pupils, 579; foreign teachers, 14; native teachers, 45. Sunday-schools, 20; teachers, 72; pupils, 666. Hospitals, 2; patients, 10,127. Missionary collections—paid by foreign missionaries, $908 38; by native Christians, $235 58. Total, $1,143 96.

The delegates elected to the General Conference were: Clerical, A. P. Parker, D. D.; lay, Dzau tsz-zeh (alias C. K. Marshall); alternate, Rev. George Loehr. Dr. Parker left here on the twenty-first instant; Bro. Loehr is already at home. I am very sorry that Mr. Dzau will not go.

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

P. S.—Referring to "An Inquiry," signed "Senex, jr.," in your paper for October, I beg to say that, while I should deprecate what could not but appear to be a shirking of duty on the part of the church—such as an attempt to send missionaries at their own charges in whole or in part would be—yet I can not ignore the fact that such are the advances being made at some of the ports in China, especially at Shanghai, that it would not by any means be impossible for a young man, while getting ready to undertake missionary labor, to support himself, by half, at least, by organizing here an English school, which he could teach say half the day. There are many such schools, both day and evening, and they are greatly on the increase. But few of these, however, have competent teachers; hence the opportunity is all the more favorable. But it would be far better every way for the Board and the church to send men unembarrassed. It was only by schools and teaching that Japan could be entered, and that is true still. But China is open. The missionary can go where he lists. Such is the difference.

Y. J. A.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Dec. 26, 1889.

Dear Dr. John: Our Conference met December 11, and adjourned December 14, at ten o'clock P. M. Your subscriber was elected president, and M. B. Hill, secretary. We had a most harmonious session. Four native preachers were received on trial. The statistics show a gain of fifty members over last year. Over $1,100 was raised in the session for church work, of which amount the native preachers paid $235.

We were glad to welcome Bro. Gray to China. Bro. Burke has been long wanting a colleague at Sung kiang, and Bro. Gray is just the man for the place. But we ought to have had five men instead of one. Where are the other four? One comes and another goes.

After fourteen years' work in this field I am now, with my wife, coming home for needed rest and recuperation. Dr. Mildred M. Philips accompanies us.

The health of our mission is much improved. The scarlet fever seems to have abated, and Bro. Reid, who was seriously, if not dangerously, ill in October and November, is now very much better, and will, we trust, soon be strong again. I inclose a list of the appointments. A. P. PARKER.

Rev. John P. Gaines.

It is a mournful pleasure for me to write the memoir of my cherished friend and brother. I mourn the loss of a warm, personal friend, a brother beloved, and it is a pleasure to put in permanent form a brief record of his virtues, and lay a flower upon his new-made grave.

Bro. Gaines was born in North Carolina, July 7, 1824; was married to Susan Lawrence, January 3, 1850; died January 1, 1890. When yet a child he removed from North Carolina to Tennessee, where his boyhood was spent, and where, amid the busy scenes of Western life and toil, he grew out of boyhood into a robust, well-rounded manhood.

In early manhood we find him in Mississippi. Hither he had come "to spy out the land" and "seek a country," as he was wont to say. The beautiful and fertile prairie region of East Mississippi charmed his eye and determined his course. "Thus far the Lord hath brought me," he would say, "and, by his help, here I'll set my stakes." So he did, and, excepting a short while, he continued to make it his home till its generous bosom opened to receive his precious dust.

Bro. Gaines was a firm and trustful believer in a special providence, and into all the events of his life, even to the minutest secular affairs with which he was connected, he carried this belief as his prop, pillar and support.

He, in common with other men, loved success, and when disappointment threatened to be the issue of his plans there may have been, for the moment, the expression of regret and, maybe, the gesture of impatience; but it was all directed against some human agency engaged in the matter and, to his view, failed to act its part. There was no charge against God, foolishly brought. Like Job, he would have trusted God under the severest test.

In early childhood the Holy Spirit touched consciously his inner life, and at the tender age of eight years he stood at the altar of the church of God, and "ratified and confirmed the promise and vow...contained in the baptismal covenant." His mother dedicating him to God in holy baptism, her dying blessing on the infant-boy, so early left to battle in the world without a mother's love and counsel, and the mother-love committing the child of three years to the covenant-keeping God were, in part, "pictures of holy beauty, with no stains of decay," and, in part, sacred memories which Time's effacing fingers could not obliterate. Bro. Gaines loved to dwell upon these incidents of his child-life, as his tenacious memory, aided by the family tradition, kept them an imperishable possession. A mother's life, for three short years, influenced the child—the man for time and eternity! Such was his testimony.

Our brother was singularly fortunate in his marriage relation, and to the faithful, devoted wife—she who, forgetful of self, was ever ready to make personal sacrifices to advance the interests of home and loved ones—he would refer in the tenderest terms. She confided in him with a true wifely devotion, and, in turn, was trusted by him implicitly. His dying charge to the children—"Take care of your mother"—is in evidence of the strength and steadiness of his devotion to her who shared his joys and sorrows through the years of calm and storm. The fortieth anniversary of the married life of our brother was the day of his burial. No merry peal of marriage bells to-day!—but the toll of the funeral dirge is in unison with hearts that throb with grief.

Bro. Gaines was licensed to preach in 1860; was ordained deacon in 1864 by Bishop Andrew; was ordained elder in 1868 by Bishop Pierce. It was a matter of regret to him that he did not earlier begin the work of the ministry; but by nature shrinking from public notice, and afflicted with a throat trouble which was greatly annoying to him, he, for this cause, postponed a long-felt duty.

It was a high compliment to him that those who watched his every-day life, and were his co-laborers in the Sunday-school and prayer meeting, insisted upon his assuming the work of a higher ministry—the preaching of the gospel. His neighbors knew him and acknowledged his worth.

Bro. Gaines was a clear, forcible preacher. I would characterize his pulpit as expository—after the order of Wesley. Mr. Wesley was his model, and after the Bible, Wesley's works were first and last with him. He loved the class meeting to the last, and I often spoke regretfully of its decay. He was in full sympathy and accord with Methodism both in polity and doctrine.

I found him of great use to me when, as his pastor, the plan of work for us both was laid out. He was as earnest and as enthusiastic in addressing himself to the work as one who sighted victory not afar. Two years of testing work, in his own home field, proved his fitness for the task assigned him. These years of work and success in the church, though costing him protracted absences from home and the neglect of his large planting interests, were full of joy and peace. "The happiest time of my life!" he often said. They were years of growth and grace in largest measures. The memory of them to the writer is as precious ointment poured forth.

The last few months of his life Bro. Gaines was confined to his room and bed. His old trouble bowed the strong man low. Months of suffering, so patiently borne, was the triumph of grace. No murmur escaped his lips; but the shout of victory was a note of praise to his redeeming Lord for the grace to triumph so.

The final hour approaches! It is the night of the new year just ushered in; loved ones, wife and children, gather to catch the last loved accent or sign of lip or hand, and, as the clock struck seven, the spirit "left its tenement of clay," and the sign that was given was only this—"He giveth his beloved sleep." Thus, without a "groan" or "dying strife," the man of God, the widow's friend, passed from mortal scenes to the paradise of God.

Bro. Gaines leaves a wife and five children; three sons—one of whom is quite a promising young preacher, Rev. H. T. Gaines—and two daughters—one of these, Mrs. Ransom, of Nashville, Tenn., was in charge of the department of elocution at Monteagle for a time. These will sorrow for the loss they have sustained, but comforted by the hope of meeting—a reunited home circle—in our Father's house! May there be no missing link up there!

Another Response.

I noticed an article in the ADVOCATE, of January 16, by Bro. Cassity, headed "A Proposition," which voiced my sentiment exactly. I have been thinking a good deal of late, and more especially since our last Annual Conference, of this mission work and the methods of procedure; more directly, however, of the anniversary collections. In taking notes of the various sessions and interests of the Conference, I thought I saw one thing of grave importance, and it was this: that of the amounts raised, by far the most came either directly or indirectly from the already too nearly depleted pockets of the preachers, and very little from others from whom it might have been expected.

Another thought right here: the missionary addresses of Bros. Carter and Sawyer were quite as effective as is usual with those of our connectional men; then why not let them remain in their offices, and the collections be taken by members of the several Conferences, and the money necessary to their traveling expenses go to the regular work?

But to the proposition: Bro. Cassity proposes a special object, and a certain per cent. of each preacher's salary set apart for that specific end. I like that—a definite end in view, an objective point, a certain amount of stock invested for a given length of time. How we will watch it; how inquire after it; how we will pray for it; how every preacher in the Louisiana Conference would feel for, and be interested in, the "Louisiana Preachers' Mission!" Our mission! My mission! Let us do it, brethren!

Of course, this need not prohibit anyone of them from giving as much as they choose to the regular or other collections. Independent of all these, see what the readers of the ADVOCATE have done for Japan. May we not do as much? W. F. HENDERSON.

PLEASANT HILL, LA.

From the Work.

COLUMBIA CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

After bidding farewell to friends on our former work, with wife and children we started through the country, a distance of eighty miles, to Columbia, our new home. Such a trip in this age of railroads is considered quite an undertaking. But we had splendid weather and good roads, and made the trip with very little difficulty. On Saturday night, January 4, we reached our destination. While we found ourselves among strangers, yet we soon found that we were amidst those who were in sympathy with the itinerant and his family. We were cordially received into their midst with many hearty wishes, that our stay among them might be both pleasant and profitable. How nice it would be if the people would always give their ministers a hearty welcome, and thus show that they were desirous to make their pastor's work pleasant as well as profitable! How much more encouraging it would be to the preachers to begin and prosecute their work with all the zeal possible!

We find that the ADVOCATE is pretty generally circulated on this work. This, we think, is one of the main reasons why these people are so careful for the welfare of the preacher and family.

We have made our first round, and find the people generally in the spirit to begin the new year with new zeal. According to the resolution passed at our last Conference, we preached at Columbia yesterday on the subject of missions, and raised for foreign and domestic upwards of $75, over half the amount assessed on the entire work for these purposes.

We are working and praying for prosperity in the true sense.

Yours fraternally,

M. H. MOORE.

ABBEVILLE CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I am just entering upon the second year of my pastorate here. Have been kindly received by the people. The many good things sent to the parsonage during and since Christmas evince a disposition, on the part of the good people, to take care of their preacher.

We have had more sickness in our family than usual during the thirteen months that we have lived in Abbeville. But this should not be attributed to the locality, as we have abundant evidence of its healthfulness.

The Abbeville Normal School, which opened October 7, 1889, is doing splendidly. The number of scholars (which is increasing all the time) is now something over a hundred. The teachers' session will open March 1. Messrs. Hightower and Harmon, who have charge of this school, are members of our church, and Christian gentlemen of high standing, and are proving themselves to be eminently qualified for the work they have in hand. For the future of the school we predict great success.

Our good ladies in Abbeville are working heroically to raise money with which to build a new church. I hope that we may be able to build it soon, as it is much needed.

I hope that two other churches in the charge will be completed before the end of the year.

Wishing the ADVOCATE abundant success, I am, Yours,

J. M. HUGGIN.

NEW ALBANY CIRCUIT.

This is our third year on the New Albany circuit. We have commenced work more earnestly than ever before in life. It may be my last year to work in the vineyard of the Master. Who knows?

We are praying for and expecting a glorious revival this year. So may it be!

We would say that on January 11 we had what some call a "house warming" at this parsonage; but I prefer to call it a "heart warming." It was a very enjoyable occasion. Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists composed the large crowd; men, women and children of various ages and sizes, whose presence were highly appreciated. The social feature of the occasion was truly grand. We were delighted with the presence of Bros. Cooper and Miller, of the Baptist and Presbyterian Churches. Their prayers and speeches were very much appreciated. So far as we were able to judge, the day was profitably spent. As to the things brought to and left at the parsonage, it is needless to write. It is known to the Lord, and he will reward each one. May the Lord compensate these good people for such expressions of kindness and appreciation!

Our new presiding elder, Rev. W. S. Lagrono, has begun work. Hope he is pleased with his work. Our former presiding elder, Rev. J. B. Stone, informs us he is pleased with his new field of labor.

Rev. W. D. Babb, of Ripley and New Albany station, is at work, and seems to be hopeful of a prosperous year. His people at Ripley took advantage of his absence and warmed his house.

DISCUSSIONS IN THEOLOGY: DOCTRINAL AND PRACTICAL. By the Theological Faculty of Vanderbilt University. Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Price, $1.

We suppose this book is merely a sample of what is being done in the theological department of Vanderbilt University towards fitting the young preachers for their great life-work of expounding the Scriptures so that the souls of hearers may be instructed and saved. We like the samples well. In these thirteen essays or lectures are discussed as many subjects in an intelligent and thorough manner and they are all interesting, but some of them are all-important at this time. Materialism, by the venerable Chancellor Garland; The Rationale of Faith, by Prof. Tillett; German Higher Criticism and the Canon of the New Testament, by Prof. Alexander; Future and Eternal Punishment, by Prof. Tillett, are subjects compelling attention from thousands of people. These lectures are timely and fresh and edifying.

A STUDY OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. By George L. Curtiss, D. D. Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, 50 cents.

This is an interesting little book on the formation and analysis of the Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with papers on discipline of offenders, and the spiritual-legal aspects of a call to the ministry.

LESSON VIII.—February 23.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

Luke iv, 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In that he himself hath suffered, he is able to succor them that are tempted.—Heb. ii, 18.

TIME.—A. D. 27, immediately following the last lesson.

PLACE.—The wilderness. The exact locality is unknown.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. iv, 1-11; Mark i, 12, 13.

1. The narrative of the temptation originated in some communication from our Lord's own lips to one of his disciples, his own record of the experience of those forty days. So taken, it will be seen that all is coherent, and in some sense (marvelous as the whole is) natural, throwing light on our Lord's past life, explaining much that followed in his teaching. Each narrator expresses the same facts in slightly different language. Full of the Holy Ghost—No doubt Jesus came from his baptism in a widely changed frame of mind, and with a deep and clear consciousness of his own proper divinity; and accordingly, under the influence of the indwelling Spirit, he retired into the solitudes of the desert for prayer and meditation, and to wait for further instruction in respect to his Messianic mission. From Jordan ... into the wilderness—The scene of the temptation must forever remain unidentified. It was solitary—therefore, more likely on the eastern than the western side of the Jordan.

2. Forty days—The number was connected in the Jewish mind with notions of exclusion, and revelation, and peril. Tempted of the devil—We are brought at the outset of the narrative face to face with the problem of the existence and personality of the power of evil. Here that existence and personality are placed before us in the most distinct language. The name of devil (accuser, or slanderer) appears in the Septuagint version of 1. Chron. xxi, 1: Job i, 6; ii, 1, as the equivalent for the Hebrew, Satan (the adversary). He appears there as a spiritual being of superhuman, but limited power, tempting men to evil, and accusing them before the throne of God when they have yielded to the temptation. In Zech. iii, 1, 2, the same name appears in the Hebrew, connected with a like character, as opposing Joshua, the high-priest. Into conflict with such a being our Lord was now brought. The present participle of the Greek implies that the temptation was continuous throughout the forty days, though it reached its most awful climax at their close.

3. If thou be the Son of God, command this stone—"This stone," as if, in union with glance and gesture, pointing to the lost-like flints of the Jordan desert. Hungry, exhausted, as if life were ebbing away in the terrible loneliness of the desert, the "wild beasts" around him, as if waiting for their victim, what would it avail to have been marked out as the Son of God, the long-expected Christ? With this another thought was blended. If he were the Son of God, did not that name involve a lordship over nature? Could he not satisfy his hunger and sustain his life? Would he not in so exercising the power of which now, for the first time, it may be, he was the conscious possessor, he establishing his status as the Christ in the eyes of others?

4. It is written—The words of all three answers to the tempter came from two chapters of Deuteronomy, one of which (Deut. vi) supplied one of the passages (vi, 4-9) for the phylacteries or frontlets worn by devout Jews. The words which our Lord now uses had, we must believe, been familiar to him from his childhood, and he had read their meaning rightly. "Not by bread only doth man live, but by the word, that is, the will, of God." He can leave his life, and all that belongs to it, in his Father's hands. In so losing his life, if that should be the issue, he is certain that he shall save it. If his Father has given him a work to do, he will enable him to fulfill it.

5. The kingdoms of the world—St. Luke uses the word (literally, the inhabited world) which was commonly used as co-extensive with the Roman Empire.

6. All this power will I give thee—St. Luke's addition. "For that is (has been) delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it," is full of significance. The offer made by the tempter rested on the apparent evidence of the world's history. The rulers of the world, its Herods and its Cæsars, seemed to have attained their eminence by trampling the laws of God under foot, and accepting evil as the lord and master of the world. In part, the claim is allowed by our Lord's language, and that of his apostles. Satan is "the prince of this world," his hosts are "the world's rulers of darkness." In this case the temptation is no longer addressed to the sense of Sonship, but to the love of power. To be a king like other kings, mighty to deliver his people from their oppressors, and achieve the glory which the prophets had predicted for the Christ—this was possible for him if only he would go beyond the self-imposed limits of accepting whatsoever his Father ordered for him.

7. Wilt worship me—The word "worship" properly expresses, as apparently throughout the New Testament, the homage offered to a king rather than the adoration due to God.

8. Get thee behind me, Satan—There came to the Son of man the old command, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God," as an oracle from heaven, and this, rather than an attempt to refute the claim of sovereignty, was that on which he took his stand. Even though they can not solve the problem, the true wisdom of men who follow in the footsteps of Christ is to recognize that their allegiance is due to God, and to him only. The use of the formula here, for the first time in the conflict, is significant as implying that in the previous temptation evil had presented itself in disguise, making sins of distrust appear as acts of faith, while now it showed itself in its naked and absolute antagonism to the divine will.

9. He brought him to Jerusalem—As St. Paul said of like spiritual experiences of his own (II. Cor. xii, 2) so we must say of this, Whether it was in the body or out of the body we know not, God knoweth. A pinnacle of the temple—Rather, the battlement. Some well-known pinnacle, either that of the Royal Portico, which looked down from a dizzy height into the valley of the Kidron, or the Eastern Portico, from which tradition says that St. James was afterward hurled. Cast thyself down—Now a new thought is brought before him. Shall he prove the attestation that he was the beloved Son by throwing himself headlong down? Was there not a seeming warrant for such a trial, the crucial experiment of Sonship? Had not the psalmist declared of the chosen One of God that his angels should bear him up? Psa. xci, 11, 12.

10. For it is written—The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose. In this case, as before, the temptation starts from the attestation of the character of Jesus as the Son of God. With this there is now joined an appeal to familiar and sacred words, and the subtlety of the tempter lay in his perversion of their true meaning. Here, too, the words throw light on the previous spiritual life of the Son of man. As in all analogous temptations (and the history would have but little significance or interest for us if it were not analogous to many human experiences) the words which were presented to the soul, with their true meaning obscured and perverted, must have been precisely those that had before been most precious. We think of him as having fed on those words, found in them the stay and comfort of his life, without ever dreaming of putting them to the test by devices of his own imagining. The reality of each temptation can not be too strongly insisted upon.

12. It is said—As the words stand in Deut. vi, 16, their general meaning is specialized by an historical reference. "Ye shall not tempt the Lord your God, as ye tempted him in Massah." In the history thus referred to the sin of the people had been that they questioned the presence of God with them until they saw a supernatural proof of it. They asked, "Is Jehovah among us, or not?" (Exod. xvii, 7), and that question sprung from unbelief. To have demanded a like proof of his Father's care now would have identified the Son of man with a like spirit of distrust, and the history of that temptation was, therefore, a sufficient answer to this. We can not claim miracles if we court temptations. It is remarkable that the three quotations with which our Lord met the tempter are all taken from the sixth and eighth chapters of Deuteronomy.

13. When the devil had ended all the temptation—Better, had completed every kind of temptation. The three trials were each typical in character, and taken together they made up the cycle of those to which our Lord's human nature was then open.

The Saloon Is Labor's Worst Enemy.

George F. Parsons, in the Atlantic Monthly, says:

"While labor is throwing away an enormous sum annually, with what show of consistency can it lament its condition? One year's remission of that destructive self-indulgence would solve every labor problem extant. At present the workingman can hardly make both ends meet; is it not because he insists on creating capitalists out of the saloon-keepers? The saloon is the most hideous abuse of the day, but where would it be if the workingmen withdrew their support from it? It keeps them poor, it stifles progress, it brutalizes husbands and fathers, breaks women's hearts, puts rags on the workman's back, disease in his body, and shame and despair in his heart. Yet when labor is most disturbed, when the demand for advanced wages is loudest, when strikes are most frequent, when hunger and misery are most rife in the homes of the poor, the saloon flourishes still. There may be no brandy at home, but there is always beer and whiskey at the bar, and the men who consider themselves the victims of circumstance or the "thralls" of capital, squander their earnings in those dens. Can there be a serious labor question while this state of things continues? Can workingmen talk gravely of their wrongs while it is plain to all the world that if they only saved the capital they earn, they would be all right."

WORKINGMEN, READ.—Notice is hereby given that if you will come to my store three times a day during the next year and purchase a drink of whisky each time, paying me ten cents a drink, at the end of the year I will donate, for the benefit of your family:

5 barrels of my best flour.
100 pounds fine granulated sugar.
100 pounds rice.
10 pounds coffee.
10 gallons syrup.
50 yards calico.
3 pairs shoes.
1 $10.50 cloak for your wife.

And then I will have $20 left to pay for the liquor you drank

J. NICKEL.

Any other grocer can afford to do the same thing.—Exchange.

THE BEER DRINKER.—In appearance the beer drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the body or mind will commonly provoke acute diseases, ending fatally. Compared with other inebriates whose use different kinds of alcohol, he is more incurable and more generally diseased. It is our observation that beer drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of ruffians in our large cities are beer drinkers. Intellectually, a stupor amounting almost to paralysis, arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger, senseless and brutal.—Scientific American.

THE ABSTAINER'S CREED.—I believe that the demon of strong drink is the gigantic foe of God and man; that it ruins man alike for happiness on earth and blessedness in heaven; and that two-thirds of all the pauperism, crime, and woe of earth may be traced to him in his progeny; that he was conceived of Satan, born of the depraved appetites of men, and inflicts only suffering upon his victim, that under his rule reason is crucified, love dies, and conscience is buried; that man descends into a hell even upon earth, and has no resurrection for his manhood nor redemption for his enslaved soul but in the power of God; that no drunkard can enter into the kingdom of God or abide his presence who shall come to judge the living and the dead.

I believe in the saving and keeping power of the Holy Ghost; that the whole church should unite to assault and overthrow this awful traffic in strong drink, and deliver humanity from the curse of drink habit; that the only salvation for humanity is an uncompromising total abstinence for the individual, progressive prohibition for the community, and, above all, the embrace of the gospel of Christ, who alone can redeem body and soul from the slavery of sin and thrill us with the power of life everlasting!—The Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D.

According to Judge Guthrie's findings, the school rises upon the ashes of the saloon. Last week in charging the grand jury impaneled at Topeka to make special inquiry as to the enforcement of the prohibitory law, he said: "For nearly five years there has not been a saloon or any place where intoxicating liquors were openly sold or given away in this county. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been invested here in this city by strangers on the conviction that public sentiment favored an honest, fair enforcement of the law prohibiting the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, and it is believed that these conditions have induced thousands of families to change their homes from sister States to this city and State, so that they might, with their children, escape the evil effects of the saloon. And these conditions and environments are inducing the friends and patrons of learning to establish, with magnificent endowments, colleges and schools in this and other cities of the State, and parents are sending their children from distant States to these colleges to be educated, with the expectation and hope that their children may enjoy the benefits of society, unpolluted with the baneful saloon."—Union Signal.

Dr. Carradine will preach next Sunday morning, in Caroudelet Street Methodist Church, another sermon on the Louisiana State Lottery. We hope our preachers all over Mississippi and Louisiana will follow Dr. Carradine's example.

Another Gospel.

St. Paul was very emphatic and vigorous in his denunciations of a spurious gospel. He believed in an entire gospel. He wrote as if he thought its efficiency was conditioned upon its wholeness. He spoke as if he could not see how divine wisdom would inaugurate a plan of salvation if every detail of the plan was not necessary to its success. In Paul's view nothing must be left out—not the least iota in the statement of fact or precept or doctrine. The whole gospel must be there, or it is "another gospel," and, therefore, spurious and false.

There must be nothing left out. A half gospel is "another gospel," and not to be trusted in. A half truth may be as deceptive as a whole lie. A half gospel may be preached to the eternal condemnation of those who hear it. We believe it takes the whole gospel to save anybody, and, therefore, in order to display its saving efficacy it must be preached in its wholeness. Preachers must learn what the gospel is, and then faithfully proclaim it in its entirety. It is amazing to think how much a little error can mar the beauty and detract from the wholeness and weaken the power of the gospel and render its proclamation a mere voice without meaning. In this fact lies the imminent peril in the statement of truth. We can not conceive of the Spirit of Truth giving his support to error in any form. We can not conceive of him withholding his support from the proclamations of his own truth. And somewhere, right along here, we might be able to find the reason that so much preaching accomplishes nothing. There may be an over-statement or an understatement of truth, and the Spirit of Truth can endorse and support neither. Orthodox words and phrases do not always convey orthodox doctrines. A grave error may be concealed in those words and phrases. Error may be so covered over and surrounded by orthodox statements that it will pass current "even with the elect."

"Taking from" the gospel changes its character completely. This is, to-day, a favorite form in which the "other gospel," of which Paul wrote, manifests itself. The whole gospel is not declared. Only enough is preached to make it look like the gospel. Strange to say, this sort of preaching, when weighed in the proper balances, is found wanting in the chief fact and doctrine. The very heart of gospel truth is found lacking. The poetry and pathos of martyrdom, with which many writers and preachers invest the death of Christ, though a popular gospel in many quarters, being made beautiful by the imagination and the power of rhetoric, is a gospel without any heart. That gospel which does not make the straightforward statement that the death of Christ meant vicarious satisfaction for human guilt is "another gospel" and must be condemned as spurious. Any preaching that leaves out Christ's atonement for man's sins, is like a coin from the middle of which the gold has been extracted, and its place supplied with lead. It may look well, but it can't have the right ring.

"Another gospel", which is popular in these days, and preached "with great and alluring eloquence," is the doctrine that "all men are by nature the sons of God." Hundreds of pulpits are preaching such a gospel to-day, and preaching it to the delight of thousands of deluded souls. In our humble view, this is simply the other half of the gospel without atonement. It is its necessary complement. Put the two together in their complementary relations, and you have a gospel from which Christ is eliminated, and which has reduced redemption to nothing, and with which the Holy Spirit will have nothing to do. The gospel that all men are by "nature the sons of God," is not only absurd in itself, but is a flat contradiction of the holy Scriptures. "We are, by nature, the children of wrath," is the divine word from the pen of inspiration. There is but one way to become the sons of God, and that is, not by nature, but by receiving Jesus Christ. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name, which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God." Sonship is predicated alone upon the new birth, and the new birth is predicated upon a corrupt nature, and the corrupt nature is the reason for an atonement. Thus the very possibility of sonship, which is preached by this new gospel, is grounded upon the atonement which it denies. The absurdity of such a gospel being blest by the approving presence of the Holy Spirit is manifest. "God can not deny himself."

St. Paul felt there was great dishonor to the Author of the gospel and great harm to the hearers in that sort of preaching, hence he wrote the solemn warning: "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." As preachers, let us learn the whole gospel and, having learned it, "preach it from the house-tops."

Taking Lessons.

The editor of Zion's Herald, Boston, Dr. Charles Parkhurst, is traveling in the South for the express purpose of "studying the problem." He took his first lesson in Washington City, the capital of the republic. It was evidently a different lesson from the one expected. We imagine the good Doctor held his breath as the real state of the problem in the capital was forced upon his mind. He says:

We lived here one winter seven years ago. There is now more prejudice against the negro as such than there was at that time. The population of Washington is now from 215,000 to 225,000 people. There are 75,000 colored people. As a whole, they are in a destitute and wretched condition. There is not a colored man in the United States Senate. There is one colored man in the House of Representatives of over three hundred members. There is not a colored man in the membership of the Metropolitan Church. There is one in the Foundry Church. The negro is not wanted, and would not be tolerated if he should offer himself for membership in any of the white churches of this city. A barrier of prejudice deep as the nether world divides the white here from the black.

The special difficulties here lie in the line of depriving the negro of honest and successful achievement. An un-christian and accursed prejudice shuts him out from competition with the white man. The white man will use him as a menial, and nothing more. The young men and women who come from the schools can expect nothing better; the color of their skin still ostracizes them. No merchant will employ them as clerks. The artisan will drop trowel and plane if a negro essays to work at his side. The white man will not teach him a trade. They are excluded from membership in trades unions and labor fraternities. They are not welcome as guests at hotels and first-class restaurants. The colored man can not hire a house in a respectable part of the city. Real estate brokers will not sell to a negro in any reputable portion of the city if they know he is to be the occupant.

What a revelation Lesson No. 1 must have been to the good Doctor! One colored man in Congress and one in the Methodist Church in Washington City, and if any more should offer themselves for membership in the white churches, they would not be tolerated. Verily, "the mighty have fallen" far below their protestations of love and sympathy for the colored brother, as Dr. Parkhurst begins to find out before he was twenty-four hours from Boston. Seventy-five thousand people, colored people, too, utterly ignored, shunned, driven out of all legitimate business, "excluded from membership in trades unions and labor fraternities," and pushed back upon the disreputable portions of the city to find residences, and that in the Republican city of Washington, the capital of the nation, where governmental influence is supreme, and where the "lovers of our brother in black" spout forth their eloquence in denunciation of Southern outrages, and throw sand in the eyes of the poor duped blacks—why, it was enough to make Dr. Parkhurst "sigh a sigh that was a sigh." The natural inference with him is this: If such a state of things exists at the seat of government, where the Republican party has been dominant for so many years, the further South you go the worse it will be. But if Dr. Parkhurst is a true man and sincere, and keeps his eyes open and don't suffer his prejudiced fancy to run away with his judgment, we predict that he will learn two things by his trip South. 1. He will learn that the further the negro gets away from the influence of the genuine Yankee the better it is for the negro. 2. If the good Doctor studies with impartial mind the doings of his own church in the South, and her methods of doing her work, he will see that she is responsible for a good deal of the difficulty that invests the race problem, and that she has kept alive antagonisms that but for her baneful influence would have died long ago.

The Monster Invited West.

Last Thursday the Picayune had a dispatch, with flaming head-lines, to the effect, that the Louisiana Monstrosity, the Lottery, was likely to be invited to take up its abode in Bismarck, North Dakota. The dispatch stated that the Senate Committee on State Affairs in the North Dakota Legislature had unanimously reported a bill to "transfer bodily to North Dakota the Louisiana Lottery Company." The pretext under which the scheme is to be accomplished is the embarrassed condition of the State finances of that new State.

It is said that the governor will veto the bill; but the combination is working to make sure of the necessary two-thirds' vote with which to pass it over his veto. It is said that they have the requisite number in the House. An after dispatch stated that the bill had passed the Senate by a vote of 18 to 12. Governor Miller, it is said, is beyond the reach of money, and opposes the bill with all his power. About one-half of the State officers have been drawn to the support of the bill. One significant part of the dispatch reads as follows:

Money is being used to an unprecedented degree, and those who can not be reached in this way are threatened, flattered, or cajoled as occasion requires. All legislation is blocked and no man can get a measure of importance through unless he comes into the combine and agrees to support it. Many votes have been secured in this way.

We do not know whether this is a real transaction or a blind to draw the minds of our own people away from the real designs of this company. We know that the people of Louisiana are beginning to think and talk about this public robber as they have never thought and talked before, and it may be this is a scheme to quiet the public sentiment which is rising in such determined opposition against it. We warn our people not to be caught in this way. We say, Keep your eyes open and your pens a-going continually against this biggest piece of wickedness the devil ever invented. The press is not all bought up, and that part of it which is yet free may be wheeled into line of battle. The pulpits, always strong in opposition to wickedness, may be converted into a most terrific enginery of destruction. Then let every man, every woman, who has any regard for righteousness and any pity for the poor dupes of the Lottery, cry aloud and spare not.

If the Legislature of North Dakota really contemplates giving the Louisiana Lottery a home in that State, their folly is to be pitied, and their poor laboring people deserve the deepest commiseration of the country. Meantime let everybody here watch and work and pray and "keep his powder dry."

Since the above was put in type, a dispatch from Bismarck states that the North Dakota Senate passed a resolution calling for an investigation of the charges of bribery on the Lottery Bill. The resolution passed unanimously, whereupon the House of Representatives moved to indefinitely postpone the bill! The dispatch further stated that detectives were present in the Legislature, and that their presence created quite a stir. So the whole matter has been indefinitely postponed; but it is to be hoped that the investigation of the charges of bribery will be prosecuted with vigor.

Notes from Yazoo City.

We have had our full share of la grippe in the Queen City of the Delta for the past six weeks; but it has not been of a serious character, except in very few cases. Dr. R. Abbey was quite ill for several weeks, but he is about well again. He has wonderful recuperative powers. His mind seems as clear and vigorous as ever. He has no thought of growing old. Though the almond flourishes, the full-blown rose still blushes beneath its crown. The frosts of winter and the dews of summer sparkle together on his sunny brow.

The burning of the Citizen's Warehouse, on December 28, with six thousand bales of cotton, created quite a stir in commercial circles for awhile. But, after a good deal of figuring and testifying and a very slight show of bristles, here and there, the matter was amicably adjusted by the insurance companies paying up the losses and advising more economy in the use of fireworks another Christmas.

Business has been good, with an extremely mild and inexpensive winter. Prosperity smiles upon our people. Prohibition is on its fourth year in this county, and a happier and more harmonious people are not to be found in our Sunny Southland. Labor is plentiful, peaceable, industrious and happy.

The work on our new church is progressing well. An Episcopal brother said of it the other day: "It is beginning to look quite churchly." All look forward to its completion with pleasure, as another splendid monument of the Christian liberality of a united people. All of the pastors and churches in the city are working in beautiful harmony, and all are growing—growing in piety and Christian fellowship and liberality, as well as numbers. Church going is on the increase, and we have soon to see the day when no man, claiming respectability, will be willing to have it known that he is not a regular attendant on the stated worship of some church.

Our stewards have adopted the envelope system of weekly payments this year, combining the local and district stewards assessments. It is working splendidly. The pastor is happy in being able to carry out Paul's injunction: "Owe no man anything but to love one another." We are having frequent additions to the church, with a very hopeful outlook for a prosperous year. Bros. Lewis, Lovett, Powell, Reagan, Forsyth and Drake are all at their posts, doing faithful work for the Master, and are all well received in their respective charges.

R. S. Woodward.

An Irritated Bishop.

Bishop Mallalieu, of the Northern Methodist Church in this city, brings a grave charge, in a circular letter to the Northern Advocates, against members of his church who come South to reside. He says "hundreds" have come South with their church letters and have put them in with other churches than their own. He calls this "disloyalty," and says it is done in "the hope of securing either social or business advantages." He accuses such of selling "their birthright for a paltry price." He says, "Some of our preachers in the North have been known to recommend persons of their charges leaving the North to hand in their letters to some other church than their own." He says this is the result of "ignorance" or "weak sentimentality." The good Bishop seems really distressed that "hundreds" of his people are so naughty. The history of the world has taught two things, which our Northern friends seem not to have learned. 1. The church can't control social relations. 2. She can't control business relations. When they learn these two facts they will learn that a man's birthright is to belong to what church he pleases, and that they can not compel men to enter upon even church relations that are distasteful to them. This trying to make men do so is nothing but ecclesiastical tyranny, and the Northern Methodist Church is finding out that "hundreds" won't submit to it. As to the "disloyalty" of these "hundreds," spoken of by Bishop Mallalieu, no doubt they are well convinced that "disloyalty" to a system, which would force them into relations that are distasteful, is not necessarily "disloyalty" to Christ. Calling these people ugly names and attributing to them mercenary motives will not cure the evil, but it shows plainly that the Bishop is somewhat piqued.

The Pulpit and the Lottery.

We call the especial attention of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi to the article on the first page entitled, "The Pulpit and the Lottery." It is from the pen of Dr. Mallard, of the Presbyterian Church in this city, a man who has the courage of his convictions and dares to speak out. Brethren, lay this matter in earnest prayer before God, and let your pulpits everywhere ring with denunciations of this monster iniquity. Organize your people all over the land into bands of determined soldiers; enlist them for the whole campaign; use your pens in the columns of your local papers; hold anti-lottery meetings everywhere; arouse the people by showing them the peril overhanging the future. If the church, led by the preachers, does not come up to "the help of the Lord" in this matter, then the "curse of Meroz" will rest upon us! To avert such a calamity, stir the people, awake the slumbering, fire the lukewarm, arouse the apathetic, enlighten the ignorant, alarm the indifferent, encourage the faithful few. Let the slogan of the church—all the churches—reverberate among all the hills and over all the valleys, "Down with the Lottery!"

Notes.

Dr. R. S. Storrs says of Methodism:

The Methodist Church interprets fire New Testament into fervor, into power, into enthusiasm. I love them (Methodists) for this fact, that what a Methodist believes—he believes with all his might; and what he believes with all his might he is able to speak with all his voice.

The H. W. Grady Memorial Volume, containing the life, writings and speeches of the late Mr. Grady, is in process of preparation by Cassell & Co., New York. The life of Mr. Grady is written by Joel Chandler Harris; the introduction by Henry W. Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal. The proceeds of the sale of the book, after expenses are paid, will go to Mr. Grady's family.

Mr. Gladstone's last deliverance:

Talk about questions of the day—there is but one question, and that is the gospel. It can and will correct everything needing correction. All men at the head of great movements are Christian men. During the many years I was in the Cabinet, I was brought into association with sixty master minds, and all but five of them were Christians. My only hope for the world is in bringing the human mind into contact with divine revelation.

According to the New York Sun, figuring at the results of the census this year, the population of the country will be 64,761,500 as against 50,155,783 in 1880. The basis of representation in Congress will necessarily be changed. The South will gain 17 electors; the West, 25; the Middle States, 3; the Pacific States, 4; while New England will lose 1. The present population of the Southern States is put down at 19,489,150 against 14,638,936 in 1880.

Ought not a Christian man so to conduct his business that everybody will see and acknowledge him to be a spiritual man? Ought not a Christian woman so to order the affairs of her household that everyone will behold in her a spiritual woman? It won't do to say "religion is religion," and "business is business." The religion that don't make itself known and felt in the affairs of every-day life will not make itself known and felt in the day of final reckoning!

In regard to cheap religious literature Dr. McCabe, one of the secretaries of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says:

Second, this is the age of cheap printing. If the church does not supply it, Satan will. The dime novel can be had anywhere. Your child may be ruined in an hour by one of them. The church must enter this field. Our Sabbath-school papers are full of stories about bears and dogs, lions, tigers, reindeers—purely secular reading which ought to be reserved for week days; not fitted for the Sabbath at all.

Whatever may be thought of the "goings-on" of the Salvation Army, they seem to be showing something of the practice of Christianity. Of them an exchange says:

The Salvation Army is said to have made great progress in the erection of "shelters" in the poorer parts of London. Six shelters have now been fitted up, supplying for the destitute 776 beds and 10,000 to 12,000 daily meals. Mr. Booth says that the annual normal income of the army now amounts—"for certain"—to over £15,000. In London they have 1,500 workers. In Continental Europe they have 237 "corps" and 754 "officers."

Let us have a care that we get the Scripture into our hearts. A preacher has said: "It is well to have Scripture stored in the memory, better to have it in the understanding, but best of all to have it in the heart." The Psalmist said, "Thy word have I hid in my heart." There is in the heart a faculty for the reception of Scripture, and it only does good as it is received there. The devil knows as much Scripture as any man living, but it does not do him any good because he has no heart-faculty for its reception. He knows, but does not receive. Beware!

Rev. J. W. McLaurin, in his report as published in the January number of the Bible Society Record, has this to say:

The third Sunday was spent with the Felicity Street congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, New Orleans, at which I presented the Bible cause, and secured therefor $100, in good subscriptions. The service was a most delightful one. If all the congregations and pastors in my district would only follow the example of this noble congregation and its excellent pastor, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, looking after the Bible cause, therein would be a great pleasure. This congregation contributed nearly $100 to the Bible cause last year.

Personal and Otherwise.

From our exchanges we learn that la grippe is no respector of persons. It lays its hand upon the lofty and the low, and their bones crack (seemingly) alike. What is this la grippe? Is this the result of the "seventh angel pouring out his vial of wrath into the air"?

Some of our exchanges are giving us credit for raising $10,000 to send a missionary to Japan. Oh, no; not so much, brethren; only the modest little sum of $1,016. Don't credit us with what we don't do and never expect to do. Ten thousand dollars, indeed! W-h-e-w!

Our brethren of the Northern Methodist Church are preparing to organize a big college in Kansas City! Why don't some of our rich Louisiana Methodists give Centenary College a big start? They can.

Rev. Dr Abbey has been sick for quite a while since Conference, but we are glad to state that this venerable minister is now slowly recovering.

A young sister writes from Crystal Springs, Miss.: "I look forward to the weekly visits of the ADVOCATE as to that of a dear Christian friend from whose visit I expect spiritual help." Our constant prayer is that the paper may be such a help to all its readers.

We thank the secretary for a copy of the Minutes of the Fiftieth Session of the Texas Conference, held at Lagrange, Texas, December 4, 1889.

Rev. Jesse Boring, of the North Georgia Conference, died recently, in his eighty-third year. He was a great preacher in his early days.

The Hon. Samuel J. Randall, for a long time a leader in the National House of Representatives, has united with the Presbyterian Church.

One of our exchanges:

Churches ought to be doing something more than holding their own, paying their bills, and opening their doors two or three times a week to a congregation of eminent saints and well-dressed sinners.

The Moravians number 98,227, and yet we are told that they have sent out, during the century, twenty-five thousand missionaries, and three hundred thousand dollars yearly. They have nine mission ships.—Exchange.

If the above is true, then we know about 1,200,000 Southern Methodists that ought to pray for grace to be ashamed of themselves.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has sent, in all, 174 missionaries, male and female, to China. So says Gospel in All Lands.

Quite a number of papers North and South and Canada have published Wesley's Letter to Maxfield since we resurrected it and started it out again. We are confident that its publication has done good.

Rev. Stephen Noland, one of the editors of the Central Methodist, died January 27. His co-editor, Rev. Z. Meek, says of him:

We loved him most tenderly, not only because of his lovable disposition, but of his high Christian character and earnest devotion to what he believed to be right.

Rev. Sam Jones' stay in New Orleans was greatly abbreviated. This was occasioned by his violent and unvarnished attacks upon the ladies of that city, which were promptly resented and denounced.—Shreveport Times.

The above is an "unvarnished" misrepresentation from beginning to end. His stay was not abbreviated, he made no attacks upon the ladies, and he was not denounced. The truth about a public man is a very hard thing for some people to get at.

We call attention to the advertisement of the forthcoming "Life of Jefferson Davis," written by Mrs. Davis, and to be published soon by Belford Company, New York. This will, doubtless, be an interesting review of the life and work of the great southerner.

The secretaries of our Conferences will take notice that in these "weak, piping times of peace" it is not "good form" to say, "Minutes." That venerable word, hoary with sainted memories, must now be written and printed, "Conference Annual."

We have received the first number of The Round Table, a new paper started in Nashville under the editorship of Dr. D. C. Kelley. This is simply a specimen copy sent out as the avant courier of the regular numbers, which will begin about March 1. There is quite a profusion of statements indicating what The Round Table will be, and many promises which it expects to fulfill in the course of its life. We welcome it to our sanctum, and trust that it may, indeed, "be broadly and distinctly Christian."

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, for thirty years pastor of Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., has announced his purpose to resign his pastorate on the first of April. The membership of his church has increased from 140 to 2,330, the third largest Presbyterian congregation in the United States. Dr. Cuyler is a charming newspaper writer, a great temperance advocate, being now president of the National Temperance Society, and is said to be one of the finest conversationalists in the world.

A Happy Pastor and Scribe.

This private note from our friend, "Gilderoy," shows that he has "struck luck." We congratulate him on his good fortune in having the opportunity to "learn new tricks," but must protest, in the name of our printers, that his manuscript is about the best that comes to our office. We must warn him, however, against the fascinations of the type-writer.

MR. EDITOR: One week ago today my eldest son sent me a present of a beautiful fifty-dollar type-writer, the first one I ever had my fingers on, in a few weeks I will write all the articles I send you on it. Then your printers will not have to bother with my miserable chirography, as they now do. I write on this machine now about as fast as with my pen. Pretty good, you see, for a fifty-one-year old pupil with only one week's practice. Say what you may, but an old dog can learn new tricks when he sets his head on it. If I live and keep my health, I mean to be an expert on this thing by the end of this year.

"If you want your people to have a full and correct account of the doings of the General Conference that is soon to meet, press upon them the fact that our paper will give the best account to them that they can get. Use this point in your canvass for the paper.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. H. Callaway, writing from Eden, La., says: "We are having a good time on Centerville circuit. Have been here three weeks, preached 11 times, made 34 pastoral visits, read 7 books through, and, best of all, we have just closed a good revival meeting. It lasted from Saturday night until Wednesday night. About 12 or 14 sinners made a start Sunday night. The church was aflame the night we closed. This meeting was at Master's Chapel, where they have a live prayer meeting. I find it an easy matter to have a revival where the prayer meeting is kept up. Thank God for such a prayer meeting as we have here! The young people—boys and girls—pray with great power and liberty. 'Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you.' (Acts i, 8.) This Scripture was fulfilled; the power came. Thank God!"

—Rev. C. T. Munholland writes from West Monroe, La.: "Our first Quarterly Conference is over; all the stewards present except one. On Sunday, at eleven o'clock, our new church at this place (West Monroe) was set apart for the services of God, after an appropriate sermon by the presiding elder, Rev. J. D. Harper, from Psalms cxlv, 13. There was a good feeling in the congregation, the Lord being present, as when the first Temple was erected by Solomon. We now have a nice church at this place, erected by a great effort of the people, assisted by some few friends abroad, to whom we tender our thanks for their generous assistance. The acoustic properties of the house are hard to surpass. At the next Annual Conference we expect you to test it."

—Rev. J. T. Reames writes from Indian Village: "We reached our field of labor on Saturday before the second Sunday in January. I preached my first sermon here (on this work) at Indian Village Church, from Romans i, 15, 16. The congregation numbered about one hundred. I never met kinder people than those with whom I have become acquainted here. There was no parsonage to be occupied, but the brethren soon found a home for their preacher. They do not promise that we will fare 'sumptuously every day,' but adopt the language of Peter, 'Such as I have, give I unto thee.' May God wonderfully bless both people and pastor this year and crown our labors with abundant success."

—Rev. N. J. Roberts reports from Utica Charge as follows: "On our arrival here we met with a very warm reception from this people. We were met at the depot by brethren who took us to the parsonage—a comfortable home—and since we have been kindly remembered by their frequent donations. Who would not love to live among such friends? God bless the kind, good people of Utica! Now, our greatest desire and sincere prayer to God is, that we may be instrumental in the hands of a merciful Father of accomplishing much good here in winning souls to Christ. Pray for us."

—Rev. R. M. Blocker, writing from Rayne, La., says: "My work is moving off well. Prayer meeting, Sunday-schools and missionary societies good, and we are better organized for financiering than last year. Subscription to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is weekly enlarging, and the ADVOCATE pleases and edifies all its readers. Every steward on my work takes it. But, oh, how we need a sweeping revival!"

—Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt writes from Centenary College: "Your editorial on college endowment in this week's ADVOCATE has the ring of a clarion. I hope its sound has gone out through all Mississippi and Louisiana, and will ere long return in echoes of endowment notes, multitudinous and strong. Thank you! Do so again!"

—Rev. W. J. Porter writes from Farmerville, La.: "I have reached and entered into my new field of labor. Have made the round at one hundred and fifty miles, preached twelve times, baptized and received one into the church, married two couples, visited and prayed with thirty-two families, and raised, in cash and subscription, two hundred and sixty-five dollars towards building a parsonage. And we hope ere this year shall close to be freed from task and tax of securing the pastor's abode on this circuit."

—Rev. S. J. Davies reports from Mooringsport, La.: "My work is opening finely here. We are practically building a parsonage at this place, as the present one is scarcely habitable. Am hindered no little in my work by bad weather and worse roads."

A Preacher Wanted.

MR. EDITOR: Please let me ask through the ADVOCATE for a preacher to assist me with my large work in Acadia parish, La. Last year the ADVOCATE kindly announced my call, and the Lord sent me Bro. Schuhle. But I have no help this year, and I greatly need it. None but a single man and his soul on fire with the Holy Ghost can meet the demand.

Yours in Christ,

R. M. BLOCKER.

Archdeacon Farrar:

The real question to ask about any form of religious belief is, Does it kindle the fire of love? Does it make the life stronger, sweeter, purer, nobler? Does it run through the whole society like a cleansing flame, burning up all that is mean, and base, and selfish, and impure? If it stands this test it is no heresy; there is but one church of the true children of God, and unfaithfulness is the only infidelity.

"It is not the ballot, but the intelligence to use it well, that secures good government."—Harper's Weekly.

Precisely so. That is exactly what the Southern people have been saying for the last twenty-five years!

THE TEN FIGURES.

We are the jolly figures ten
That puzzle the brains of little men,
And scatter their wits
Around in bits
Until they're ready to vow "Old Nick"
First invented arithmetic.

Our leader bold, so tall and prim,
Is Figure One; you all know him.
While just behind
Him you will find
The honest face of Figure Two,
His bangs done up in a "curlicue."

This ox-yoke form you'll all agree
Belongs to none but Figure Three.
Who just precedes,
And therefore leads
Another mathematic bore—
Ugly, bunglesacked Figure Four.

Shaped like a reaper, in full view,
The Figure Five now stares at you;
And well you know
Next in the row,
With body big, and crooked neck,
The Figure Six you must expect.

This lanky form, with lengthy snout,
Is Figure Seven, without doubt
While at his heels,
Like tangled eels,
There passes by, with waddling gait,
Old, familiar Figure Eight.

Upon one leg, with quite a curve,
Stands Figure Nine, you will observe,
And then rolls past
The least and last—
For Figure Naught would helpless lie
Without our aid and sympathy.

The schoolboy who, with visage grum,
Hunts for the answer to his sum,
Vows we all cheat
And use deceit,
Because he's muddled in his mind,
And can't our combination find.

But if he'll keep quite calm and cool,
And study each example's rule,
He'll testify
That we won't lie;
Is every schoolboy's record clear
On this one point? Not all, we fear.

—Golden Days.

An American Girl.

About two years before his death, Charles Sumner was ordered abroad by his physician. On the steamer in which he sailed was a mother with her three children, whom she was taking to Europe to be educated. It happened that the only girl of the party was seated near Mr. Sumner at the table, and could hear much of his conversation. In a short time she became fascinated with the rare personality that for so many years had inspired a great political party.

She listened eagerly to every word, but soon became greatly mortified because she could not understand much of what he said. She had never studied the science of government; she knew nothing of European politics, and little of American history.

For the first time in her life, she realized that an interesting, helpful science had been neglected in her education. She determined to supply the omission for herself, and on reaching England began the study of American politics. The functions of the different parts of a government, legislative, judicial and executive, the duties of an American citizen, political parties, who vote and why, town-meetings, education, taxes, labor and capital, strikes, banks, commerce, diversities of industries—all these she soon found to be factors in a fascinating problem. Her growing enthusiasm amused her friends, especially her brothers. What could he the use of a girl troubling her head about such things? they asked. The answer came in a manner quite unexpected.

One evening during their continued residence in England, the family was invited to a small reception given to John Bright, then at the zenith of his fame. Shortly after their entrance into the drawing room, the conversation turned to American politics, in which Mr. Bright manifested great interest. A convention was at that time in session in a Western city, and much anxiety was expressed about the nomination which it was likely to make.

Turning to an American gentleman, Mr. Bright made some inquiry as to the rules governing the formation of such an assembly. The person addressed, evidently greatly chagrined at his ignorance, was obliged to answer that he did not know. Appeals to three other guests met with the same response. Then, to the surprise of every one, a modest little American girl advanced timidly to Mr. Bright, and gave him the desired information.

Mr. Bright was delighted. He seated himself at the girl's side, and talked with her for the entire evening, and when taking leave of her, said to her mother:

"You Americans have, indeed, made wonderful advances in education. The future of a country is secure when the young men and women alike are trained to intelligent understanding of the laws which govern them. The next generation will be a race of patriots."

A few days afterward came an urgent invitation for the entire family to spend a week at the Bright homestead. There the little American was introduced to Mr. Gladstone, and many other prominent English statesmen.

Her unique experience is very suggestive. How many of our young people are at all acquainted with the present state of European politics? Too many of them, indeed, have yet to learn the very alphabet of their own government.—Exchange.

One Page a Day.

One page of good literature a day, thoughtfully read, must produce beneficial intellectual results, even though the reader find it difficult to recall at will the full thought of the author, or to reproduce a complete sentence in which that thought, or any part of it was expressed. Even slight effort at "giving attention" will increase power of concentration. The world opened by that single page may awaken a new intellectual interest, quicken curiosity, sharpen appetite, and suggest thoughts of his own to the mind of the reader. The simple passing of well-expressed ideas across his mental horizon will enlarge his world, enrich his mind, refine his tastes, increase his vocabulary, and give him new interest in the people he meets and in the topics which obtrude themselves upon him in these busy days, when everybody is thinking, and when great events are crowding into the wonderful history now being made. One page a day guarantees so much gain of knowledge and power to the attentive and interested reader.

Of course, the results of one page will be scarcely appreciable. One day's toil will build no temple. But seven days make a week, and four weeks make a month, and twelve months contain three hundred and sixty-five days. One page a day will therefore grow in one year into a volume of three hundred and sixty-five pages. Now, at three hundred pages to a book one may read in ten years twelve stout volumes. He who in a decade reads with interested and inquiring attention twelve volumes is no mean student; and if the reading in five minutes of a single page should stimulate thought that keeps hammering or digging or singing in the reader's brain during the day when he is at work and his book is shut, at the end of ten years such reader and thinker will deserve some reputation as a "scholar." He may be, in some sense, a master of twelve big books. And if they be the right books, no master of a larger library can afford to overlook the claim upon his recognition of this man who reads well one page a day.—Bishop Vincent, in Sunday-School Times.

A teacher in one of the public schools in Yonkers, N. Y., was examining a class in physiology. She asked:

"What are the last teeth to come?"

"False teeth," fairly shouted the small boy to whom the question was addressed.

Thousands of people have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla a positive cure for rheumatism. This medicine, by its purifying action, neutralizes the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and also builds up and strengthens the whole body. Give it a trial.

A sweet little pair of twins of each sex—a boy and a girl—children of a noted divine in Albany, were about to be punished recently for some wrong, and presented themselves to their mother. The boy, who had been well trained in gentlemanly conduct, spoiled the whole matter by saying, "Ladies first."

How to Make Life Happy.

Take time; it is no use to foam or fret, or do as the angry housekeeper who has got hold of the wrong key, and pushes, shakes and rattles it about the lock until both are broken and the door is still unopened.

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex us, and in cultivating our undergrowth of small pleasures.

Try to regard present vexations as you will regard them a month hence.

Since we can not get what we like, let us like what we can get.

It is not riches, it is not poverty, it is human nature that is the trouble.

The world is like a looking glass. Laugh at it and it laughs back; frown at it and it frowns back.

Angry thoughts canker the mind and dispose it to the worst temper in the world—that of fixed malice and revenge. It is while in this temper that most men become criminals.

Show your sense by saying much in a few words.

Try to speak some kind word or do some kind deed each day of your life. You will be amply repaid.

Set your work to song.—Washington Post.

How Women Rest.—How differently men and women indulge themselves in what is called a resting spell. "I guess I'll sit down and mend these stockings and rest awhile," says the wife: but her husband throws himself upon the easy lounge, or sits back in his arm-chair, with hands at rest and feet placed horizontally upon another chair. The result is that his whole body gains full benefit of the half hour he allows himself from work, and the wife only receives that indirect help which comes from change of occupation. A physician would tell her that taking even ten minutes' rest in a horizontal position, as a change from standing or sitting at work, would prove more beneficial to her than any of her make-shifts at resting. Busy women have a habit of keeping on their feet just as long as they can, in spite of backaches and warning pains. As they grow older they see the folly of permitting such drafts upon their strength, and learn to take things easier, let what will happen. They say, "I used to think I must do thus and so, but I have grown wiser and learned to slight business." The first years of housekeeping are truly the hardest, for untried and unfamiliar cares are almost daily thrust upon the mother and home-maker.

One Safe Friend.—There is one safe friend for every maiden. It is her mother. Whom should you trust, in whom repose confidence, if not in her? No one else loves you so unselfishly, and no one else has loved you so long. It is a pity when girls are not confidential with their mothers. There are times when every young woman needs an old woman to guide and help her, and her mother is at those times her natural counselor and guardian. If she has no mother, let her pour out her troubles and unfold her perplexities to some motherly woman, aunt, sister, friend, in whom she can believe. Many a heartache would be soothed, many a vexation rolled away, and many a mortification saved, if girls would remember that they have not the wisdom of Solomon nor the dignity of Deborah as yet on their unwrinkled brows. Situations which baffle them would be plain to more experienced eyes, and they would be guided over bad places.

Motherhood.—In the failure of woman to perceive the dignity, beauty and grand possibilities of her special calling, motherhood, lies a great peril to the race. A nation rises and falls with its women. Froebel has said: "The destiny of nations lies far more in the hands of women—the mothers—than in the possessors of power. . . . We must cultivate women, who are the educators of the human race, else the new generation can not accomplish its task." Educated women must add the weight of their testimony to the holiness of marriage and the sacredness of its obligations, by consciously and intelligently entering into the same. Let them prove, by the living, that maternity is no hinderance to the highest work a woman may wish to do, but that it is physically a positive gain, and spiritually and intellectually it enriches all the being, and motherhood will be restored to its high and priestly office.—Ex.

Scientific.

Resistance of the Atmosphere.

From Professor Langley's illustrated paper, on Comets and Meteors in the January Century, we quote as follows: "Everybody will notice that if we move a fan gently, the air parts before it with little effort, while, when we try to fan violently, the same air is felt to react; yet if we go on to say that if the motion is still more violent, this may seem to some an unexpected property of the 'nimble' air through which we move daily. Yet this is the case, and if the motion is so quick that the air can not get out of the way, a body hurled against it will rise in temperature like a shot striking an armor-plate. It is all a question of speed, and that of the meteorite is known to be immense. One has been seen to fly over this country from the Mississippi to the Atlantic in an inappreciably short time, probably in less than two minutes, and though at a presumable height of over fifty miles, the velocity with which it shot by gave everyone the impression that it went just above his head, and some witnesses of the unexpected apparition looked the next day to see if it had struck their chimneys. The heat developed by arrested motion in the case of a mass of iron moving twenty miles a second can be calculated, and is found to be much more than enough, not only to melt it, but to turn it into vapor, though what probably does happen is, according to Professor Newton, that the melted surface-portions are wiped away by the pressure of the air and volatilized to form the luminous train, the interior remaining cold, until the difference of temperature causes a fracture, when the stone breaks and pieces fall—some of them at red-hot speed, some of them, possibly, at the temperature of outer space, or far below that of freezing mercury.

"Where do those stones come from? What made them? The answer is not yet complete, but if a part of the riddle is already yielding to patience, it is worthy of note, as an instance of the connection of the sciences, that the first help to the solution of this astronomical enigma came from the chemists and the geologists."

Unknown Sensations.

Sound is the sensation produced on us when the vibrations of the air strike on the drum of our ear. When they are few the sound is deep; as they increase in number, it becomes shriller and shriller; but when they reach forty thousand in a second they cease to be audible. Light is the effect produced on us when waves of light strike on the eye. When four hundred millions of millions of vibrations of either strike the retina in a second, they produce red, and as the number increases, the color passes into orange, then yellow, green, blue and violet. But between forty thousand vibrations in a second and four hundred millions of millions we have no organ of sense capable of receiving the impression. Yet between these limits any number of sensations may exist. We have five senses, and sometimes fancy that no others are possible. But it is obvious that we can not measure the infinite by our own narrow limitations. Moreover, looking at the question from the other side, we find in animals complex organs of sense, richly supplied with nerves, but the function of which we are as yet powerless to explain. There may be fifty other senses as different from ours as sound is from sight; and even within the boundaries of our own senses there may be endless sounds which we can not hear, and colors as different as red from green, of which we have no conception. These and a thousand other questions remain for solution. The familiar world which surrounds us may be a totally different place to other animals. To them it may be full of music which we can not hear, of color which we can not see, of sensations which we can not conceive.—Popular Science Monthly.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Yeuker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

PARRISH—Sister MARY A. PARRISH, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Christopher, and wife of Rev. T. C. Parrish, was born in Stokes county, N. C., September 21, 1828, and died in Holmes county, Miss., January 14, 1890. Sister Parrish's parents emigrated to Georgia when she was a child, and when quite young she was married to T. C. Parrish, August 12, 1841. She made profession of religion in July, 1845, joined the church soon after conversion, and was a consistent member until the day of her death.

After her husband became an itinerant preacher she met the doubled responsibility that came on her unflinchingly. Sister Parrish was a child of affliction the greater part of her life; but amid all her afflictions she showed the world how one could suffer the Lord's will as well as do it. Several years ago, while living at Winona, Miss., she had a severe spell of sickness. Her prayer was that she might live to see her children grown and members of the church. In her last illness she expressed a desire to depart and be at peace. She had lost two sons-in-law and one grandchild in less than twelve months, and just two weeks before her death her own son and darling—T. J. Parrish—was taken away. Now all seemed to say to her, "Sister spirit, come away." When reminded by her husband that her Winona prayer had not been fully answered—that her youngest son, a grown young man, had not yet joined the church—her reply was, "Yes, I know; but he will join," showing her firm faith in God as a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God.

The church has lost a transparent Christian character; her husband, the closest friend of this world, and the children, a devoted mother. May God bless Bro. Parrish and sanctify his bereavements (coming on him so fast) to the good of his soul and everlasting interests! Let us all remember our brother in his affliction at a throne of heavenly grace. B. F. PHILLIPS.

PARRISH—THOMAS J. PARRISH, son of Rev. T. C. Parrish and Mary A. Parrish, was born September 16, 1849, and died January 1, 1890. Bro. Parrish professed religion in 1864, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he remained until the day of his death. He was married in 1870 to the daughter of T. C. Buck. He leaves a wife and eight children to mourn his loss. I was not acquainted with Bro. Parrish; but I am told by those who know that he was a true and devoted husband, a tender and loving father, an obliging neighbor, a good citizen, a true and warm friend.

Bro. Parrish's father was a traveling Methodist preacher, and I am told that the son's love and attachment to his mother was almost without a parallel; that never was he known to leave his mother alone when father was about the Master's work; and that devotion was continued until his death. But he is gone to his reward. His wife and little ones are left to battle with the storms of life alone, and yet not alone, for the God of the husband and father is the God of the widow and children. They acknowledge him to be their stay. May God bless and comfort them always! May he guide them even unto death, and after death crown them heirs of immortality!

B. F. PHILLIPS.

GORDON—Died at Bee Lake, Holmes county, Miss., on the evening of December 10, 1889, Mrs. SUSIE R. GORDON, aged twenty-three years.

Solemn sentences like to this one are spoken or written, one time or other, of us all. Pathetic interest in such announcement attaches usually to few, but to this few it is unspeakable. In this sad case, death meant the sudden ceasing of a young life happily begun, the quick capsizing of a bark not long detached from the moorings of youth, just out and gladly sailing with right breezes across life's sea. It meant the leaving empty a nest newly made, the departure of bright young wife from strong young husband, the unutterable sadness of separation between young mother and sweet little ones. Alas! it meant the changing of purposes and plans, the quenching of bright anticipation, the cloud and stillness death only can produce.

Sister Gordon was a member of our church, the clear-voiced organist of the little chapel in the grove, at the edge of the lake. She was one of the most natural, happily natural women her pastor ever knew. Unassuming, of charming deportment, springing buoyantly from a most cheerful disposition. Devoted with perfect tenderness to husband and children, her genial nature brightened the community of relations and friends who lived around her. Full of cordial welcoming for every visitor, she graced her home with lovely, most unselfish hospitality. Surely she will be missed by all who knew the sunny soul.

She leaves a young husband, broken and lonely, and two little children. Leaves the record of a true and blameless Christian life; leaves such fragrant memory as flowers leave, cut off after just opening fully in the morning sun: leaves earth, after short stay upon it, to enter heaven's radiant perpetuity. Our Father, bless those remaining who mourn her absence, and gather and keep the little ones under the brooding of the Spirit's wing, and give all aid and grace to her who now assumes to them the mother's tender place! W. H. HUNTLEY.

ALFORD—FRANCIS DORA ALFORD, born October 28, 1869, died at the residence of her parents, Rev. N. A. Alford and wife, near Magnolia, Miss., November 17, 1889. She joined the Methodist Church when thirteen years of age, under the pastorate of Rev. W. B. Hines.

I have known Dora for six years—part of that time I was her pastor, part her teacher. As a member of the church, as a college pupil, as a daughter and as a sister, she was remarkably exemplary. Quiet, modest and in every way unobtrusive, she nevertheless met duty in all these relations with a positive, practical sort of will, and a skill which reminded me of a mature woman rather than a girl. She was an only daughter, and an only and elder sister; and as such, became with her womanly ways, next to the wife and mother, the indispensable member of a happy household, which the wing of death had never darkened; hence her death, coming as the first shadow to that home, and robbing it of one so necessary to its wealth of comfort and beauty of spirit, has made it dark, dark indeed, to the father, mother and brothers. Were it not for our blessed religion, the darkness of that home today would be unbearable. Dora, whose greatness consisted in goodness, died as she lived; and all who knew and loved her think of her as translated to a wider, happier sphere of usefulness, where labor is joyful, and activity restful. There we shall meet her.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

KEMP—HAMILTON REILY, youngest son of James M. and Emily Rousseaux Kemp, was born May 11, 1885, and died June 1, 1889, at Algiers, La. Over that fair home-fold, where dwelt little curly headed Hamilton, with his loving parents, brother and sisters, the angel reapers were hovering.

Five years the fair bud had been unfolding; five years his little feet had gone in and out over the threshold to bless its inmates, and now he lay moaning in his pain on the bed that mother-love had smoothed again and again, and the angels said to themselves: "That bed is all too hard; this darksome world is all too cold for the little one lying there; let us call him away from this gloomy clime. The gentle mother will weep, but she will bow her head, and say, 'God's will be done!' The doting father will miss the little curly pate that nestled in his bosom; but, perhaps, he will oftener cast an eye to the gate that we will leave ajar for him. The brother and sisters will no more listen to his loving prattle; but heaven will not seem so far away to them if little Buddie is just inside the 'gowden gate.'" Nearer and nearer the angels hovered until, but for the veil that intervenes, one might have seen their snowy wings as they caught up the spirit of little Hamilton and bore it away to their "sweet home above."

At Springfield, La., the home of the grandparents, they laid the little body down to rest "until the shadows flee away." MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

The crown of patience can not be received where there has been no suffering. If thou refusest to suffer, thou refusest to be crowned; but if thou wish to be crowned thou must fight manfully and suffer patiently. Without labor none can obtain rest, and without contending there can be no conquest.—Thomas a Kempis.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Andrew Carnegie, the steel king, has offered to spend not less than $1,000,000 for a central free library and branches for the city of Pittsburg, provided the city will maintain them. The offer will be accepted.

After the adjournment of the Montana Senate on February 6, the eight Democratic senators, incensed at the ruling of the lieut.-governor in counting them present, took trains in different directions, in order to get out of the reach of the sergeant-at-arms. Their continued absence will block all legislation.

Nine lives were lost in a wreck on the Union Pacific road near Cascade Locks, Ore., on the sixth instant.

The Charleston, S. C., Merchants' Exchange has passed resolutions denouncing the tonnage bounty bill now pending in Congress, and declaring it not only wrong, but useless to expend the money of the people in subsidies to ships while their cargoes are excluded from our shores by the barriers of a high protective tariff.

It is said that while the Democrats will not filibuster against the consideration of the new rules, they will use every means in their power to defeat the adoption of the new rules, requiring a Republican quorum on their passage. The Democrats will not permit the adoption of the rules if they can prevent it, but do not seem to be hopeful, as it is thought that the Republicans would be able to produce a quorum.

Senator Gibson has introduced a bill in the Senate making a special appropriation of $4,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi river, according to the plans and specifications of the River Commission, the idea being that it would be better, on the whole, to have the appropriation for the Mississippi in a separate measure, where it can be considered by itself and on its own merits.

Nine hundred and fifty-seven emigrants were landed at Castle Garden, New York, on February 9.

The new code of rules will be the chief subject of interest to come before the House of Representatives for consideration this week. It is the intention of the Committee on Rules to call it up as early as possible, and to ask the House to limit debate, so that final action on the subject may be reached within two or three days.

A committee from the Equal Rights Convention, which was held in Washington, waited upon the President and presented a copy of the address adopted by the convention. The President expressed his sympathy with the movement, and assured the committee that he would do all he could within the law to ameliorate the condition of the colored people.

The Los Angeles river has changed its course just outside of the city limits, turning into the old Sangabra river and inundating a large area. The damage to crops is estimated at $750,000.

Secretary Tracy continues to gain in health and strength, and he has resumed his duties at the Navy Department.

An act for the purchase of a site for a public building in New Orleans, and appropriating $800,000 for the purpose, was passed by the U. S. Senate on February 10.

The towboat Port Eads, with a tow of six grain-laden barges, from Cairo to New Orleans, struck a sunken pier at the Kansas City railroad bridge at Memphis, on the tenth, and in a few minutes sank in seventy feet of water. She carried a crew of forty men, of which six were drowned. The barges were saved.

The Pope's advice to the Catholics of America, contained in his encyclical letter, was received in New York City, on February 10. "If the laws of the state are in contradiction of the divine law," says Leo XIII.; "if they command anything prejudicial to the church or hostile to the duties imposed by religion, or violate in the person of the supreme pontiff the authority of Jesus Christ, then indeed it is a duty to resist them, and a crime to obey them—a crime fraught with injury to the state itself. For every offense against religion recoils on the state."

The President has signed the proclamation opening the Sioux reservation in South Dakota. He has also issued an order establishing land offices at Pierre and Chamberlain.

The Senate Committee on Territories has directed Chairman Platt to favorably report the bill for the admission of Idaho as a State, and it will be reported to the Senate.

A favorable report was also ordered on Senator Chilton's bill approving the funding act of Arizona. An amendment by the committee extends the life of the bonds from twenty-five to fifty years.

FOREIGN.

Twenty-two companies of London dock owners have signed the agreement recently made to fight the labor unions men employed in handling freight and in other dock occupations.

An explosion occurred, on February 6, in a colliery at Abersychan, in Monmouthshire, England. Three hundred miners were imprisoned, and for several hours no communication could be had with them. One hundred and fifty of them are believed to be killed.

The influenza has become epidemic in the City of Mexico.

The confirmation of the Samoan treaty by the United States Senate affords general satisfaction in Berlin.

Gen. Salamanca, captain-general of the island of Cuba, died on the seventh.

Ten thousand colored people in Canada have sent the governor-general a loyal address.

The young Duke of Orleans was arrested in Paris, on February 9, for violating the decree of exile issued against the members of his family. The entire affair is regarded in the light of a boyish escapade. In a letter to President Carnot he solicits permission to serve his country as a private soldier.

Not One In Ten

Of the people you meet from day to day has perfectly pure, healthy blood. The hereditary scrofulous taint afflicts the large majority of people, while many others acquire diseases from impure air, improper food and wrong indulgences. Hence the imperative necessity for a reliable blood purifier like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which eradicates every impurity, and gives to the blood vitality and health. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, tumors, boils, pimples, and all other affections caused by impurities or poisonous germs in the blood. All that is asked for Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it be given a fair trial.

A Little Courtesy.

The other day, a gentleman entered one of the largest stores of the city in pursuit of an article the price of which he knew would scarcely exceed the cost of postage on an ounce letter. The fact of its insignificance and that it was rarely called for made it hard to find. One clerk after another was enlisted in the search, until finally they were joined by the proprietor before success crowned their efforts. Somewhat mortified at the amount of trouble he had caused, the customer began to apologize, when he was silenced by the proprietor with, "My friend, it was no trouble; it was business. We have experienced full as much pleasure in finding that for you as you have in receiving it. If you insist upon calling this trouble, please remember that we like to be troubled."

That merchant made an investment by his courtesy. He laid up treasure where moth and rust do not corrupt, and it wasn't laid up in heaven either. He secured the patronage of a man, though he did not know it, who sometimes makes purchases which are worth the while. Without intending it, he cast some bread upon the waters. His experience is liable to be the experience of any man who cultivates the amenities rather than the asperities; even though it were not so, though the reward does not come back in pounds, shillings and pence, still the practice of amenities pays. It cultivates an even temper, it staves off congestion, it invites a green old age. Like virtue, the practice of the amenities of life is its own reward.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Regard suffering, even in its slightest forms, as a vocation, having its special duties and offering its special grace. Say secretly of it, "Here lies thy allotted task, O my soul!" Consider how much may be made of this period; how largely it may be improved to God's service and thy salvation. It is the post to which thou art appointed. Seek to occupy it faithfully and bravely, and more good shall accrue to thee from it than from what thou didst propose to thyself as the line of service of thine own choosing. —Dean Goulburn.

"MY TIMES ARE IN THY HAND."

(Psalms xxxi, 15.)

BY MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

What times my soul is fearful,
O Lord, I crave thy care:
If enemies surround me,
O let me feel thee near:
And then I shall be strengthened,
And in this strength will stand,
As long as life is lengthened
"My times are in thy hand."

O Father, smile upon me
While I this journey go:
Thy mercy still surround me
Through all this world of woe:
And if to-day through sorrow
I walk by thy command,
I will have joy to-morrow—
"My times are in thy hand."

What times I find sweet comfort,
I find it all in thee;
What times on Jacob's ladder
Of faith my soul doth see,
The mansions over yonder
On that fair summer-land,
Then on thy love I ponder—
"My times are in thy hand."

If fifteen years are added,
Or if I die to-night,
What's that to me if Jesus
Will walk with me in white?
No power this faith can sever;
What more could I demand?
Dear Father, now and ever,
"My times are in thy hand."

The world of mind is a unit; it is or-ic; and in virtue of the relation to organic whole of each distinct, but separate, mind, there is an incalcu-e obligement to truth. Hence the tions of the law obliging each to dience are as incalculable as are dignity and majesty of the per-l authority to whom the law es each, and to whom it obliges Obligations are ever reciprocal. chiefest authority of the State is ily obliged to the humblest con-ent of government as is the hum-to the chiefest. Even the ulti-divine, personal authority is ed correspondingly with capabil-obedience on the part of the sub-obliged to qualify and condition ubject favorably to the fulfillment he is bound for in his relation to reign. There is a two-fold oblige-reaching to the springs of intel-l and moral life—that of the e Sovereign, and that of the world nkind with whom each of us is ically membered. This two-fold nent is the ground of religion orality, the relation of the indi-l directly to the Sovereign, giving religion, and his relation to fel-reatures the occasion of morality. are co-ordinates—neither possible egrity, except as counterpart of her.

re is an unutterable sublimity in corporation of the finite with the e; this pulsing of the human consciousness of truth, because , immediate, with "the Word igh us, in our mouths and in arts; the Word" of realized ver-All my springs are in thee!" is a spirit in man, and the in-n of the Almighty giveth him taading." In virtue of this cor-union with God, obtaining from esis of being in each individual there available to each that whereby may be developed out of a Christian infancy a Christian childhood, and thence a Christian manhood and womanhood. God is nearer to each than anybody else can get. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid" already in the constitutional, organic law of our intellectual and moral—our spiritual being. It is in virtue of our "living and moving and having our being in God" that we may believe all things (that are true), hope all things, and endure all things—yea, and that we may love all men and serve their necessities as occasion offers and ability guarantees. Multiplied forms of expression in our worship witness to this divine and human conjuncture. We declare our petitions to be "in Christ Jesus." He is the stock of the vine whereof we are the branches; and as he is in God, so are we in him; and as God is in him, even so is he in us. And what delights of life and love!—what raptures are ours, as we "grow in grace," and are thus enabled to love others as we love ourselves (not better than ourselves), and "in honor prefer-ring others!" A world of wealth have we when we are alive to the fact that all is ours, and that what is ours is the measure of our own value.

The article by Rev. W. D. Atwater, on the first page of the ADVOCATE, of February 6, copied from the North-western Christian Advocate, on the "Min-ister as a Thinker and Moulder of Thought," is a most admirable one. It has the pungent and, at the same time, round-about, common-sense way of putting it that characterizes whatever F. M. Grace writes. I look weekly for something from Grace in your col-umns. Dr. Abbey's protest against the absurd idea of Christianity being an after-thought, etc., is timely and tell-ing.

FRANKLIN, Ky.

The Location of Millsaps College.

BY "SIGMA."

Where is Millsaps College to be lo-cated? One answers, "Where the trus-tees choose." But where is that likely to be? "Well," one replies, "look at the composition of the Board; see where these men live, and consider the local influences likely to bear with greatest weight upon them. Each man will be likely to think that his own town, or the town of his own sec-tion, will be the best of the competing places for the college. Already mere personal considerations have been ex-pressed as a reason for suitableness of place, and the friends of each locality will expect that members of the Board will favor the places of their own resi-dence. People living at A., and who are urging its claims, will think it very strange if a trustee who lives there does not see it to be the very place for the college, and urge its choice."

Yes, people in general will think that way; but these trustees are charged with a most sacred trust. They act, not for their own localities, but for the church in Mississippi, and in view of the noble spirit and form of our great connectionalism. While the college will be a great benefit in many ways to the place where it shall be located, yet this is no question for the trustees. They are concerned for the college alone—that it shall have its proper life and do its needed work. It is hoped that they are men who, in such an emergency as this, when they are fix-ing the destiny of an institution which is to serve a great church and to live for generations, can dismiss those con-siderations which are merely local or personal, and take the broadest and most judicious view of those condi-tions essential to the success of the en-terprise. Localities are to be consid-ered, investigated, but only as to whether they possess any—more or less—of these essential conditions. If the trustees are wise, they will spare no pains and take ample time to reach the maturest judgment. A mislocation will go much further toward "calam-ity" than the delay of a few months in the inauguration of the scholastic ex-ercises. The people at large, and es-pecially of our church in Mississippi, will expect this painstaking deliber-ation in a connectional enterprise which is to be so vitally affected by its loca-tion. I am sure that the trustees, un-less they could regard themselves as infallible, will not object to sugges-tions coming from other persons con-cerning this grave matter.

1. This college should not be located where it will divide the legitimate pat-ronage of other connectional schools. Our schools should be a sisterhood, helpful to each other, and tenderly re-gardful of each other's rights. Surely no other spirit can consistently prompt any movement in our educational in-terests. This college must occupy a field not covered, and that can not be covered, by any existing school of our church, or fail to meet the object of its origination.

2. The tendency of our people is to send northward to school. A school located in the southern part of the State will not command more than small patronage from the northern part; while, on the other hand, one lo-cated in the northern part, yet bearing toward the center of the State, and easily accessible, will command stu-dents from all parts. This suggestion looks solely to the welfare of the school, and not to any sectional pref-erence as such. The State is one.

3. The location should be as free as possible from social vices, and from those popular manners and customs which draw young minds from the simplicity of godliness, and divert them from the pursuit of their scho-lastic work. The students in this school will not be young men of mature age, of settled habits, and of trained minds, such as are contemplated in a great university; but, for the most part, boys from the country and our country towns, fresh from the narrow circle of home, young in years, unsus-pecting, artless, with no well-trained habits of thought, and unequipped for battle against popular vices and fash-ionable self-indulgences. Parents will consider the moral and spiritual inter-ests of their children, and will select a school as far removed as they can from diverting influences.

Further, the location should be where the expense of living will be as small as may be consistent with the school. Meanness and coarseness should not be encouraged, but sim-plicity and economy should, by exter-nal influence as well as by internal reg-ulation. This matter of cheapness in domestic expenses is scarcely less im-portant than endowment for scholastic expense. Ample endowment for the proper support of a competent faculty of instruction is essential to the vigor-ous, effective working of the institu-tion. But the cost of board and of other things incidental to life in the college community will be of serious moment to parents. Those who have ample means may be unconcerned; but they are not of the majority, nor are they the ones on whose plane the col-lege should be leveled. The masses are to be sought; the boys of humbler condition are to be reached; the no-blest aspirations and highest purposes of Christian manhood must be pro-moted in these by giving to them the most favorable opportunities practi-cable for obtaining an education for a comparatively small outlay of money. This accommodation of expenses to the needs of those limited in means will be an advantage, rather than a dis-advantage, to the more fortunate; for it will promote the habit of economy in all.

These are some of the more impor-tant considerations that seem just now to enter into the question of the loca-tion of our new college. They are such as the great body of our people in Mississippi will regard in selecting a school for their boys; and, unless our college shall meet the demands of this great body, the enterprise will miss its work.

General Conference Expenses.

BY THOS. A. HOLLOMAN.

MR. EDITOR: The question you pro-pound in the ADVOCATE, of February 6, to the brethren of the Louisiana Conference, relative to taking up the assessment to defray expenses of dele-gates to the General Conference, is a vital one; and I have been thinking for some time that I would touch upon this matter, and appeal to the preachers of the Mississippi Conference to do like-wise.

The Joint Board of Finance of the Mississippi Conference in 1888 assessed the Conference $440, which is $160 less than the actual amount necessary to defray the expenses of the delegation, and the various districts only raised $329 25, which is 75 per cent. of the amount assessed. Bro. Mellen's verbi-age, in his conclusion of the report for the Joint Board, at Crystal Springs, in 1889, is very suggestive, as well as in-sinuative, when he says: "This contri-bution ($329 25) is ample for the trav-eling expenses of all the eight delegates to the General Conference." How about the staying expenses? Under the new order of things the delegates have to incur the expense of board for, at least, twenty-five days in St. Louis; and this in addition to their incidental and traveling expenses. Bro. Mellen says in his report that this "assess-ment" was "partly for novel purposes." Wherein consists the novelty? It is a plain business transaction of the church, and it is the duty of the church to pay the way of her representatives. I served as treasurer of the delegation that went to Richmond, Va., four years ago, and only about fifty per cent. of the traveling expenses of the delegates was paid.

Now, our preachers are poor men, and so are some of the laymen, and it is an outrage upon them that they should incur one cent of expense in serving the church. I appeal to the presiding elders of the Mississippi Con-ference to see that the charges that paid nothing last year do so now, and deposit with Dr. W. C. Black, Jack-son, Miss., who can remit same to Dr Barbee.

	Assessed.	Paid.	Deficit.
Jackson District	$77 00	$44 00	$33 00
Vicksburg "	77 00	58 25	18 75
Meridian "	75 00	68 75	6 25
Brookhaven "	77 00	67 00	10 00
Woodville "	87 00	84 30	12 70
Brandon "	40 00	33 85	6 15
Seashore "	47 00	23 10	23 90
Total	$440 00	$329 25	$110 75

Meridian is the banner district, hav-ing only one charge (Marion) that failed to take up part or all. As per the Minutes, page 32, the cities of Vicksburg and Natchez (Jefferson street) positively did not raise one cent on this assessment. Will not the preachers in every district see to it that these deficits are made up? The laity will pay it if they will ask them for it. It is enough to ask men to leave their homes and business for a month to legislate for the church. It is too much to ask them to pay their way. Thirty-six thousand members can well afford to pay this expense. Who are to blame?—the preachers or the people?

PHŒNIX, Miss.

Romish-American Citizenship.

BY REV. B. F. WHITE.

Is it possible for a Roman Catholic to be a true, full-fledged citizen of the United States of America, with all the rights of suffrage, eligibility to office, etc.? If he take the oath of allegiance to the United States government, does he not solemnly swear to serve two "civil" masters? Does he not recog-nize one of these masters as superior in authority? Which? Here is the oath of a Roman Catholic. See "Acta et Decreta Concilii Baltimorensis III.," p. lili (Baltimore, 1886). "I acknowl-edge the Holy Catholic and Apostolic Roman Church as the mother and mis-tress of all churches; and I pledge and swear true obedience to the Roman pontiff, and vicar of Jesus Christ, and successor of the blessed Peter, prince of the apostles." Here the oath is to a "Roman" power, not the government of the "United States;" then it is to the mother and mistress of all churches; then to the "Roman pontiff," not to the Chief Executive of the United States of America; and this pontiff is recognized as the vicar of Jesus Christ.

1. The Roman Catholic Church, with its Pope, assumes to be a theocracy; Church and State united; ecclesiastical and civil in one. This is diametrically opposed to and different from our gov-ernment, which absolutely allows no union of Church and State.

2. She assumes to be, ecclesiastically, the "mother and mistress" of all churches, which is an assumption con-trary to freedom to worship God ac-cording to the dictates of conscience. Mistress of all!

3. The Pope assumes to be the chief civil power on earth, to whom all other powers owe obedience.

4. He claims, as the vicar of Jesus Christ, to be above all law, save the law of his own personal whims.

Now, if I have taken this awful oath of obedience to the Pope, when his au-thority clashes with that of my gov-ernment, I must be untrue to one, for "ye can not serve two masters." If I am an average Roman Catholic, with all the superstitions infused by the Romish Church into my being, there can be no doubt as to whose authority I will yield obedience. I honestly be-lieve that the oath of allegiance to the United States of America should be amended, so that when taken, the party, in express language, shall re-nounce allegiance to all other civil powers; and this oath should not only be administered to all foreigners be-coming citizens, but to all natives when assuming the rights of citizens; and it should be done in the most dig-nified, solemn and impressive manner by some high dignitary of the govern-ment. Romanism has played havoc with every civil government that she has ever had the power to rule; and her design is to bring every nation into abject obedience to her head—the Pope. If his professed infallibility had not proved itself the most fallible, and his authority under the cloak of Christianity the most oppressive, and his influence the most debasing, then we need have no especial fear; but with the assumptions of power in the past, and its history before us, we must look thoughtfully and prayerfully at the portentous happenings now. Take the last resolution of the late Council held in Baltimore, viz.: "We can not conclude without recording our solemn conviction that the absolute freedom of the Holy See is equally indispensa-ble to the peace of the church and the welfare of mankind. We demand in the name of humanity and justice that this freedom be scrupulously respected by all secular governments. We pro-test against the assumption by any such government of a right to affect the interests or control the action of our Holy Father by any form of legis-lation or public act to which his full approbation has not been previously given; and we pledge to Leo XIII., the worthy pontiff, to whose hands Al-mighty God has committed the helm of Peter's bark amid the tempests of this stormy age, the loyal sympathy and unstinted aid of all his spiritual children in vindicating that perfect liberty which he claims as his sacred and inalienable right." This in the midst of the light of the nineteenth century; in the midst of a free people; in the heart of a great nation, which knows no master but God himself. What outrageous effrontery! what im-pudence! With the stripes and stars (our national flag) intertwined with a Roman flag, on American soil, among a free people, this Council dared the treacherous threat of this most un-heard-of and bold assumption, that they "swear," give "sympathy" and "un-stinted aid" in "vindicating" that per-fect liberty which he claims as his sa-cred and inalienable right. His "per-fect liberty!"—that is, should he come to this country and choose to steal, murder, commit robbery, become a se-ducer (and he is as liable to any of these crimes as I am), then the State or government shall have no legal right to arrest or punish him; and if the State attempt to do so, they pledge themselves and swear they will give "unstinted aid" in vindicating that perfect liberty which he claims. Of course, the nation will treat it as "great, swelling words;" still it is flaunting the flag of Romanism, with its history of blood and oppression, of disobedience and revolution, right in the face of the government. It shows the animus of Roman Catholicism in the United States, and who they feel compelled and determined to support in case of conflict. We have found reason to legislate against Mormonism. After this it is high time to tell his lit-tle, threatening infallibility that we al-low no such menaces on our shores. We acknowledge no mother church, much less a "mistress," and claim that, as a civil government, we have the right legally, and will, should the Pope place his feet on our soil, rule him—if need be, punish him, as we do, or would punish any other man.

What of the Sixth Restrictive Rule?

BY REV. R. A. ELLIS.

In many of the Advocates of late is to be seen something touching the ques-tion as to whether the proceeds of the Publishing House shall, by the legisla-tion of our next General Conference, be turned aside from the objects ex-pressed in the Sixth Restrictive Rule. We can not regard this rule in the light as expressed by some of our great men. We believe it to be the embodiment of wisdom. The project-ors of this great institution understood the importance of supplying every in-centive to co-operation, knowing that the success of the House would be made to depend on the co-operation of the preachers as its agents in repre-senting and distributing its books. It will be wise for the managers of the House to bring the prices of its publi-cations in healthy competition with others of like character. This may be done, and yet there will be a balance in the hands of the agent. This bal-ance, prospectively, has been looked for as a supplement to the shameful allowance allowed by our Conference Boards for the support of the honored roll of our superannuated preachers, and widows and orphans of deceased preachers. The success of our Pub-lishing House to-day is not the result of some accident; nor because we have good and wise men at the head of af-fairs at Nashville; nor yet is it an ex-hibition of some wonderful providence, only as that providence has found its expressions in wise men adopting wise methods, who put into the hands of the rank and file of the ministry for execution. Had there been criminal neglect at this point, the House to-day would have been a failure. Who can believe that success would have at-tended the efforts of the last twenty years' struggle for existence, if the Advocates had been filled with the sug-gestions we now see concerning the surplus proceeds of the House? The heroic men in the field, who find it difficult to live on the small allowance paid them for their work while active, have, doubtless, looked forward to a day of prosperity for the House, when it might yield a dividend to aid in pro-viding a trust when, by the weight of years and enfeebled health, they are laid aside to await the call of their great Captain.

Now, to provide that the proceeds of the House shall be turned aside to some other object than that now ex-pressed by the Constitution of the church, is to be oblivious to a debt due the rank and file of our itinerant min-istry, upon whom, more than any other class, has been made to depend the success of the House. Its future success is largely in their hands. If they are denied the benefits which may possibly arise from the House, you force many of them to look in-quiringly as to how they may provide against the wolf of hunger in old age. In this case the House would suffer loss by a less vigorous agency on the part of the preachers.

WINONA, Miss.

The Second Step.

The North Dakota lottery scheme was worked by the Louisiana Lottery, and the purpose is transparent. We do not believe the Lottery entertained any serious notions of going to North Dakota, but that the scheme was de-veloped for the purpose of influencing action in this State.

It is the second step in the Lottery fight.

But happily the scheme collapsed in the face of the outburst of popular in-dignation from all parts of the coun-try, and the effort demonstrated the weakness of the cause of the Lottery; and we are glad it was made. The Lottery has fears that it will not secure a new lease of life in Louisiana; and well it may. Popular feeling is against it, and what the people will, they can accomplish. The churches are against it, the Knights of Labor are against it, and we understand the governor is against it! Who is in favor of it? Certainly these powers should win the fight, and the people should continue it with renewed courage.

If it is true that Governor Nicholls is opposed to a renewal of the charter, (and we think he is), he has an oppor-tunity of closing a long career of hon-orable public service with a crown of glory.—Telegraph-Bulletin.

THE COLLEGE TO BE CHRISTIAN.—The college is designed to form com-plete character. In achieving this de-sign it should put before itself and before its students that type of charac-ter which is represented in Christ. It were indeed a sad day when a college should put before itself or before its students a type of character found any-where else than in him who was born in Bethlehem, who lived in Nazareth, and who died on Calvary. It were in-deed a sad day when the winds of ma-terial prosperity, or the chill and darkness of spiritual indifference, should sweep away the Christian power of the college in training char-acter. Never was there a time, how-ever, at least in recent years, when there was less ground for such a fear. We are confident that the college will be true to the example and inspiration of manhood provided in Christ. "The thing is not," said William Von Hum-boldt, "to let the schools and universi-ties go on in their impotent routine. The thing is to raise the culture of the nation higher and higher by their means." Higher and higher is the culture of the nation to be raised through the culture of Christian char-acter in colleges; and this culture of character is best promoted by follow-ing the example of Jesus Christ.—Ad-vance.

"THE ANGELUS."*

BY MRS. MERRILL E. GATES.

Far, far away,
The bells peal, "Pray;
Pray at the dying of the day."
O'er levels dim
The sweet sounds swim,
The cadence of a seraph's hymn.

Vibrant and low,
More tremulous, slow,
Down the horizon's verge they go.
Heavy with care,
In furrows bare,
Two toilers hear, and bow in prayer.

The bells sing, "Cease!
Rest and release
Come with the nightfall's blessed peace!"
The music rare
Throbs through the air,
Suffusing it with faith and prayer.

As angels sing,
The blest bells ring—
And lo, the toilers see the King.
They hear him say:
"Come, rest and pray!
I, too, was weary in the way."

O ye that toil,
Yoked to the soil,
Still are ye nobler than your toil!
O ye that plod,
Turning the sod,
Your worship lifts you up to God!

Not of the earth
Had ye your birth;
Other are ye, of better worth!
Spirits, not clay;
Children of day:
Not beasts of burden—souls that pray!

O, tolling men,
It rings again—
The Angelus sounds now as then!
World-toilers, hear,
How, far and near,
"Pray!" "Pray!" it rings th sweet and clear!

My Mother.

My mother, Mrs. Eliza Black, was born near Lumberton, N. C., December 23, 1806, and died near Crystal Springs, Miss., January 4, 1890, aged eighty-three years and twelve days. During her early childhood her father came to Mississippi, and settled in Copiah county, where she has since resided. In 1828 she was married to my father, William Black, who died about thirty years ago. She was the mother of ten children, five of whom preceded her to the grave. She was of Scotch descent. Her father, William McKee, removed nearly forty years ago to Louisiana, and located near Homer, where he resided until his death, which occurred more than twenty years since. He was a Methodist of the Wesleyan type, and was a man of strong character. His strict integrity, his rigidly methodical habits in matters both secular and religious, his intense devoutness, and his uncompromising hostility to everything that savored of ecclesiastical worldliness, marked him as a saint among saints. Her mother was also a devout Methodist. Amid such home influences her heart early responded to the woolngs of the Spirit. Before she had reached her teens she became a member of the church of her parents, and from that time on, during the more than seventy years of her subsequent pilgrimage, she loved it with all the ardor of him who sang,

"For her my tears shall fall.
For her my prayers ascend."

But her religion did not consist solely in attachment to the church. She was a Methodist of the old school—that is, she was a Christian of the New Testament type. To her regeneration was something more than a theological dogma; it was a realized experience. One might as well have attempted to reason her out of a belief in her own existence as to disprove to her the fact that she had "passed from death unto life." She placed a light estimate upon a religious experience that was not based upon conscious regeneration as "its chief corner-stone." The Bible was her constant companion. Neither business, nor company, nor anything else was allowed to stand in the way of her reading it daily. Equally regular were her habits as to secret prayer. The hour and the place of her private devotions were well known to all her household, and interruption was not thought of. Until the infirmities of age came upon her, she possessed the gift of song, and exercised it freely not only in the house of worship, but at home. While engaged in her household duties she would sing in a clear, strong voice many of the old Methodist hymns, such as: "O love divine, how sweet thou art;" "Arise, my soul, arise;" "How happy are they who their Savior obey;" "How happy every child of grace;" "Rise, my soul, and stretch thy wings." And as she sang, her voice would become tremulous with emotion, and her countenance would glow with unearthly joy. She was one of those women of the original Methodist type who are not afraid of the sound of their own voices in prayer. In the family circle, in the cottage prayer meeting, or in the sanctuary, she was ever ready to lead in prayer, and this, too, in spite of the fact that she was not characterized by any remarkable gifts in this direction. One excellence her prayers did possess: they were pre-eminently scriptural both in spirit and phraseology. Few persons outside the ministry could quote Scripture with greater facility and aptness. She loved the class meeting and the experience meeting, attending them whenever opportunity offered, and bearing unequivocal testimony as to the possibility of conscious salvation. Although her scholastic attainments were small, she was very fond of reading. Her reading, however, did not take a wide range. The Bible, Wesley's Sermons, Burkitt's Notes, Longking's Notes, Fletcher's Writings, and biographies of the heroes and heroines of early Methodism, such as Mrs. Fletcher, Hester Ann Rogers, William Bramwell, John Nelson—these represent the kind of literature she had a taste for. For reading of any other kind (newspapers and periodicals excepted) she felt that she had no time.

As a mother and the head of a household, she was a model worthy of universal imitation. The cardinal domestic virtues—industry, perseverance, frugality, etc.—she possessed in their fullness. Few persons have ever more fully exemplified John Wesley's rule: "Never be unemployed; never be trifllngly employed." In her estimation idleness was a sin; it was a wicked waste of the precious time which our heavenly Father has given us for noble purposes. Similar were her views as to the proper use of wealth. To spend money in extravagant equipage or luxurious living was to her a perversion of a God-given talent. Her courage and her will-power were prodigious. I have not a doubt that she would have gone to the stake rather than do violence to her conscience. She was a woman of remarkably fine judgment. Concerning any matter with which she was conversant, she was as safe a counselor as one would find in a day's travel. On the temperance question she was an ultra white ribboner before Francis Willard was born. Long before I had read a temperance story, or heard of a temperance society, she had instilled into me the principles that underlie the great temperance reform movement of the present day. Long before my birth, in the days when alcohol was thought to be a good creature of God, promotive of health, sociability and longevity, when the decanter was in almost every cupboard, when drinking was fashionable and total abstinence was thought to be a mark of fanaticism—even then she discerned the true character of alcohol, and took a solemn, heaven-registered vow that she would never either use it herself, or give countenance to its use by others. That vow she scrupulously kept to the day of her death. She sought to instill into the minds of her children a love of reading at a very early age, and to that end employed all the arts that motherly sagacity could suggest. As soon as her children had learned to read, she would put into their hands books adapted to their capacity, and would call their attention to those parts of the Bible which she thought would interest them. No mother ever watched over the morals of her children with greater assiduity. If evil companionships were being formed at school, she seemed to know it by instinct, and all was done that could be done in the way of applying a corrective. And not only did she watch over their morals, but she also sought to lead them to the cross; and many years before her death she had the satisfaction of seeing them all in the church and in possession of the priceless pearl of conscious salvation. Although she had little to dispose of at the time of her death in the way of worldly goods, yet out of that little she gave in her will $100 to the missionary cause. This will be appropriated to the Kansas City Training-School.

In conclusion, I will repeat what I have said in the dedication of "Christian Womanhood"—that "to her I am more indebted than to any other human instrumentality for all I am and all I hope to be, both in this life and in that which is to come."

Bro. Cassity Again.

MR. EDITOR: I want to say to the brethren who wish to respond to the proposition which appeared in the ADVOCATE, of January 16, over my signature, to send their names to you, as I suppose you will not object to act as secretary, at least, for the present. Many thanks to Bro. Ed. and Sister Galloway for their hearty response. Yes, we will allow them to take a part in this movement, for the spirit of the Master moves them, and I pray God that the same spirit may prompt every preacher in our Conference to do likewise. If we should succeed in this effort to support one missionary in Japan, we may expect other Conferences to follow; and if all the preachers in the Church, South, would pay two per cent. of their salary annually, we could keep forty or fifty missionaries in the field all the time. Brethren, let us go over to Japan and possess that land at once. Why to Japan? I answer: That seems to be the ripest and the most inviting field at present; and people generally harvest the ripest grain first. J. B. CASSITY.

The Fruit of the Lottery.

A TRUE STORY.

BY MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

Some years ago there lived, with their families, in a large city, two brothers named David and Jacob ——. Their homes were adjacent and alike; pretty two-story framo-houses painted in white and green, with door yards in front, laid off in flower beds and walks, where the lilacs and snowballs, dahlias and roses nodded at each other over the low fence that divided them. The side yards where the cherry, plums and apricots joined their branches in loving embrace above the fence, made a shade so dense that the happy children that played there on either side could easily make believe, as they often did, that they were in the country rusticating instead of being in the suburbs of a big city.

The brothers and their families (both of them quite large) lived in peace, and prospered, and were seemingly happy as mortals could be.

David was a whole-souled Christian, and, like his great namesake, a "sweet singer" of Zion's songs. His wife, "Aunt Betsy," as we all called her, was a model mother, neighbor and Christian.

Jacob, humanly speaking, was a good man and his wife was a Christian. The brothers each carried on a large business establishment of the same kind, and both were considered to be on the high road to wealth. But Jacob had heard of the lottery schemes, and of some that had drawn fortunes at the turn of a wheel; so he said, "Why need I toil on with this wearisome business when I can fill my coffers with gold without the wear and tear of flesh and brain?" In vain did his wife try to dissuade him; she wept and prayed, fearing that evil would come upon them if he made haste to win a fortune at such a loss of self respect, knowing that it was a gambling game that would increase her husband's taste for it, whether he lost or won. He laughed at her fears and sent for some tickets, and at the drawing was informed that his number had drawn a prize of a few hundred dollars. Elated with his success, but not satisfied with what he won, he invested again and drew a blank. Then he was determined to try his luck once more. His business was being neglected in the great hope that filled his every waking moment, and he kept on buying tickets, and at last he drew a large, first-class prize. I forgot the exact amount. Now, he was satisfied at last, and he thought he would leave his brother, David, in the shade completely. He gave up his business entirely and bought a fine steamboat, made one or two trips, and it was blown up; and, as he had no insurance on the boat, it was a total loss. He then mortgaged his home, bought more lottery tickets, won a few hundred dollars, invested in another business, and failed in that. The road downward was easy and fast from that, and the sad wife and children were thrown upon their own resources. Jacob took to drink to drown his woes, and in a few years filled a drunkard's grave.

David, in the meantime, had plodded on with his business, prospering all the while. A friend that went to that city and hunted for him found him living in a fine brown-stone front house with his happy family around him; but the best of all was, that he was the same humble Christian she had known in other days when they two had sat in the house of God together and sung the Lord's songs; but they wept when they remembered Jacob.

An Open Letter to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Dear Friends: I come to you with a subject which I hope you will carefully consider. You remember in the General Conference of 1866, which met in this city (New Orleans), it was thought best by the leaders of your church (the Methodist Episcopal Church, South) that its colored members be set apart as a separate organization, which was accordingly done after matured thought and friendly deliberations in the General Conference of 1870—not because the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had lost any of its love for the colored members, but because it was best to promote the religious happiness of all concerned.

The colored organization was named the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. At that time the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had but little money or property to give to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, owing to the late war through which they had recently passed. But now things are quite different, and times are much better with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It is a time of peace, when all the world expects to see the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, demonstrate her love for her only child—the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America—by assistance and advice. It is but natural to suppose that the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church would look to you for help and advice, expecting to receive.

When the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, organized the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, it (the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church) was not only without money or property, but without education, experience or training; but we were advised by the creator of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church to make the salvation of souls and the glory of God our real aim, which, as a church, we have tried to do, and the result to-day is 250,000 living souls for Christ, besides those in glory, over which, no doubt, you rejoice in your hearts.

But now, my friends, the times demand an educated ministry; the needs of the church demand better educational facilities for our children. In Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana nor Texas have we a single school, operated by the church to which our children can go. This reflection is on you, my friends, as well as on ourselves, because you are our mother, and what will hurt the reputation of the daughter will reflect also on the whole family. Realizing the fact that to leave the education of our children to other denominations, as we have had to do, is simply striking ourselves a deathly blow; therefore, we have undertaken to establish a school in the city of New Orleans, which is now run in the basement of the only Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in the city of New Orleans, on Conery street, which has now on the roll 150 students, and could have three times that number if we had room to accommodate them. We have three teachers, who are doing good work.

Now, my dear friends, will you, and especially you of Louisiana, take a bold and help us to make this school a success? It is an opportunity of which, if you avail yourselves, you can do a great favor for your only child—the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.

Hoping that you will consider the above, and that our love for each other may be undying love, I am,

Yours in Christ,

J. C. W. SMITH.

Pastor C. M. E. Church in New Orleans.

We are well acquainted with Bro. Smith. He has a growing congregation in this city. The school he speaks of is doing good work. These people really need help, and need it right away; and if any of our friends are moved to help in this matter, we will cheerfully receive any amount they may send and see that it reaches its destination.—EDITOR.

Our Boys All Right.

In the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of January 30, there is an article by Bro. Peter James headed, "A Correction Needed." Not knowing but that some of the young men, now being aided by the Ministerial Educational Aid Association of the Mississippi Conference, were referred to, I wrote to the authorities and to other sources from which I knew I could obtain correct information. Answers have been received from all the parties to whom I wrote, and I am glad to say every letter agrees with the following extract from the authorities of Centenary College: "Let me assure you that the young men mentioned by you are free from the habit to which you alluded.... The young men being aided by the Ministerial Educational Aid Association are all worthy and doing well." Of course, as an association, we have nothing to do with any young man not under our control. But we do try to see that the young ministers whom we aid are worthy. Therefore, I inquired, not into the correctness of Bro. James' statement, for I never for a moment doubted that, but into the actions of the four young ministers, now being aided by the Ministerial Educational Aid Association, and find them "all worthy and doing well."

I write this notice to answer our friends. We endeavor to keep a watchcare over our young men, and try to see that their money is properly spent.

Yours truly, B. F. LEWIS,
Sec. M. E. A. A., Miss. Conf.

JACKSON, Miss.

Church Dedication.

The elegant new church at Coldwater, Miss., was dedicated by Bishop C. B. Galloway on Sunday, February 9, 1890.

It is a beautiful house of worship, at once expressive of the taste, liberality and piety of the good people of that town. The house was packed full of eager listeners, who came from the neighboring towns and the surrounding country.

The sermon of the Bishop was interesting, earnest, eloquent, edifying, scriptural and wonderfully suggestive. It was meat for forty days, or longer. Bro. K. A. Jones and his people are to be congratulated on the completion and dedication of this tasteful house of worship, free of debt. At night the Bishop lectured to a large and appreciative audience on Mexico—her soil, her cities, her people, her history and her need of a pure gospel. It was manifest that he considered a corrupted Christianity more dangerous to the interests of the soul than any form of paganism. This lecture, in book form, would be the best of missionary reading. Our people and our missionary treasury suffer more from a lack of information than from any other cause. Yours, GILDEROY.

From the Work.

EAST FELICIANA CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

It is one month since we arrived at the parsonage at Oak Grove, East Feliciana circuit. I am now on my second round, meeting my appointments. My congregations have been exceedingly large, especially for this season of the year. The people seem to be deeply interested, and give rapt attention to the Word and the common cause of Christ's kingdom; hence I take courage. This is my first year in the itinerancy, and when I came to this work I had doubts as to my ability to even hold my own; but this passage of Scripture came to my relief: "With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible." And I have somewhat taken courage. This circuit is worked up to a fine point, and for the last fifteen years has been blessed with a Flowers, a Young, a Robinson, a Jones (L. S.), a Johnson, and our beloved Nathan J. Roberts. It is not to be wondered at, because their tracks are still indelible, remaining here in promoting Christ's kingdom. I earnestly ask all my Christian acquaintances and others, when they read this, to pray for me, that I may be eminently successful in developing this work further.

By the last of this week, I will have visited every Methodist home on my work, and quite a number of Baptist families. I don't believe I ever met a better and more Christian hearted people. They seem to be wide-awake to the every want of their preacher and his family and the promotion of the church. I have read the Scriptures and prayed with all these people, and especially instructed the children the way that leads to Christ. I make the assertion that there is as many consecrated ladies on old East Feliciana circuit as any in the Mississippi Conference. Many are the good things that they have bestowed upon this itinerant's family, who has received them with grateful hearts and gratitude. It made a thrill of joy pass through my soul when I read Bro. H. J. Harris' letter, to know that Bro. Anders has met with such fine success for the Master. It called me back to my school-boy days, when he and I were little tow-headed boys worrying over that blue-back speller. May God's richest blessings attend him this year! I am meeting with fine luck for the old ADVOCATE. Eleven subscribers; majority of them new ones for the first month. I want one hundred subscribers for the old ADVOCATE this year, and win one hundred souls for Christ. Pray for me, brethren!

Yours in Christ,

J. R. WHITTINGTON.

SUGAR TOWN CIRCUIT.

When I was appointed to this circuit some sneered and some laughed, as if they thought that I was afflicted. Why should it be an affliction to labor in any field for the salvation of souls for whom Christ died? Christ did not consider it an affliction to suffer and die for the salvation of lost souls. Any man that will sneer at a preacher because he thinks that he is sent to a hard field, is unworthy of the least position in the church of God. From the name you would suppose that there was something sweet here. We very often use this word to signify purity. In this sense we are not deprived of sweetness. We have pure water which, through its motion, is made purer than that which falls immediately from the heavens. We have pure air. Though the earth is not kissed by the rolling waters from the Gulf, better far are the spicy breezes that invigorate our mortal frame. Last, but not least, we have some pure souls that have been purified by the Holy Spirit. They are living in a healthy atmosphere. We have surveyed the ground, and we are not discouraged at all. We hope to be able to report more by and by.

WILSON MOORE, P. C.

The Lottery.

A Lottery Roorback.

A dispatch from Bismarck, North Dakota, states that a bill will pass the Legislature of that State by which the Louisiana Lottery Company is to be transferred bodily to that State. The special says that Gov. Miller will veto the measure, but the boodle of the lottery men has got in its fine work, and the Legislature is so thoroughly bought up that it will pass the measure over the governor's veto. If this is true, we pity the poor, little State of Dakota, and would suggest that it change its name to Howard. We are disposed, however, to regard it as a roorback intended to whip the recalcitrant members of the Louisiana Legislature into harness by threatening them with the loss of that concern. It has long enough been a blot upon the escutcheon of Louisiana, and if it "gets its back up" and leaves the State, hag and baggage, out of pure spite, we, at least, shall not shed a tear over its departure, however much others may bewail its loss. The people of this State are not yet prepared to turn the State over to this company, and its shameful traffic in votes admonishes us that one of two things is inevitable—either the lottery must go, or the State government must prepare to turn its whole machinery over into the hands of this grasplug concern.

We can't believe that we are to get rid of this incubus without a struggle. The news is too good to be true. We believe the State has a desperate fight on its hands to overthrow the monster; but if true, then we say, Speed its departure!—Acadia Sentinel.

Another Blow at Lotteries.

On the twentieth instant, Gen. H. H. Bingham, of this city, introduced in the House a bill to amend the statutes relative to lotteries so as to prohibit the transmission through the mails of any circular or letter concerning lotteries, under penalties ranging from $100 to $300 and imprisonment for mailing such letters or circulars. The postmaster general is to be authorized to cause the return of letters addressed to lottery companies and forbid the payment of money orders to the same.

If this bill is passed, as it should be, enforced, it will be a staggering blow to the Louisiana Lottery Company, a concern that has defied all efforts to suppress it. Gen. Bingham is chairman of the Committee on Postoffices and Postroads, and will undoubtedly push his bill to an early passage.—Philadelphia Herald.

The Christian Mirror estimates that the lottery business draws from the State of Maine $600,000 annually, a larger sum than the entire amount expended in the liquor traffic, which the best people of the State are fighting with all the legal and moral forces at their command. And the instances of the amount of this business done in Portland, and among the employees in single factories, seem to justify this estimate. The lottery business is hardly less damaging and demoralizing than the liquor business. And these statements ought to move citizens to urge upon their representatives in Congress the enactment of the bill recently introduced giving postmasters greater authority to keep lottery letters and circulars out of the mails; for if that could be done, the miserable swindle would be practically suppressed.—Congregationalist.

LOTTERY TICKETS IN KANSAS.—Attorney General Kellogg has addressed a letter to the governor in reply to the question whether the sale of lottery tickets in Kansas was legal, saying that the organic law of the State forbids the sale of lottery tickets, but that the law was practically a dead letter because the statutes attached no penalty to the offense. He said further that the proprietors of newspapers who printed lottery advertisements might be punished under the law by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not less than thirty days or more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Rev. Sam P. Jones closed in New Orleans, January 26. The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE speaks of him and the meeting in glowing terms. He gave all forms of sin a fearful rasping, but the lottery got its full share. He speed the day when that pauperizing evil shall be wiped out of the earth, for while its headquarters are in Louisiana, its vile effects are felt all over the country, North, South, East and West.—Way of Life.

The Louisiana Conference, at its late session, tackled that octopus known as the "Louisiana State Lottery" in such a way that, if it in any adequate degree represents the public sentiment of the State, and we believe it does, promises its speedy extinction. The surest way to stop a nuisance or crime depending on political patronage is to cut off the votes? When the liquor traffic dies it will be for want of votes.—Los Angeles Christian Advocate.

The Louisiana State Lottery is like a big vampire bat, which has fastened its beak sticking deep into your jugular vein, sneaking out your life's blood while fanning you with its wings.—Rev. Sam Jones.

LESSON IX.—March 2.

JESUS AT NAZARETH.

Luke iv, 16-32.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He came unto his own, and his own received him not.—John i, 11.

TIME.—A. D. 27.

PLACE.—Nazareth, the home of Jesus during boyhood, youth, and early manhood.

RULERS.—Pilate in Judea, and Herod in Galilee.

16. And he came to Nazareth—This is probably the visit related in unchronological order in Matt. xiii, 53-58; Mark vi, 1-6, since after so violent and decisive a rejection as St. Luke narrates, it is unlikely that he should have preached at Nazareth again. Into the synagogue—The article shows that the little village only possessed a single synagogue. Synagogues had sprung up throughout Judea since the return from the exile. They were rooms of which the end pointed toward Jerusalem (the Kibleh, or consecrated direction of Jewish worship—Dan. vi, 10) as Mecca is of Mohammedan. The men sat on one side, the veiled women behind a lattice on the other. The chief furniture was the ark of painted wood, generally shrouded by a curtain, and containing the Thorah (Pentateuch), and rolls of the prophets. On one side was a bema for the reader and preacher, and there were "chief seats" (Mark xii, 39) for the ruler of the synagogue and the elders. The servants of the synagogue were the clerk (chazzan), verger, and deacons. Stood up for to read—The custom was to read the Scripture standing. There was no recognized or ordained ministry for the synagogues. The functions of priest and Levites were confined to the temple, and the various officers of the synagogue were more like our churchwardens. Hence it was the custom of the rulers or elders to invite any one to read or preach who was known to them as a distinguished or competent person.

17. There was delivered unto him—Literally, there was further handed to him. The expression means that after he, or another, had read the Parashah, or first lesson, which was always from the Pentateuch, the clerk handed to him the roll of Isaiah, which contained the Haphtarah, or second lesson. When he had opened the book—The sacred writings used to this day in Jewish synagogues are written on skins of hasil parchment, or vellum, sewed end to end, and rolled on two rollers, beginning at each end; so that in reading from right to left they roll off with the left while they roll on with the right. He found the place where it was written—Isa. lxi, 1, 2. The quotation is here freely taken by the evangelist from the Septuagint, possibly from memory, and with reminiscences, intentional or otherwise, of other passages.

18. Recovering of sight to the blind—Here the Septuagint differs from the Hebrew, which has "opening of prison to the bound." Perhaps this is a reminiscence of Isa. lxii, 7. To set at liberty them that are bruised—This also is not in Isa. lxi, 1, but is a free reminiscence of the Septuagint in lviii, 6. Either the text of the Hebrew was then slightly variant, or the record introduces into the text a reminiscence of the discourse.

19. The acceptable year—The primary allusion is to the year of jubilee; but this was only a type of the true jubilee of Christ's kingdom. The meaning of this entire prophetic citation may be better seen when we remember that it stands in the middle of the third great division of the book of Isaiah (chaps. xlix to lxvi); that, namely, which comprises the prophecies of the person, office, sufferings, triumph, and church of the Messiah; and thus by implication announces the fulfillment of all that went before in him who then addressed them.

20. He closed the book—Rather, rolling up. Generally the Haphtarah consists of twenty-one verses, and it is never less than three; but our Lord stopped short in the second verse, because this furnished sufficient text for his discourse, and because he wished these gracious words to rest last on their ears, rather than the following words, "the day of vengeance of our God." The minister—The officer whose duty it was to keep the sacred books. Sat down—The chair near the place from which the lesson was read was the pulpit of the rabbi, and to sit in that chair was an assumption by our Lord of the preacher's functions.

21. He began to say unto them—That is, these were his first words. Merely the substance of a more expanded discourse.

22. Gracious words—Rather, words of grace. The word grace does not here mean mercy or favor, but beauty and attractiveness. This verse and John vii, 46, are the chief proofs that there was in our Lord's utterance an irresistible majesty and sweetness. And they said, Is not this Joseph's son—The Jews, in their synagogues, did not sit in silence, but were accustomed to give full expression to their feelings, and to discuss and make remarks aloud. In the very pathos of the blessed orator in this synagogue there was a point in which they could find offense. The very grace and mercy assumed that it was they who needed it, and he who was to bestow it. Their rude pride could not brook two such haughty and humbling assumptions from this Carpenter to them. The village beggarly pride of the Nazarenes can not at all comprehend the humility of the great One. Between this verse and the next the taking offense at him is implied, for that is in a tone of reproof.

23. Physician, heal thyself—The same taunt was addressed to our Lord on the cross. Here it seems to have more than one application, meaning, "If you are the Messiah why are you so poor and humble?" or, "Why do you not do something for us here in your own home?" Whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum—Jesus had performed the first miracle at Cana, and may well have wrought others during the stay of "not many days" mentioned in John ii, 12. Capernaum was so completely the head-quarters of his ministry as to be known as "his own city."

24. Is accepted in his own country—St. Matthew adds (xiii, 57,) "and in his own house," implying that "neither did his brethren believe on him." This curious psychological fact, which has its analogy in the worldly proverbs that "No man is a hero to his valet," and "Familiarity breeds contempt," was more than once referred to by our Lord.

25. Many widows were in Israel—So far from trying to flatter them, he tells them that his work is not to be for their special benefit or glorification, but that he had now passed far beyond the limitations of earthly relationships. Three years and six months—Such was the Jewish tradition, as we see also in Jas. v, 17.

26. Save unto Sarepta—That is, "but he was sent to Sarepta." Zarephath (1. Kings xvii, 9) was a Phœnician town near the coast between Tyre and Sidon, now called Sarafend.

28. Were filled with wrath—Perceiving the purpose of his discourse, namely, that the blessing which they despised would be offered to and accepted by the Gentiles. So changeable are the hearts of wicked men! So unable are they to bear the close application even of the discourse which they most admire!

29. The brow of the hill whereon their city was built—The "whereon" refers to the hill, not to the brow. Nazareth nestles under the southern slopes of the hill. The cliff down which they wished to hurl him (because this was regarded as a form of "stoning," the legal punishment for blasphemy) was certainly not the so-called "Mount of Precipitation," which is two miles distant, and, therefore, more than a Sabbath day's journey, but one of the rocky escarpments of the hill, and possibly that above the Maroute Church, which is about forty feet high.

30. Went his way—Probably never to return again. Nazareth lies in a secluded valley out of the ordinary route between Genuesareth and Jerusalem. If after thirty sinless years among them they could reject him, clearly they had not known the day of their visitation.

31. Came down to Capernaum—It is most probable that our Lord made his abode, and that of his family, at Capernaum from the time of his return from the baptism and temptation; and his presence at Nazareth, as detailed in the text, seems to have been only a visit, for it is not named as "his own city," but rather the place where he had been brought up.

32. His word was with power—He assumed the tone of a new lawgiver, and uttered his doctrines, not as exhortations or advice, but in the form of precepts and commands, the unction of the Holy Spirit accompanying all he said.

Missionary.

New Missionary Methods Needed.

I have been long impressed with the conviction that we need fresher and more vigorous methods in our missionary operations, and that as a church we are very far from measuring up to our responsibilities and possibilities. This is called the missionary age of the world, and yet all Christendom has barely a picket line confronting the hosts of heathendom. Two-thirds of the human race have as yet not even heard of the gospel. In China alone, there are nearly as many disciples of Buddha and Confucius, as there are Christians in the world. You could stand in this land of the dragon and let her vast population march by you single file for ten hours a day and 365 days a year, and if you should speak to and shake hands with each one, giving to each only one minute of time, you would be more than eighteen centuries older when the last one had passed. Yet with the purse of the world in our hands, we have only about a thousand missionaries laboring among these millions, who represent nearly one-third of the human race. Twelve centuries ago, Buddhism sent 3,000 missionaries there, and they captured all that vast empire for the religion of the Indian sage and reformer.

In the Soudan, there are 100,000,000 people who have never heard of Christ, and they represent only a portion of the swarming population of Africa. In the great university at Cairo, I saw seven acres of turbans studying the Koran, and these nine or ten thousand young men were all preparing for Mohammedan propagandism among the nations of the Soudan and of the valley of the Congo. What is the Christian Church doing in that vast region? Bishop Taylor is leading a devoted little band; there are a few isolated stations here and there, and beyond this all Christendom, with the resources of the world at her command, is absolutely doing nothing. Christian nations to-day practically rule the world. They have under their dominion more Mohammedans than the Sultan, more Brahmans than the Rajahs, and, leaving out China, more Buddhists than in all heathendom. Yet with the marvelous subsidence of obstacles and the open doors which this means, we are only playing at missions. Where the church is sending reconnoitering bands, she should be sending an invading, conquering army to occupy till Christ comes to his own. Where we give pennies, we should give pounds; where tens, hundreds; where hundreds, thousands; where thousands, millions. With the scepter, the sword and the purse of the world in the hands of Christian nations, they should likewise have the aggressive, conquering, transforming energy which would speedily bring the world to Christ. It has been truly said that while the heathens have all the needs, Christian nations have all the supplies.

It is my conviction that every church which supports a pastor at home should support a missionary in the foreign field. In this country, there is one preacher for every 800 of the population; in the heathen countries there is only one missionary to every 500,000 of the population. Think of only two preachers of the gospel in Arkansas, or of only 120 in all the United States, and you have some idea of the proportion of messengers of the gospel to the vast heathen world. The annual expenditures of the Protestant Church members in the United States for religious purposes of every description at home are about eighty millions of dollars, while for foreign missions the amount is about four millions of dollars. While the need is six hundred times greater in the heathen world, we spend twenty times as much in our work at home. This eighty millions is expended for the evangelization of sixty millions of people, at least one-third of whom are members of Christian Churches—an average of one dollar and thirty-three cents each—while the four millions are expended for the Christianizing of eleven hundred millions of heathens, an average of one-third of a cent each.

Will the world ever be converted at this rate? Will God hold a church guiltless which is contented with this day of small things? The Earl of Shaftshury says: "During the latter part of these (eighteen) centuries it has been in the power of those who hold the truth, having means enough, having knowledge enough, and having opportunities enough to evangelize the globe fifty times over." Hear the dying words of a veteran missionary, Simeon H. Calhoun: "It is my deep conviction, and I say it again and again, that if the church of Christ were what she ought to be, twenty years would not pass away till the story of the cross would be uttered in the ears of every living man."

If these declarations be true, and I do not doubt them, how shall the Christian men and women of America meet their risen Lord and Master who left as his last command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—M. B. Chapman, in Arkansas Methodist.

Temperance.

Wesley and Temperance.

Rev. D. Burns, D. D., has just published in England a "History of the Temperance Movement." In reviewing it, the Methodist Recorder says:

While Dr. Burns acknowledges that John Wesley did something as a pioneer of the movement, we do not think that he accords to him his true position in relation to it. He says: "The rule of Wesley against selling or using any ardent spirits, except as a medicine, had been incorporated into the constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church at its organization in 1784." But he does not seem to be aware that rule has always stood in the code by which all our societies are regulated, and that it has never been rescinded. He does not seem to be aware that in Mr. Wesley's day that rule was strictly enforced, and that it was the practice then to exclude from the society those persons who were known to break it. Dr Burns traces the commencement of the modern temperance reform to those anti-spirit-drinking societies which began to be formed in the United States about the year 1826. We should go back to the constitution of the Methodist Society in 1739, or soon after. The Rules date, it is true, from May, 1743; but the Rule concerning spirituous liquors was evidently acted upon before this: for in Mr. Wesley's Journal, under the date March 12, 1743, we find that among sixty-four persons who were expelled from the society at Newcastle, two were excluded for "retailing spirituous liquors." Nothing can be stronger than Mr. Wesley's language concerning the traffic in ardent spirits in his fiftieth sermon, which is one of those which constitute the standards of our doctrine. In his tract, entitled "Thoughts on the Present Scarcity of Provisions," he attacked the practice of distilling as being the cause of the destruction of bread-corn, and exposed with ruthless logic the economical fallacy of defending the liquor traffic on the ground of its being necessary to the revenue.

Mr. Wesley's true relation to the temperance movement has been obscured by the sad chapter in our history, which Dr. Burns tells in a very kind manner, when some of the leaders of our church put themselves into strong antagonism to it. And indeed, in this country, Methodism, as a body, has not yet thrown itself into the movement with the zeal which might have been expected from the teachings of its founder. Still, there can be no doubt that Mr. Wesley's teachings prepared the soil for the subsequent rapid development of the movement when it began to take a definite form. Some of its first apostles were members of our society, and the greatest triumphs now are in places where Methodism is strong; as for instance, in the United States, Canada and Cornwall. By and by, when the full truth about the modern temperance reformation comes to be known, the historian will have to say that John Wesley was its pioneer.

Peculiar

Te itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, D. D.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1890.

According to previous announcement, Dr. B. Carradine preached to a large audience, last Sunday morning, on the Louisiana State Lottery. We had the privilege of listening to the sermon, and characterize it as a powerful arraignment of that wicked abomination. It carried the conviction that there is nothing in all this land so monstrous in the ruin it effects.

Present-Day Heroes.

It is a curious propensity of our common human nature to consider the present as "degenerate days." We are a little prone to look upon ourselves as the "degenerate sons of nobler sires," and to consider our work as unworthy to be compared with the heroic deeds of our fathers. Very few of us can see through the glamour of the past clearly enough to discover the tameness of the every-day life of our ancestors. The real fact of the case is, that the every day life of the past has not been recorded by the historic muse. She has only written down the exploits—the extraordinary doings—for our edification. The histories of the world, for the most part, are simply the records of the doings of kings and governments, while the every-day life of the people has no historian to sing its praise. We are, therefore, acquainted only with the heroism of the past and only with the tame life of the present. Hence, when we compare the one with the other, we come to the conclusion that "the former days were better than these." But, in making this comparison, we bring two things together which we ought to keep separate, and hence make the same mistake which some of Solomon's friends made. If we would bring the heroic deeds of to-day in comparison with the heroic deeds of the past, we would soon see that judgment would not all be with the past. The present has its heroes, and their deeds will compare with those of any age. The church has its heroes to-day, and they are just as grand men and women as any period ever produced, and their work is as heroic and noble as any history can show. They are moving under the eye of God and under the superintendence of his gracious providence to the accomplishment of things which would have been impossible in any other period of the world's history.

This train of thought was suggested by the following paragraph from a private letter of a presiding elder, which shows that there are yet men who can do duty without flinching and thank God for the privilege. The brother says: "I rode twenty-four miles last Friday in the rain, held Quarterly Conference with the preacher alone, and ferried two women, two boys, a little girl and a babe across a swollen stream on the rear back of my horse; then preached Saturday and held Conference; preached twice on Sunday, and rode home thirty-one miles on Monday. I do thank the Lord for strength to do my work, and pray that it may be of some use to his kingdom." Who says the heroes all belong to a past age? It is not so.

From the Alabama Christian Advocate we learn that the Methodists of Birmingham are preparing to build a $100,000 church in that city. We are glad to know that the Advocate has moved them in this direction at last.

A Low-Church Declaration of Independence.

At the recent installation of Dr. Lyman Abbott as the successor of Henry Ward Beecher in the pastorate of Plymouth Church, there were invited guests from the several leading Christian denominations. Dr. Thomas Armitage represented the Baptist; Dr. George E. Reed, the Methodist Episcopal; Dr. Charles E. Robinson, the Presbyterian; Dr. Wesley R. Davis, the Reformed; and Drs. Donald and Phillips Brooks, the Protestant Episcopal.

After statements of belief by Dr. Abbott and his assistant, Rev. Howard Bliss, addresses were made by the invited guests. The most significant utterances were by the Episcopal brethren. Both came out boldly in recognition of the ministerial character and authority of ministers in other churches. Phillips Brooks, the foremost Episcopal minister in the American pulpit, and renowned no less for his broad catholicity than for his power and eloquence as a preacher, spoke words of warm, brotherly congratulation to Dr. Abbott and to the Plymouth congregation. If the Boston divine lived in this latitude, and had less influence, he would be taught a different attitude toward the "warring sects."

Rev. E. W. Donald, rector of the Church of the Ascension, made the notable speech of the occasion. Some sentences will be enjoyed by our readers too much accustomed to a narrow, stilted high-churchism equally devoid of power and piety. Mr. Donald said:

There are some of us in the Episcopalian Church whose utterances in regard to the relation of the ministry of the several churches have been found such that we have often been taunted with their being mere words, that there was not the reality of action. I was, therefore, exceedingly glad when I got an invitation from Plymouth Church to honorary membership in the council, which was not only to install, but was to ordain. For I said to myself, there will be one man, at least, whose utterances in his own pulpit, and on his own platform, and in the press, can be put to the test of reality; and I come here, therefore, not as the representative of a church, but as an Episcopalian minister, to wish Godspeed to Dr. Abbott and to Mr. Bliss, as they begin the work of the Christian ministry in Plymouth Church.

I wish it distinctly understood that my brother and myself, who are here to-day, are not here in defiance of the ecclesiastical authorities of the diocese of Massachusetts or the diocese of New York. We came openly to the council. We are here openly: and we are ready to meet any competent authority which is pleased to inquire into our right to be here, and extend as Christian ministers our greetings to other Christian ministers. . . . I want to say in the most explicit terms, in words that by no means can be twisted into something that they do not mean, that I stand as an Episcopalian minister and High-Churchman, if you please to call me so, and I extend to Dr. Abbott and Mr. Bliss my greetings as ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ in every respect spiritually competent to preach the Word of God and to administer the two sacraments which alone belong to the church.

And he said other things of like import, but the above is sufficient. In what marked contrast are such sentiments to the utterances of a certain "Rt. Reverend," who likened other churches, in authority, to baseball teams, and said he had no more respect for baptism administered by non-Episcopal ministers than for his morning bath. A few Donalds in the Southern parallels would give influence and strength to the Episcopal Church. But it can never hope to succeed by travesties on Christian charity, and the endless repetition of "a fable that hasn't the merit of being cunningly devised."

The Sixth Restrictive Rule.

A good deal is being written about the Sixth Restrictive Rule in our Church Constitution. We are reading all we see on the subject; sometimes with amusement, sometimes with amazement. We verily believe that some people are writing about this rule, and they really don't know what the rule is, or else they twist plain English words to mean what no Englishman would ever discover in them. Some writers are making a great "hue and cry" about some of the Advocates being opposed to distributing the proceeds of the Publishing House to the widows and orphans and superannuates, and inveighing against those papers and attributing to their editors very unworthy motives. We are sure that no one of these editors has written a word against the Conference claimants. They all think as much of them and do as much for them as any on the other side of the question. They have written, as they verily believe, in the best interest of that class of worthy people. They see an imminent danger to their welfare in the distribution of the proceeds of the House for their support. At least, they ought to have credit, with every Christian, to that effect. To rail at men because they have opinions of their own and speak them out, is a very feeble argument for the other side. If we are accounted Christian men, we ought to have credit for sincerity in expressing our opinions, or our insincerity ought to be proven. We believe the present policy, if pursued, will ruin the collection for Conference claimants. That collection is now increasing year by year; but let it be understood that a large dividend from the House is appropriated for the support of these claimants, and we believe it will fall off year by year. When that occurs, then one unprosperous year in the business of the House will bring unspeakable calamity to our superannuates and widows. And who can guarantee every year to be a prosperous one? We say, We had better depend upon the collection for the support of these worthy people.

There is another phase. We really believe that some who have written on this subject have not read that Sixth Restrictive Rule lately. The rule is this, in the Discipline of 1886: "They shall not appropriate the produce of the Publishing House to any purpose other than for the benefit of the traveling, supernumerary, superannuated and worn-out preachers, their wives, widows and children." From the reading of this rule we do not see how the "produce" of the House can be distributed to the widows and orphans and superannuates exclusively without violating the rule itself. The rule makes no discrimination in favor of that class. The traveling preacher and the supernumerary are placed on the same level with the superannuate and the widow. To say that the latter class is more needy is hardly true. There are many brave itinerants doing duty unflinchingly and uncomplainingly on less money per member of their families than some of our superannuates now receive. We do not say this because we grudge the superannuates and widows the little shameful pittance the church doles out to them through her Boards of Finance, but to emphasize the fact that all the needy men are not on the superannuate list, and if anybody is to be assisted by the "produce" of the House, the needy ones among the itinerants and supernumeraries should, in justice, have their share. It is clear to us that any distribution of the "produce" of the House which discriminates between the classes named in the rule is a violation of the rule. In other words, the distribution of the funds exclusively to superannuates and widows and children is unconstitutional. A church that willfully violates its own Constitution is in a pitiable plight! Better change the rule than violate it!

Studying the Problem.

Our readers will remember that we gave them last week some extracts from a letter of Dr. Parkhurst, editor of Zion's Herald, written from Washington City. The Doctor is traveling in the South to study the race problem. He took his first lesson in Washington. His second lesson he received in Atlanta, Ga. From the following extract from a letter to his own paper, written from Atlanta, we judge that the Doctor is learning quite fast; even faster than we anticipated. Hear him on the problem:

It becomes more difficult, oppressive and threatening. It is many-sided. We do not at the North understand all its difficulties. Its solution is not easy. A theory is quickly fashioned to be as quickly overturned by facing the most stubborn facts. We have expected too much in too brief a time. Much, incalculably much, good has been done, but more must be accomplished to secure to the colored race their natural and constituted rights, and to elevate them to a proper use of the same.

We must still act the reporter. Georgia is very Southern. The press is hopelessly Southern. In this city the Constitution—the paper founded by Henry W. Grady—is the gospel for the masses. There is no frank and honest expression of Northern sentiment and ideas in the press, the great educator of the people.

The prejudice against color here is deep and bitter. The Constitution of the State provides that the black shall not be educated with the white. The black people do not worship with the white. Even the Young Men's Christian Association of the city does not welcome the colored man to its hall and religious services. The Methodist Episcopal Church tried the experiment of co-worship here, and abandoned it. We are told that the colored man prefers to worship with his own people, and colored ministers in our own denomination generally so affirm. There are thirty thousand colored people in the city; one-third of the voters are colored, but not a man of that race is elected to office, or appointed to police service.

"Georgia is very Southern." "The press is hopelessly Southern." These are discoveries the good Doctor has made which seem to be a genuine surprise to him. Another discovery is that even in his own church the experiment of the blacks and whites worshiping together had to be abandoned. "The colored ministers in our own denomination affirm that the colored man prefers to worship with his own people." Verily, if Editor Parkhurst continues long in the South, and keep his eyes open, he will learn the fearful fact that if his church don't quit "fooling" the colored people with false promises, those same colored people will pick up bag and baggage and go over in a body to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. The distrust and dissatisfaction are growing deeper every day, and here and there we hear of defections from the "Mother Church." The colored man will wait a long time for the fulfillment of promises; but even he will get disgusted afterwhile. The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church offers him what he seeks from the "Mother Church," and if she continues to put him off, as in the past, there will be an exodus that will show our Northern brethren a new phase of the character of our "brother in black."

A writer in the New York Examiner classes the Baptists in Georgia as "missionary, anti-missionary and omissionary." It seems to us that is a pretty good classification of some Methodists we know of.

Poor Economy.

If we may judge by the experience of other churches, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is on the wrong line in her missionary work. We had one missionary secretary away back in the forties. We had one when the war began. Four years we had two, but only while we were running on a double track—home missions and foreign missions. When we returned to the one-Board plan we held on to our one secretary. For what we were then doing, one secretary, it may be, was enough. There was a time—a long time—when our church had only two representatives in the heathen world. Immortal honor to Lambuth and Allen, who held for us a place among missionary churches with "a name to live!"

But now we have Mission Conferences. China, Brazil, Mexico (two of them, the Central and Border) have Conferences. Japan will have a Conference presently. Where we had in 1870 two men we now count by the score. We now have more in any one mission field than we had in all. The correspondence in 1890 in our Mission Rooms is now ten times as much as all the work that was to be done twenty years ago. I know of but one reason for continuing this policy—saving a little money.

Time was when Durbin could manage the mission work of our Northern sister (who puts on airs now and then as "mother"); but several Durbins could not manage that work now. How many hundred times over has Chaplain McCabe earned his salary? What of a plea for "saving a salary" that might have ruled him out?

We ought to have four secretaries: one in the office, three in the field. How wide it is now. Study our map. From Maryland to Texas one way; from Florida to Washington Territory another; to say nothing of Cuba, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, China; by and by Africa. One field secretary in the Atlantic Coast Conferences might find enough work to kill him. Another might use himself up among the Conferences on either side of the Mississippi. Another might need the time and strength of two men in the Pacific and Northwestern Conferences.

"At the present rate, it would take $10,000 for salaries, to say nothing of traveling expenses," says the economy that only knows how to save. True enough; but four fit men, with enthusiasm, sense and faith, would increase our collections $100,000 the first year. By 1894, bring them above the half-million line; by 1900, to a round million. If it required twice $10,000 to keep four fit men in this work, it would be economy to do it. We have been playing at missions long enough. Our present plan is an anachronism. As well try to make the one-horse street-car in New York do the work of the elevated railroads, as to make a plan that was inadequate forty years ago meet our wants to-day.

ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD.

SHEFFIELD, Ala.

Worldliness in the Pulpit.

The St. Louis Advocate, enumerating the "symptoms" of worldliness in the church, gives the following as "symptoms" of worldliness in the pulpit:

Worldly symptoms may be in the pulpit as well as in the pew. They may be in the sermon as malignantly as in business. They may rankle in the preacher in as deadly a form as in the hearer. They may be in the preaching in a more pernicious way than in cards or money making.

Worldly symptoms in the pulpit are shown in ignoring or condoning the worldliness in the church, shown by special sympathy and affinities for the fashionable, the influential and the rich, a deference to social position, with special efforts to attract and please this class. Worldly symptoms in the pulpit are seen in the manner and make-up of the sermon, its artistic taste, its literary trend, its purpose to please. Sensation is worldly, most of the fine preaching is worldly. The failing to have a large ingredient of the "reprove, rebuke and exhort" in a sermon gives it a worldly flavor. The failing to be instant, as Paul directs, that is, leaving out the pressing, pungent, personal element, for instant means to come in upon them, the failing to do this in season and out of season gives a smack of worldliness to the sermon. The toning down truth to suit the tastes of the congregation is a worldly symptom of a grievous form. The failure to rebuke worldliness in the pew in an arraigning and convicting form is to be worldly. If the pulpit has any alloy of self, any desire for reputation, any desire for money, popularity, or praise, it is to that degree worldly, for these are unmistakable symptoms of worldliness.

Notes.

Our pastor uttered a most solemn truth when he said, "When a man dies he takes two things away with him; the memories of the past and the character he has devoloped." Did you ever think of that before?

A judge in Alabama was impeached for drunkenness before the Supreme Court of that State, and put out of office. It might be well to try the same medicine in other places. A drunkard on the bench administering justice! Bah!

The grand jury of Chicago made a point against somebody when in their report they said, "Gambling would instantly and entirely stop in Chicago, if the city administration so desired." Is not the same thing true of all other cities and towns?

Dr. Lafferty gets off some good things. One of his latest is as good as the best. Speaking of church members, he says, "The non-subscriber to the church paper is a dead-beat in the church." Brother pastor, are there any "dead-beats" in your section of the "moral heritage"?

The New York Sun, speaking of Boston's art works in public places, says:

Boston has some of the queerest of known works of "art" set up in her public places. She has statues and monuments that make strong men grin. In fact, if that eminent statuary, the late Mr. Phidias, could visit the modern Athens and gaze upon its statues, he would succumb to apoplexy and die again in his sorrow and surprise.

Our two Conferences in Kentucky are preparing to celebrate the Centenary of Kentucky Methodism. The committees appointed by the Conferences to arrange the details of the celebration have decided to have the first celebration at or near Lexington, May 15, and the second, at Russellville, at a date hereafter to be named. We understand that our friend, Dr. S. Halsey Werlein, of St. Louis, is to be one of the speakers.

The (Wesleyan) Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund has aided in the erection of nearly eighty large chapels, and the enlargement of several others; has expended nearly £200,000, and is under obligation to expend £50,000 more. When the fund was established there were but sixteen chapels that would seat above 900 persons each in London—such chapels being designated "commodious." In twenty-seven years this "commodious" chapel accommodation of London, provided in the previous 120 years, has increased nearly six-fold. This fund was established mainly through the far-seeing sagacity of Rev. Wm. Arthur. The initiative was with him, though the late Sir Francis Lycett and Sir William McArthur were its largest pecuniary supporters, and every way its firmest friends. "No fund—not all the other funds of our church put together—has contributed so much to the advancement of Methodism in the metropolis as this fund."—Zion's Herald.

Some of our rich Methodists in this city might "lay up treasure in heaven" by following the example of those London Methodists. Why not inaugurate a chapel building fund?

The Theological Department of Vanderbilt University is in a more flourishing condition than it has been at any time since its organization. It has fifty-five students enrolled this year. College education is required as a condition of entrance upon the theological course of study. Twenty-five Southern colleges and nearly all the Conferences of the church are represented among its students. The ten free scholarships, of $100 each, are awarded this year to students from the following institutions: Randolph-Macon, Emory and Henry, Trinity, University of North Carolina, Wofford, Centenary, Southwestern University, Central, Kentucky Wesleyan and Vanderbilt University (Academic Department). Five of these scholarships are held by sons of preachers. Many of the students are looking to the foreign missionary work. Three of the present graduating class will enter the foreign field.

The Lottery at Work.

We warn our readers that it won't do to intermit their work in opposition to the lottery. The oft-repeated adage, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," can not be urged too strongly at this juncture of the fight. We, therefore, exhort our friends to keep their eyes open. The Lottery is not going to surrender. It will fight to the bitter end. Already the company is making preparation for the most desperate struggle that unclean money can carry on. Their funds are being distributed about over the State. They have already deposited $25,000 in an important political center in the northern part of the State, to be used, no doubt, to corrupt men to their interest. And, doubtless, they have done, or will do, the same thing in other places. Therefore, let every reader of the ADVOCATE wake up, and then hasten to wake up every one of his friends and neighbors. This is no time to be indifferent. Indifference will rivet our chains more firmly upon us. We have, at least, 50,000 adherents to the Methodist Church in this State; the Baptists have equally as many; the other Protestant denominations have very many; the Roman Catholics have a huge host; and all these can and ought to unite their arms in this conflict. It is a common peril. The danger is to all. We exhort our Methodist brethren to rouse up, and rouse up their friends of every name and color. The State, the Church, the social order can not survive if the Lottery survives. It is a death struggle to one side or the other. No doubt, money will be poured out like water; but the action of the North Dakota Legislature shows us that money does not always succeed. A united people determined to win are invincible. Awake! awake!

Personal and Otherwise.

We are indebted to the secretary for a copy of the Minutes of the fifty-seventh session of the Alabama Conference.

Rev. J. L. Pierce, a supernnuate of the North Georgia Conference, and son of Dr. Lovick Pierce, died recently in Texarkana, Ark.

New subscribers are coming in quite rapidly. Let every preacher and every layman and all the good sisters cooperate in the work of extending the circulation of the ADVOCATE.

Fifty thousand copies of Miss Willard's "Glimpses" have been issued from the press.

Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward" passed 300,000 copies during January, selling at the rate of a thousand copies a day.

Our friend, the Southwestern Presbyterian, has changed its form from a five-column to a six-column quarto, standard measure, and has in this new form entered upon its twenty-second year of usefulness. We wish it many more years of faithful labor in the Master's vineyard.

The Western Christian Advocate says:

We can not resist the impression that our theological schools will prescribe the type of American Methodism; and that with too many of the students there is a disposition to effect the Establishment and to regard the ministry as a profession.

Then let the professors take that affectation out of the "young gentlemen of the cloth."

The women are still coming to the front! A Mrs. Haines has been elected president of a railroad company in Texas, having received the unanimous vote of the directors.

In the discussion of the Lottery and the North Dakota Legislature in the telegrams, M. A. Dauphin, the Lottery agent in this city, is made to say that only three per cent. of the receipts are from Louisiana! Are we not right, then, in calling upon people outside of our State to help us in this warfare upon this monster?

Bishop Hurst has taken the initiative in the establishment of a Methodist University at the National Capital. The Bishop says he expects aid and encouragement from all the Protestant denominations.

It is said that the State Treasurer of North Dakota offered Gov. Miller $10,000 if he would sign the Lottery bill. Money can't buy everybody.

The German Saengerfest, held in this city, was attended by thousands of people. The singing was exceptionally good, some of the finest music in the world being rendered.

Think of the Dakota people, impoverished by failure of crops, and destitution staring them in the face, yet indignantly spurning the bribe of the Lottery gamblers. That's what Louisianians ought to do!

Ex-President Cleveland has connected himself with the Central Presbyterian Church in New York City.

Bro. Cooper, presiding elder of the Seashore district, is confined to his bed with la grippe. He is improving, however, and will resume his work as early as it is prudent to do so.

It is said that the news of the recognition of the new government in Brazil by our country created a "delirious enthusiasm" among the Brazilians.

Some Dakotans Speak.

The attempt to fasten the Lottery upon the people of North Dakota raised a perfect storm of indignation among the better class. The ministers and good people of Fargo and vicinity addressed a "pointed appeal to the conscience and honor and sense of public decency in the people of the State," in which they say:

We find it difficult to properly express our amazement at the effrontery of this conspiracy to saddle upon our new State the scandal and disgrace of adopting and legalizing that infamy of national notoriety; that it is with shame and confusion of face that we hear of this degradation to the manhood of our Legislature, that such a scheme could receive serious consideration by them or any self-respecting body; that in behalf of an outraged constituency and a scandalized public sentiment, in behalf of public honor, in the name of religion and morality, and in the name of the Christian Churches of North Dakota, we hereby enter our protest against this infamous proposition, and we call upon all good citizens to add their protest to ours against the sale of North Dakota to a fraternity of gamblers; that in our best judgment this scheme, if successful, would tend to endanger business interests and to drive away from us the very elements of population the most desirable, and in the end seriously cripple the growth of the State.

That's the kind of talk we want to hear all over Louisiana. And it is beginning to echo among the hills and across the valleys. The unbought press is speaking in clarion notes, the pulpits are flashing the sword of the Spirit, the people are awaking from their long slumber and will not rest on their arms again until this monster—the Lottery—shall be driven from our State. Other people see that we are waking up.

This from the Advance, of Chicago, shows that the eyes of the world are upon us in this fight:

The respectable people in the State of Louisiana are waking up to the deep disgrace of the State-licensed Lottery Company. Many of the Christian ministers and the best of the religious newspapers have, for some time, been speaking out with a clearness, a unity, a determined earnestness that could not fail of effect. And during the past few weeks Rev. Sam Jones has been pouring the hottest kind of shot into their infamous camp of corruptionists and public thieves. There is reason to believe that the compact hitherto existing in the "State Lottery Company" and the State authorities will not long be continued. The profits of the concern are enormous, said to be not less than a million a year. Hence the lavishing of moneys in "seeing" legislators, and in silencing religious people by its large contributions to the various public charities of the city, have been shrewdly planned for effect; and all wonderfully like the "high-license" schemes for "regulating" rum shops in the North.

"A million a year," indeed! Dear Advance, the very lowest estimate we have seen of the profits of this gambling den is thirteen millions. The real fact is, you can not find out how much it is. Experts say they owe the State over three millions for taxes, which they will never pay. Will our people submit any longer?

If you want your people to have a full and correct account of the doings of the General Conference that is soon to meet, press upon them the fact that our paper will give the best account to them that they can get. Use this point in your canvass for the paper.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. John W. Chambers reports from Enterprise and Heidelberg circuit: "Prayer meetings good, class meetings revived; nine additions since Conference; people growing in grace. Hail damaged peas at Enterprise. Mumps, "la grippe," whooping cough and fevers of various kinds are causing attendance upon service to fall off. Financial prospects good. District Conference expected, and you are expected with it."

—Rev. T. B. Holloman writes from Canton, Miss.: "The new year opens up very pleasantly with us at Canton. While some of our people are leaving us to find homes in the Mississippi Valley, we still have prospect for a successful year. The new preachers in the district are all safely housed, and our faithful presiding elder reports pastors all beginning the year well. How quickly a Methodist preacher can move to his new home and adjust himself to his new surroundings! Is the like known among any other class of men? And those patient, godly wives, what crowns await them!"

—Rev. J. M. Huggin, writing from Abbeville, Miss., says: "The ladies of the Methodist Church in Abbeville, Miss., are making heroic efforts to raise money with which to build a new church. If friends of Methodism will help us, though it be but little, we will be greatly obliged. Money may be sent to me."

—Rev. W. C. Harris writes from Arcola, Miss.: "This is my sixth year in the itinerancy, and this (Arcola and Hollandale) my third pastoral charge. I have been most kindly received by the people here. Their kindness and appreciation manifested itself in a substantial way at our first quarterly meeting, which has just been held. Hoping and praying for divine guidance, we anticipate a harmonious and prosperous year."

—Rev. J. H. Calaway writes from Eden, La.: "Allow me to join Bro. Cassity, I will give two per cent. of my salary every time. Yes, sir; put me down. It seems to me that all of us could do this. God will bless us every time we give. Besides giving a tenth of our income to the cause of God in general, we can afford to give two per cent. of our salary. It will not amount to but a few dollars for some of us who have small salaries, but all put together it will amount to something. Brethren, let us do this, and God will open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing upon us."

—Rev. W. H. Sanders writes of Belzoni circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "Since my return to the Belzoni circuit I have seen most all my people, and think they gave me a hearty reception. Have been to all my appointments, and preached to as large congregations as could be expected at this time of the year. Will soon have a new church at Sidon ready for use, and are expecting to have a new church at one more place, if not at two more places. We are expecting to do big things this year; have better houses to preach in and more people to preach to. Our first quarterly meeting will be held at Belzoni on the twenty-seventh instant."

Report Called For.

We are preparing the Annual Report. Up to date we have received reports from sixteen of the Conference Boards. Will each secretary who has failed to send his report send it without delay? We sent statistical blanks to the secretary of each Conference Board, to enable us to prepare in tabulated form the statistics of our domestic missions. If in any case the blank was not received, we will send another if the secretary will send his name and address.

We wish to furnish a full and reliable report of our domestic missions.

Parsonage Fund.

We have urged our friends to secure a parsonage for Woodville district, and have secured a little over half of the money necessary, with promises for nearly the remainder needed. We now kindly ask everyone who has promised to pay; also ask help of anyone who is willing to send a dollar for this purpose. Let us neither delay nor fail when the desired end is apparently so near at hand. Respectfully,

C. MCDONALD.

A GLORIOUS FLOWER
No engraving can do justice to the unique and peerless beauty of this NEW CHRISANTHEMUM. Imagine plants completely studded with balls of flowers one foot in circumference, whose petals curve gracefully inward, and which in turn are dotted with a peculiar hairy-like growth, the whole resembling, more than anything else, masses of SNOW-WHITE OSTRICH PLUMES, and you then begin to form some idea of the beauty of this royal flower. Your garden will not be complete this season if it does not contain the "OSTRICH PLUME CHRYSANTHEMUM." (Plain and full instructions for culture with each order.)
PRICE.—For fine plants, certain to bloom, 40c. each; three plants for $1; seven plants for $2; twelve plants for $3. Free by mail.

Would they not be most likely to obtain such by buying directly from the grower? I can buy seed at half what it costs me to raise it, but could not sleep sound should I warrant seed of this class. DOES ANY ONE KNOW HIM?

Out of the street after ringing a bell or two,
Into the house with a rush and a yell or two,
Kitchenward, lured by a savory smell or two—
Dinner inspires him with joy!
Off goes his hat, with a dexterous fling to it;
Off goes the cat with a mischievous string to it;
Up starts the baby, because he will sing to it—
Any one know such a boy?

Up stairs and down stairs, a very cyclone is he;
Deep into mischief whenever alone is he;
Terror of sisters—to tease them quite prone is he;
Doing his best to annoy.
Grandmother shudders—wh n shouts he will frighten her.
Though quite as often his fond kisses brighten her;
Then, by sweet coaxing, of goodies he'll lighten her—
Any one know such a boy?

Wild with his comrades as any Comanche is;
Rough as a steer on a far western ranch he is;
Surely of mischief the root and the branch he is;
Yet there's pure gold in alloy;
Tender and true at the heart's core, though small he is;
Brave and chivalric, whatever befall, he is;
Mother's own torment and blessing through all he is—
Any one know such a boy?

Note from the Editor.

Our little cousins must be patient with us. We can not publish all the letters we receive. We have on hand now more than twenty letters. We try always to select the best, and if you want yours to appear, make it the best, and it will be published. We give you this week a letter from Mrs. Weems, one of our missionaries in Mexico, which I hope you will all read.—EDITOR.

A Missionary's Letter to Our "Cousins."

Dear Children: In this distant land there are evidences that seed sown in the heart of a little child will spring up after many years and bear precious fruit. A few days since while Mr. Weems and Bro. Watkins were in an Indian town in the Toluca Valley, they met an old man in the church, at least, seventy years of age, who related to them this story of his life:

He said, when a little boy, his father sent him to a Catholic school, and told the priest he wanted his son well educated, and wished him to study the Holy Scriptures. The priest told him a Bible would cost him sixty dollars. He said he didn't have the money, but he had five loads of corn, and he would sell it; this he did, bringing it to this city, a distance of fifty miles, to sell. It only brought him twenty-five dollars. This he carried to the priest, and tried to induce him to let him have the Book for his son. The priest refused to sell it for less than sixty dollars. The father then thought of selling two mules, but found he would not then have enough money to secure the coveted treasure, and he would deprive himself of the means of making a living. He then gave up all hope, and went to his grave without being able to secure this guide book for his son. Yet he had implanted in the mind of his child the same desire, to secure the written Word of God; but he reached his three-score years without having his desire realized. Then old Bro. Juarez—our oldest native preacher—went to his home, and, hearing him express this strong desire to see and read the Bible himself, Bro. Juarez handed him a Bible, and said, "Here take it and convert yourself." He did take it and study it, and began his Christian career. He then said, when Dr. Patterson came: "I had some money which I put into this church, now I have none; but, thank God! I can still put in these broken lights in these windows." This venerable old man stood in the middle of the church, and related this experience as he looked at the broken windows. He is finishing his journey, guided by that Word which is "a lamp to our feet, and a light to our pathway."

The thought implanted in the mind of a child by a fond father enables him now to find comfort in old age, and rest in hope of a blessed life beyond the grave.

Dear children, does not the long struggle of two men to secure for one of them the Word of Life inspire in your heart a desire to send to the poor little Mexicans this knowledge that maketh wise unto salvation?

I see the good people of Mississippi are responding to Dr. Lambuth's call, and sending him help. I rejoice at this and for him, but may not her dear children open a list in the ADVOCATE, and send a missionary to poor priest-ridden Mexico that, with a form of religion, are as surely dying in heathen ignorance and darkness as any in pagan lands? Who will respond to this call for beautiful sin-cursed Mexico? God bless you, dear children, and help you to send light into this darkened land!

S. G. WEEMS.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy eleven years of age, living near Opelousas. Did you ever visit this part of the country? If not, we give you a special invitation to come and see for yourself, if this is not the prettiest part of Louisiana. I can not write very well; and if you will give me space, I will tell you why. Last summer, one Saturday evening, five or six of us boys were playing with a jack. He got mad, lay down, and with all our efforts we could not get him up. At last he viciously clamped my arm in his powerful jaws until his teeth went through the flesh. He held me there until my brother Clayton took a stick and prized it open. I tell you, Mr. Editor, I thought I should never see my mama and papa again. Then Doc came and told me it would soon be all right; but I had to stop school, and carried my arm in a sling for a long time. I am now at the Opelousas Female Institute studying very hard, and trying to make something of myself. Can any of the little readers tell me how Christ entered into Jerusalem? Your little friend,

JESSE C. DUSON.

OPELOUSAS, La.

MR. EDITOR: I have just heard a letter read in the ADVOCATE from my little Uncle Abraham, who is at Centenary. When he left I cried to go with him. I am waiting very impatiently to get big enough (as I am only three and a half years old) to go to school to Dr. Hunnicutt, so that he may make me smart enough to prove to him that, after all, there is not much difference between a cat and a kitten. (I wonder if Dr. H. recollects our debate on that subject last summer?) I frequently ask mama and papa, when I get up in the morning, if they do not think I am big enough to go to school now, after growing eight or ten hours? I would be glad to have some of the little cousins come and ride with me, as I have a nice little wagon and goat, and he pulls fine. I am one by myself and I get lonely sometimes. I have made my letter too long, so I will stop. Papa wrote this for me; but it is just what I want him to say. Good by!

MARION H. FOSTER.

OPELOUSAS, La.

P. S.—Since writing the above I took a ride and my goat spill me. M. H. F.

MR. EDITOR: I have never seen a letter from North Louisiana, so I will write. I am a little boy ten years old. I have four sisters. My papa is a farmer; he has a fish-pond. Oh, how much sport I have with my sister fishing! We caught sixty-five the first day of February. You don't have any idea how we rejoice over our preacher coming back; he has been with us three years. His name is Mr. Barr. This will be his last year. I hope the Conference will send one who will be loved by everyone as much as he is. I read The Story of the Bible every night to my mother. I learn something of my Savior every night. I will ask the little cousins a question the next time I write.

Household.

Consult Your Wife.

Two gentlemen were talking about a business enterprise in which, though it involved some pecuniary risk, they were strongly inclined to embark. Finally one of them remarked:

"I must consult my wife before I decide."

"Why," exclaimed the other, "is she boss?"

"No," was the reply, "neither am I. We are a well-matched team; and we don't drive tandem. My wife is as much interested in the welfare of our family as I, and she has a right to have a voice in the investment of our little property."

There was nothing more than justice in this view of matrimonial obligation, especially in the case of poor, or only moderately well-to-do families, and these comprise an overwhelmingly large proportion of the families in this country, where a slight increase or diminution in the annual earnings would be felt alike by every member. The wife, who has labored in the home to earn or to save, while the husband has labored in the field, the shop, or the counting-room, is justly a partner in his earnings and savings, and should share in all plans for disposing of their small accumulations, so as to make them more productive if all goes well.—Locomotive Engineer's Journal.

HEROISM AT HOME.—How useless our lives seem to us sometimes! How we long for an opportunity to perform some great action! We become tired of the routine of home life, and imagine we would be far happier in other scenes. We think of life's great battlefield and wish to be heroes. We think of the good we might do if our lot had been cast in other scenes. We forget that the world bestows no such titles as noble as father, mother, sister or brother. In the sacred precincts of home we have many chances of heroism. The daily acts of self-denial for the good of a loved one, the gentle word of soothing for another's trouble, the care for sick, may all seem as nothing; yet who can tell the good they may accomplish? Our slightest word may have an influence over another for good or evil. We are daily sowing the seed which will bring forth some sort of harvest. Well will it be for us if the harvest will be one we will be proud to garner. If some one in that dear home can look back in after years and, as he tenderly utters our name, say: "Her words and example prepared me for a life of usefulness, to her I owe my present happiness," we may well say, "I have not lived in vain."—National Presbyterian.

Even in households where family worship is still kept up, the custom of praying for the pastor, church officers, missionaries and others who are publicly engaged in Christian work is not observed with any regularity. Occasionally, when there seems to be special need, petitions will be offered in their behalf; but the habit of praying for them is by no means common. Children can easily be trained to a prayerful interest in these classes of individuals, and, if the parent fail in his duty to teach them, Sunday-school teachers can use their influence. Some teachers have the excellent plan of appointing a given hour when all the members of the class shall retire, in their own homes, for secret prayer. They designate certain individuals and causes to be remembered at this time. Some have pretty cards printed, on which, besides the hour, are Scripture texts and fragments of appropriate hymns. A sample of one used by the teacher of a large infant class lies on our desk with these quotations:

Though sundered far by faith we meet
Around one common mercy-seat.

THE MOTHER'S HOUR.—There is a lost hour among housekeeping women, an hour which is lost in the way certain arts are—so lost, indeed, that there seems to be very little likelihood that it will ever be found. This is the "hour to herself," for which every mother of a family longs in vain. She used to know what it was to have a little time entirely her own, now and then, in the days of girlhood; but matron's duties have absorbed her life completely, and she never knows what it is to be secure from interruption, even for so short a time as is required for the writing of a letter. Very often this is her own fault, for fault it is in spite of the angelic qualities which go to make many women pack-horses of patience and long suffering in their own homes.

How Far Can We See?

There is absolutely no limit to the normal vision, if the sight be unobstructed. Yet we can see the stars, which are trillions of miles away, while we can not see a tree twenty miles distant. Why? It is true that all objects diminish in apparent size in a direct proportion to distance, but that is not the only reason. The chief reason is that our vision is obstructed by the curvature of the earth. A writer in Popular Science News gives some figures to show how great the curvature is.

It is often a matter of interest and importance to know how far we can see from any given height; or, conversely, how far one must be above the earth to see an object at a given distance. The exact calculation of these figures would require the use of very complex formulæ, but for practical use, two very simple rules will suffice: The distance in miles at which an object upon the surface of the earth is visible is equal to the square root of one and a half times the height of the observer in feet above the surface; and conversely. The height in feet to which an observer must be placed to see a distant object is equal to two-thirds the square of the distance in miles.

For instance: The observer is in the rigging of a ship one hundred feet above the water, how far distant is the horizon; that is, how far could an object floating on the water be visible before being hidden by the convexity of the earth? One and one-half times 100 is 150, and the square root of 150 is, approximately, $12\frac{1}{2}$, therefore the horizon is $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant. As the deck of the smaller vessels, like pleasure yachts, is rarely more than ten feet above the water, it follows that the limit of vision from that point is less than four miles in every direction.

An illustration of the second rule may be given as follows: A building is 33 miles away; how high a hill must one climb in order to be able to see it? As the square of the distance equals 1,089, and two-thirds of that number equals 726, it follows that we must climb a hill 726 feet high before we are able to see the building, even with the most powerful telescope.

Usually, however, the height of the object, as well as that of the observer, must be taken into consideration, but this simply requires the duplication of the problem. For instance: The Washington Monument is 552 feet high; at what height must an observer fifty miles away be in order to see the top of it? Supposing the observer to stand upon the ground, we find by the first rule that he could just see the top twenty-nine miles away, and to overcome the remaining twenty-one miles, due to the convexity of the earth, he would by rule second have to climb to the height of 294 feet.

If we apply similar calculations to the Eiffel Tower, the highest ratifical structure in the world, we obtain some interesting results. Assuming the height to be just 1,000 feet, we find that standing at the top, we enjoy a circle of vision bounded by a horizon thirty-nine miles distant, and that if another similar tower should ever be erected, it could be placed over seventy-eight miles away before the rays of the electric lights on their summits would be eclipsed by the intervening earth.

From the summit of Mount Everest in the Himalayas (27,000 feet) one could see nearly 200 miles, provided the air was clear enough, which would rarely be the case.—Golden Days.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

HACKETT, ARKANSAS, Aug. 20, 1887.

Dr. A. T. SHALLENBERGER,
Rochester, Pa. Dear Sir:—I wish you to send me a bottle of your Antidote for Malaria, which I see advertised in the Methodist Advocate, Chattanooga, Tenn., and which I can not get here. Fifteen years ago my mother had third day chills, and after trying the doctors and other medicines without relief, a friend recommended your Antidote; she tried it, and one dose effected a permanent cure. Truly yours,

J. S. EDWARDS,
Pastor M. E. Church.

Sufferers

FROM Stomach and Liver derangements—Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick-Headache, and Constipation—find a safe and certain relief in Ayer's Pills. In all cases where a cathartic is needed, these Pills are recommended by leading physicians.

Dr. T. E. Hastings, of Baltimore, says: "Ayer's Pills are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of my profession."

Dr. John W. Brown, of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I have prescribed Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

"For a number of years I was afflicted with biliousness which almost destroyed my health. I tried various remedies, but nothing afforded me any relief until I began to take Ayer's Pills."—G. S. Wanderlich, Scranton, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and am satisfied I should not be alive to-day if it had not been for them. They cured me of dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since."—T. P. Brown, Chester, Pa.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills, and deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these Pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family upwards of twenty years, and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afforded me greater relief than any medicine I ever tried."—Thomas F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

MASON & HAMLIN

The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since and including that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers, of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 to $900

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS GRAND & UPRIGHT

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

KENTON—PHILIP C. KENTON was born January 24, 1825; died in Franklin parish, La., January 22, 1890. His parents moved to the neighborhood, in this parish, on Bayou Macon, known as "Ward's Bend," when he was but a child of five or six summers. In this neighborhood, at a week-day appointment of the circuit preacher in 1849, he was born of the Spirit, under the preaching of Rev. Moses Davis, of sacred memory, and united himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—of which church he lived a consistent and exemplary member during his life, and died in the full assurance of hope and the triumph of saving faith.

During his last illness his sufferings were great, which he endured with meek resignation to the will of his Lord, never murmuring or complaining of his lot. The disease was hemorrhagic malarial fever and acute inflammation of the kidneys; was confined to his bed six weeks, less two days. During the last few days he lingered on the shores of time his conversation was of a religious and spiritual character. Summing up his experience of the past forty years of his life, declared his readiness and willingness to meet his approaching dissolution. "Knowing that if this earthly house of his tabernacle were dissolved, he had a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." He exhorted all "to follow his example as he had followed Christ."

He spent four years as a soldier in the Confederate Army. While there, he was away from home, his family and associates; but he realized that he was not from under his church vows and Christian profession. During his soldiery nothing can be alleged against his moral character or derogatory to his Christian faith and practice. His Bible was his constant companion at the camp fires, and the stillness of the night was often broken by his voice in either song or prayer.

He filled the various offices of class leader, steward, trustee, Sunday-school superintendent and exhorter in the church of his choice. His name has been recorded in the proceedings of the Quarterly Conferences for Winnaboro circuit for the past thirty-five years; but no complaints or charges against him are therein recorded.

The church militant has lost a true, tried and faithful member; but the church triumphant has one more added to its choir of sacred songsters. In the death of Bro. Kenton, the kingdom and dominion of sin has lost an enemy; morality and Christianity, a friend. A. W. MOORE.

EADS—Mrs. MARGARET J. EADS (nee Treadwell) was born in Walton county, Ga., December 30, 1827, and died December 17, 1889. She moved to Calhoun county, Ala., when five or six years old; professed religion at a very early age, and came to Mississippi in 1847. She was married October 22, 1850, to Col. J. D. Eads, who, with two daughters, still live to mourn her loss. She was the daughter of James and Mary Treadwell. At a very tender age she united with the Methodist Church, and all her life was a faithful member of the same. She has been a regular reader of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE ever since it was started. For some time before her demise she was a great sufferer, but bore her pain with becoming fortitude and resignation. Her death was so triumphant and full of hope that it seemed only a transition, a strange forgetting, to resume the breath. To such there is no death. Weep not, then, for her life was made immortal by acts of Christian love and kindness, and her death was but the beginning of a higher life; and to us who are left to tread this dreary vale, her memory will grow brighter as the years steal gently away. It was but the empty casket we gave to earth; the gem that filled it is beyond the chilling tide. I have talked with her often about Christ and his goodness. Her experience was bright; no gloom seemed to settle over her religious life. Just as the sun was sinking behind the western horizon her spirit was released from pain. She was called from labor to refreshment; she was not, for God took her.

In the death of Sister Eads the church and preachers have lost a valued friend; her family, and more especially her husband, whose loss is great; but we know where to find you, Sister Eads. We shall sleep, but not forever. There will be a glorious dawn. J. M. MORSE.

MCLEROY—Mrs. ELLA RANDLE MCLEROY, eldest daughter of Maj. John G. and Elizabeth Randle, was born in Talladega county, Ala., April 29, 1836. She was married in Jackson parish, La., to Dr. T. W. McLeroy, July 20, 1851. From thence they moved to Richland parish, La., where she resided until the day of her death, January 23, 1890. In 1866 she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, becoming a member of that refined and generous-hearted little band of Christians of Union Church, in the neighborhood in which she lived, and was a faithful member of the same to the day of her death. She loved the church, and, when able, filled her place in the sanctuary. The subject of religion was a pleasant theme to her. She loved the preachers, and delighted to minister to their comfort under her roof. She was thoughtful to the last of her pastor's interest, requesting her husband, a short time before she died, to forward him a special, reserved contribution of her own for his support. At death's door she still remembered the Lord's cause. Her illness was long and intensely painful. I visited her at different times, and always found her perfectly resigned to the will of God. She had no doubt of her divine acceptance. The way was clear. She had no hope of recovery. Her sufferings became so intense she prayed to die, if it was her Lord's will. The last three days of her life she was unconscious, having no apparent suffering. Thus she fell asleep in Jesus. She was buried by the side of her father and sister, Mary, in the family burying-ground, there to await the resurrection of the dead.

May the afflicted and bereaved husband and sorrowing children seek help and comfort in him who said: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live!"

J. F. PATTERSON, P. C.

POPE—Mrs. S. G. POPE, widow of the late Philip H. Pope, of Yazoo county, Miss., died at her residence in Haudshoro, Miss., November 16, 1889, in the seventy-fifth year of her age. She was a daughter of Sanders Taylor, of North Carolina; came to this State at an early period, and was married in Holmes county in 1835. A large portion of her active life was spent in Yazoo City, where Bro. Pope was for a long time one of the largest merchants of the place.

Sister Pope was one of the brightest, most active and spiritual Christians I ever knew. If not at the head, she was not far from the head of every church enterprise and every charity of the town in those early days from 1836 onward. She was largely instrumental in the conversion of her husband, who lived and died an unusually bright example of solid piety. She was a member of the Methodist Church over fifty years, in all which time I knew her well. Among her last words were, "Though he slay me yet will I trust him." R. ABBEY.

ENLOE—Little WAFER EGERTON ENLOE was born September 19, 1888, and died January 26, 1890. God takes our treasures and lays them up in heaven. The dear baby is safe there, waiting to welcome father and mother, sisters and brothers, to the land where partings are no more. We sympathize deeply with our bereaved friends, yet rejoice that their sorrow is not without hope. PHILIP BURKETT.

"The faith once delivered to the saints" is worth contending for. The comfort it has imparted, the victories it has gained, and the souls it has saved, prove its divine origin.

The Lady Next Door.

Mrs. W. envied the lady next door because she always seemed so well and happy. "She enjoys life and I don't." said the discontented woman. "How I would like to change places with her!" At last she made the acquaintance of the object of her envy, and this is what the lady told her: "Happy? Of course I am, for I enjoy perfect health. My dear Mrs. W., your face tells me why you are not happy. You are suffering from functional derangements. I was a martyr to female weaknesses for years, but Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cured me, as it will you if you will try it. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case or price ($1.00) returned.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Senator Gibson's bill to increase the donation of land to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College by an additional 46,500 acres came up for consideration in the Senate calendar on February 11, and was passed.

In his message to the Iowa Legislature, Governor Larrabee urges the adoption of Australian ballot system, and that women be permitted to vote at municipal elections.

In a lenten pastoral letter to be read in all the churches of the diocese of Leavenworth, Kan., Bishop Fink, of the Roman Catholic Church, forbids Catholics to join the Farmers' Alliance, because it is a secret order and virtually has a religion and a chaplain of its own.

At Castroville, Tex., on February 13, Mrs. Charles Haines was elected president of the Medina Valley Railway Company, receiving the united vote of the directors. She is the first woman railway president in America, is 30 years of age, thoroughly accomplished and strictly business.

Louisiana Congressmen are striving to save the sugar duty from the cut proposed by members of the Ways and Means Committee. The well known friendly feeling of the Nebraska members will strengthen them. The expected help from Kansas and California has failed to materialize.

The Farmers and Fruit Growers' Convention, held at Hammond, La., adjourned on February 14. Visitors in attendance from the Northwest were favorably impressed.

Chicago is threatened with an ice famine, the mild weather having ruined the usual crop in the neighboring ponds and rivers. Maine is looked to for relief, it being claimed that the artificial ice factories at New Orleans and a few other points have too small a capacity to make much material difference in the general deficiency.

The Iowa Supreme Court has decided that the State has jurisdiction over the Des Moines saloons.

In accordance with an opinion of the Supreme Court, that the State had the right to close the saloons of Denver on Sunday, all those places, with one or two exceptions, where liquor is sold in restaurants, closed their doors at midnight on last Saturday, and remained closed until Monday.

The Gulf Navy Yard report is nearly ready for congressional consideration.

In the Senate, February 17, Mr. Blair presented petitions signed by 36,000 members of the G. A. R. in favor of pensions to army nurses, and petitions signed by over 4,000,000 persons in favor of the educational bill.

The three national woman's suffrage associations—the American Woman's Suffrage Association, the National Woman's Suffrage Association and the National American Woman's Association—have been consolidated, and will be known as the National American Woman's Suffrage Association.

FOREIGN.

The Duke of Orleans was sentenced to two years' imprisonment by the authorities in Paris for violating the decree of exile issued against the members of his family.

Great interest is felt in Mexico as to the possibility of a reciprocity treaty being brought about with the United States, or even a revision of the tariff, as is considered perhaps more probable, by either of which measures the raw sugars produced in Mexico may be exported to the United States free of duty or with so light an impost that there will be some encouragement for the development of the industry.

The Chilian government is resorting to the subsidy system to maintain first-class steam navigation with foreign ports.

In the House of Commons, on February 14, Mr. Parnell moved the amendment of which he had before given notice, asking the repeal of the coercion act, and addressed the House. He attacked the pettiness of the persecutions which the government was daily inflicting upon many persons in utter gratuitousness, and the coercive action of Mr. Balfour, chief secretary for Ireland. Sir Richard Webster, the attorney general, charged Mr. Parnell with making grave accusations against Mr. Balfour, without producing any evidence in support of his allegations. He could not disprove the figures showing that crime had decreased and that boycotting had been repressed.

Toronto University was totally destroyed by fire on February 14. The loss is estimated at $500,000.

The Canadian Freeman, the Roman Catholic organ, has an article defending Archbishop Cleary's utterances in favor of separate schools. It says: "No one can shut his eyes to the fact that an organized conspiracy exists throughout the world to cripple and destroy, if possible, the Catholics and Catholic institutions. It has had its source and origin in the secret oath-bound societies in continental Europe, and now it is being brought into action by their emissaries in both the United States and Canada."

Emperor William's views on the labor question were laid before the State Council on February 14. In his address the Emperor said: "I do not lose sight of the fact that all we desire can not be attained by state measures alone. In these labors of love the church and the schools have also made a field of fruitful action in helpful support and aid of what the law shall ordain; but if, with God's help, you shall succeed in satisfying the just interests of the workingmen, your work will receive my royal thanks and the gratitude of the nation."

The appointment by the Emperor of Austria of Prince Alexander of Battenberg, who once occupied the throne of Bulgaria, to be a colonel of an Austrian regiment, is generally regarded as evidence that the young man will at no distant day resume his former prominence in European politics, an event which will insure the enlivenment of political affairs at several of the continental capitals.

Writing Advertisements.

Alden & Faxon, Newspaper Advertising Agents, Cincinnati, Ohio, have just issued a very neat List of the leading newspapers of the United States. The first 10 or 12 pages are devoted to advertisements, which they have written for various firms and which have been prominent successes; also hints and suggestions to new advertisers. This firm make a specialty of writing advertisements, and of devising methods by which money can be made out of newspaper advertising. Judging by their little book, they have been eminently successful in this direction. This Newspaper List will be sent free on application.

PROSPICE.

The aspect from which Robert Browning regarded death is shown in the following magnificent lines:

Fear death?—to feel the fog in my throat,
The mist in my face,
When the snows begin, and the blasts denote
I am nearing the place,
The power of the night, the press of the storm,
The post of the foe;
Where he stands, the Arch Fear in a visible form,
Yet the strong man must go:
For the journey is done and the summit attained,
And the barriers fall,
Though a battle's to fight ere the guerdon be gained
The reward of it all.
I was ever a fighter, so—one fight more,
The best and the last!
I would hate that death bandaged my eyes and forbore,
And bade me creep past.
No! let me taste the whole of it, fare with my peers,
The heroes of old;
Bear the brunt, in a minute pay glad life's arrears
Of pain, darkness, and cold.
For sudden the worst turns the best to the brave,
The black minute's at end,
And the elements' rage, the fiend voices that rave,
Shall dwindle, shall blend,
Shall change, shall become first a peace out of pain,
Then a light, then thy breast,
O thou soul of my soul! I shall clasp thee again,
And with God be the rest!

Better Newspapers Needed.

BY D. W. FOSTER, M. D.

The printing press is one of the greatest powers for good or for evil. The secular newspapers generally are not what they ought to be; too many of the editors are not what they ought to be themselves; nor do many of them try to induce other people to be what they ought to be, either. (There are some noble exceptions, however.) But, on the contrary, they, being too frequently ungodly themselves, demoralize others; and they themselves, in turn, are too often further corrupted by, and lend themselves to, other bad men to mislead, corrupt and ruin whole communities and nations. Some of them are to be pitied, for they, not having been properly trained and educated, are lamentably ignorant of the great fundamental fact that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." But there are others—and, unfortunately, too many of them—who know what is right; but they are so ungodly and carnal that they are willing and ready, at all times and on all occasions, to barter away, not only their own salvation, but that of the whole world, for money, which is the only god they worship.

Recently, in New Orleans, Sam Jones, standing before a very large audience, with a slip of paper in his hand, remarked: "I see on this piece of paper five big letters—W, R, O, N, G, which spells wrong." He then took out of his vest pocket a hank hill, and spread it out, covering the word "wrong;" and then, turning the illustration around, with the "greenback" next to the spectators, he asked them, "Do you see any wrong, now?" The money had covered the "wrong" entirely from view. And how often it blinds to what is right, too!

How does that voracious monster, the Louisiana State Lottery, which is swallowing up the property of the people at large, and destroying their well-being generally, exercise such a controlling influence over the secular press touching that mammoth iniquity, unless it covers over its enormous "wrongs" with "greenbacks," and blinds the eyes and shuts the mouth of that press? What else but "greenbacks" induced it, in New Orleans recently, to be as silent as a dumb oyster sucking its native mud, about a religious movement that was going on in that city, and in which millions of the best people in all the land felt deeply interested, and had a paid-up right to be kept informed about it by that same secular press—newspapers? That religious movement, while opposing corruption and vice in all its protean forms, exposed to the public the fatal delusions and ruinous tendencies of that gambling fraud, to aid and abet which the secular press fills its columns with delusive statements, which it knows will mislead thousands of people to spend their bread-and-clothes money for a chance (so called) more desperate than "a needle in a haystack." And what but "greenbacks" hides the cruel "wrong" from the eyes of that press? And while the secular press shuts its columns grudgingly against accounts of religious and reform movements generally, it throws them open wide and invitingly to universal demoralization, and fills them, ad nauseam, with indecent accounts and obscene pictures representing brutal prize fights, and other dog fights, and every and all manner of deviltment! Does the almighty dollar so completely fill the eye of the press that it can't see the great and ruinous "wrong" of such things?

How is it that so many of the secular press are fighting, might and main, against prohibition, and putting forth all their efforts in favor of alcoholic liquors, which are causing more harm than everything else in the world put together? Because, if they be not the fons et origo of every vice and crime, these intoxicating liquors are the inseparable companions and powerful auxiliaries to the most of them. And why is the secular press so generally allied with that demon of destruction, alcohol, unless he keeps his hydra-headed "wrongs" covered over with "greenbacks," so as to blind their covetous eyes and stultify their ungodly hearts?

How is it that the most unprincipled politicians so often defeat the best men, and get into important offices through the aid and comfort of the secular press, which too often misrepresents the good men to be the bad ones, and the bad to be the good, unless they cover their "wrongs" with "greenbacks"? If their eyes be not blinded with money, don't the conductors of the secular press know that "when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn"?

PLAISANCE, La.

North Mississippi Conference, 1875-1889.

BY REV. THOS. J. NEWELL.

The very satisfactory Annual of the North Mississippi Conference for 1888-9 has been received. The editor and the printers have done well. We congratulate the brethren upon, and devoutly thank God for, the gratifying exhibit made through this annual report to the church. It is true that the spiritual life and power of the church can not be exhibited in tabular statements, but the general growth and fruitfulness of the church have always been received as exponents of its life. "By their fruits you shall know them." Our Bishops, when they would know of the inner life of the church, wisely ask of what has been done; not expecting, however, to get an exact picture of the real and spiritual life of the church, but to get the very best man can furnish. When they would exhibit this life to others, they cause these acts to be put into tabular statements. By examining some of the annual reports for a few successive years, one can find much to encourage the faithful laborer, and to make the most despondent to hope. I have been comparing the reports made by the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference, at Kosciusko, in 1875, and those made by the same body—from the same territory—at Holly Springs, in 1889. From the Kosciusko Conference, November, 1875, Bishop Paine sent to the several districts, stations and circuits 110 regular pastors. Barton and Murff and Murrah and Markham and Adams and Mitchell and a large company more have gone to rest, and quite a number have gone from us to labor in other fields; yet Bishop Galloway sent from Holly Springs, December, 1889, to the several charges 129 regular pastors. In 1875 there were 28,035 local preachers and members; in 1889 there were 38,993. In 1875 there were 12,633 Sunday-school scholars; in 1889, 19,800. In 1875 the churches were valued at $392,470; in 1889 at $476,788. In 1875 the number of parsonages was 21, valued at $23,100; in 1889 there were 89, valued at $96,125. In 1875 the amount paid on salaries of preachers was $45,215; in 1889, $70,349. In 1875 the amount paid for all missionary purposes, foreign and domestic, was $2,613 50; in 1889, $14,678 59. This last sum includes the amount paid to church extension, which is, indeed, a strong arm in our missionary work. This comparison might be extended into every branch of church work, and the same gratifying results would appear. The large increase in the number and value of our parsonages and churches, and the difference of $12,065 09 in our missionary contributions, are reason for devout thanksgiving and greater activity. May God bless the faithful men and women who have brought about these results!

Pure Religion and Undefiled.

BY REV. S. A. DAVIES.

God links himself to humanity, and unites man to him by the wondrous revelation of fatherhood, more firmly than in any other way. When the Son of God came, then, indeed, was this relation of God to the world understood as never before. The orphaned heart of earth's children was satisfied. The desolate soul yearning for consolation was filled. So the church caught up this news, and, mingling it with sermon and song, voiced it to the world that had a Father, but knew it not. By all the various branches of Christ's militant church to-day, it is one of the universally accepted dogmas, and must be a glorious fact in the church triumphant. Are we not justified in saying that this truth is the crown jewel in the casket of revelation's gems—earth's richest heritage? Does the church of God to-day teach this fact as did the apostles and fathers, or apprehend its true bearing upon practical works? We preach that the church is the repository of divine truth, and that it is her mission to proclaim it wholly. Isaiah found room among his transcendent utterances to teach Israel to care for her homeless and fatherless children. The Son of man adduces it as evidence for righteous verdict in that wonderful judgment scene so vividly portrayed by Matthew—that his own were sick, naked, imprisoned, and ye visited me in them. St. James reiterates and emphasizes the lesson taught by the prophet, the evangelist and the Savior, making a test of pure religion and undefiled in the sight of God the Father. I think we need to follow this line of thought suggested, and thus perceive our dereliction in the way of practical beneficence. Methodism, ever active in educational and missionary work, must not overlook her poor and neglect her orphans. Would to God that he may inspire some large-hearted Methodist to found a home in Louisiana for our fatherless children! I know of children who are waiting and longing to enter such a refuge, and widows looking anxiously to their beloved church for a home. Can not something be done? A church so fruitful in organizations and societies of different kinds can build and endow an orphan asylum if she will try. The sad fact that other organizations are caring for and training up Methodist children to their peculiar views should be enough to arouse our dormant energies. I sincerely hope this article may awaken interest in this important matter, and cause others to write more fully and capably upon this momentous subject. Like the mother of the Grachhi, let our church remember, "These are my jewels."

Whoever well considers the state of the world, and human experience, can not but conclude that God is more concerned to make men holy than happy; for many are able to rest in their sorrows, for the sake of their use and end, but no one finds rest in unholy delights. In sinful pleasure God follows man with a scourge; in sorrow with balm.—Dr. J. Pulsford.

Our Indians.

THEN AND NOW.

Since some of our Mississippi brethren are awaking to a consciousness of the obligation resting on us to evangelize the Indians still living within our borders, I think the following private letter of my father—the late Dr. B. M. Drake—will prove of interest. May it also be the means, under God, of rousing us from that lethargic state which has kept us all these years from making any definite and concerted effort to bring the remnant of the aboriginal owners of this soil to the feet of Jesus! This only can they learn to hope for a permanent inheritance, where they have right to eat of the tree of life, and to swell that chorus of praise which is as the sound of many waters. Among many other urgent calls, we surely should not neglect this, which comes loudly and literally from "the heathen in our midst." Surely all your readers know by this time that Bro. A. D. Miller, of Cato, Miss., is collecting a fund for the express object of sending an Indian missionary, such as Bishop Galloway can secure, to this hopeful work within the bounds of Brandon district. I trust many will send in their cash and subscriptions early and often.

The subjoined letter may prove an interesting reminiscence in this railroad age. It was written while on a philanthropic journey on horseback, in August and September, from Adams county, Miss., to Augusta, Ky., and is only one episode of an eventful trip, such as seldom occurs these days. The letter was addressed to his wife, at Washington, Miss., and was written, as you see, at intervals along the way. It was mailed at Russellville, Ky.

SHUBUTA, Miss.

COL. FULSOM'S,
CHOCTAW NATION, Aug. 31, 1830.

My Dear S.: Fatigued, as I am, from a long and hot day's ride, I must address a few lines to you. . . . I tried to pray for you to-day, but found my mind too much occupied with frivolous things; such, for instance, as, How far is it to the next house or watering-place? (The latter are very scarce.) How shall I make the stages all along the road? When shall I get to Wiley's, and whom shall I call to see from there to father's? etc. I have already begun to think when and how shall I get home.

My passage through the Nation has been an interesting one. Directly I crossed the line, I saw clean-dressed Indians traveling in my direction. On inquiry I learned they were going to what they now call a cry; formerly a pole-pulling. It would call it a funeral. It was once the custom of this people, when they deposited the dead, to set up poles about the grave. Some thirty or forty days afterward they would assemble in great crowds to pull the poles and cry around the dead. They then had games of ball, dancing, eating and drinking. These revels generally continued for a night and a day, during which time it was not unfrequent for four or five to be murdered as a consequence of their intoxication. They now conduct them a little differently. I will describe the one I attended. I left the main road and turned to the right, conducted by two young Indians, and following a small trace over hills and valleys, and through almost impenetrable cane-brakes. I finally crossed Pearl river, where I fell in with Bros. Smith and Sims, who happened to be bathing in the river when we arrived. We did not proceed far before we heard the sound of a multitude of bells, of various sizes. We then saw at the roots of about sixty or seventy trees a deposit of the baggage of Choctaws, ranged in two lines about one hundred yards apart. At about the middle of the lines there was a small arbor, with some rude seats. Presently on our arrival, and making our deposits by the root of a large oak, the Indians began to flock to us from all quarters—men, women, and children—to shake hands with us. Their salutation was very hearty, "Boboshela mak" (How d'ye do, my brother). We then prepared a little coffee in a boiler, like my shaving-cup, that revived us, and about this time we saw their families in groups in various sections. They then commenced singing all at once, and marched all together, making directly for the arbor, and seated themselves, leaving a small space in the middle for the missionary to stand. I then, for the first time, addressed a congregation through an interpreter. I was greatly affected in the beginning at the singing of the people.

100 Miles below Columbus, Sept. 3, 1830.

I have been hindered from finishing this letter by various circumstances. In some places I could get no ink; at others I was too weary, for I have been traveling briskly.

I resume my description of the Choctaw cry. After preaching and exhortation, the congregation was dismissed. Soon I saw them assemble in groups, and one in each group talking to the rest. I learned that these were the exhorters, giving religious instruction. Finally all was measurably silent, and many appeared to be asleep. Bros. Smith, Sims and myself lay down by our tree, with the earth for our bed, and the broad-spread canopy of heaven, beautifully bespangled with stars, for our covering. Soon I heard the shrill sound of a horn. This was the token for all to assemble and receive presents from the friends of the deceased. We walked up to the place and found thirty or forty large bowls of "Tom Fuller," or hominy. All the captains were seated in a row, and it was ascertained how many warriors each had present. The committee of arrangement set before each a number of bowls corresponding with the size of his company. Our heart was sent to us. We then took our supper, it was about eleven o'clock. I was glad there was no other save the mild light of Dame Luna. It would have done no good to see. We had but one spoon. The business of eating was soon dispatched in silence, as most of us were hungry. I then lay down to try to sleep, but soon heard a general calling, which was the signal for all to come and sing. About the time they commenced, excessive fatigue caused me to fall asleep. I can not say how long I slept; but I was awakened by the sound of the most melodious music I think I ever heard. One of the first thoughts that struck me was the loud acclamation that John heard of a great multitude from every nation, saying, "Allelujah! salvation to God and the Lamb!" I felt as if I were in the ante-chamber of heaven. Just before day all was silent. In the morning we rose and had prayers at our different trees, and repaired to the arbor for preaching. There was no trouble getting or eating breakfast, as there was none. I addressed the congregation for more than an hour from, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons," etc., with some liberty and, I trust, some profit. We sang a hymn. The presence and power of the Highest were there. All were dismissed, and had a general round of shaking hands in hope to meet in heaven. I accompanied Bros. Smith and Sims about five miles to a lonely cot in the wilderness, where Bro. Sims lives and teaches school, and Bro. Smith spends his spare time. I found but little of pomp or etiquette there, but much of solid comfort. I thought, "It may be Susan, and I will live here some day."

The next day Bro. Smith rode with me as far as Wilson's—a full day's journey—where we reluctantly parted, he desiring me to remember him affectionately to you. That day I rode thirty-six miles all alone to Fulsom's. I found Mrs. Fulsom (an Indian) very clever and conversable. I was better entertained there than I have been since. As I had a spare hour in the evening, I went a mile to visit a Presbyterian mission. I was received with a great deal of Christian friendship and affection.

The next day I rode about thirty-six miles, passed Columbus, and dined with Bro. Dowling. Yesterday I rode forty-two miles to Pikeville, Ala., and to-day thirty-two to this place. I am now surrounded by eight or ten noisy, swearing horse-drovers.

My health is good, and my horse, so far, performs well. I shall reach Florence to-morrow, if God permit, where I intend to spend the Sabbath, either in preaching or hearing. I have enjoyed a peaceful state of mind to-day; have often thought of you and our dear children. Sometimes I could almost hear Winbourne's little tongue say "Father." Pray for me. . . .

Intercession is the very safety-valve of love. When we feel that we really can do nothing at all in return for some remarkable kindness and affection, how exceedingly glad we are that we may and can pray!—Frances Ridley Havergal.

In the Law's Meshes.

The record in the clerk's office of the United States Circuit Court in this city contains a brief history of a remarkable case which has been pending some months, but has been carefully concealed from the public. It is an action brought by Richard S. Newcombe, administrator of the estate of Isaac Bernstein. The bill in equity sets up that the defendants, the Louisiana Lottery Company, John A. Morris, C. H. Murray and Zachariah E. Simmons were at the times mentioned in the bill engaged in a conspiracy to defraud Bernstein and others who are large stockholders in the Louisiana Lottery Company from obtaining the money due to the members or shareholders under the contract made by the firm of C. H. Murray & Co. with the Louisiana Lottery Company. The prayer of the bill is that the defendants shall account to the plaintiff for all money and property received, converted and appropriated by them, or either of them, which belonged to the firm of C. H. Murray & Co., and that the property of the defendants, together with the franchises granted to them by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, be adjudged the property of the firm of C. H. Murray & Co., and that the defendants be compelled to produce their books for the inspection of the court, and that they be enjoined and restrained from selling, assigning, transferring, mortgaging or encumbering in any way, or in any way operating or disposing of said contract made by the firm of C. H. Murray & Co. with the Louisiana State Lottery Company.

Mr. Newcombe claims that the estate he represents has been defrauded out of $2,000,000. The firm of C. H. Murray & Co. was composed, twenty-two years ago, of C. H. Murray, John A. Morris and Zachariah E. Simmons. They did a general lottery business all over this country. Murray and Morris, it is alleged, froze out Simmons in 1868, when the firm bought out the Louisiana Lottery Company and assumed its functions. William H. McKee, John McCool, John Anderson, the famous tobacconist; Marcus Cicero Stanley and James Stewart sold out their interests to Isaac Bernstein. Altogether his holding amounted to about $1,000,000. He died in 1883. The allegation in the complaint is that Murray and Morris converted all the profits of the firm to their own use.—New York World, Feb. 9.

Spiritual Atrophy.

The study of natural history reveals the fact that any organ of life that is not used will gradually wither away and finally disappear entirely. Thus, those fishes that live in streams under the earth's surface lose their eyes in time, because by disuse they become atrophied. To keep an organ healthy and vigorous it must be used. It wastes away and becomes extinct if not used. That which is true of our physical organs is also true of the spiritual faculties. If we fail to exercise our spiritual capabilities, they become atrophied. Disuse paralyzes them, and nothing short of re-vitalization by divine power can revive them. The realities which these disused faculties are intended to reveal to us become as unknown as is the light to the eyeless fish. Our life becomes circumscribed to those lower perceptive faculties that bind us to the material world. Although we have within us the germ of the undeveloped sense through which spiritual things are made known—those things through which our personal life is replenished from the source of all personal life—yet this power for spiritual apprehension and for laying hold of spiritual things may become impotent because we do not exercise it. The love that we need to perfect our spirits, the hope that we should have to give strength to our life, the faith, the want of which leaves our souls flaccid and nerveless, these realities are unknown to us, because the power through which they are revealed to us has been disabled through lack of exercise. If we would keep alive the faculties through which our spirit is made richer and more full of life, we must use them. If we do not open our spirits to love, we shall lose the power to love; and shall even doubt its existence. All those spiritual activities, which alone give dignity and worth to life, can be kept alive only through activity. Christ forcibly illustrates it in the parable of the talents, "From him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." Disuse will lose to us the life we already have.—Methodist Recorder.

A church is planted in a community to convert and redeem that community; not merely to edify those who are already converted. It may be doubted whether much of the preaching commonly described as simply "edifying" goes for a great deal. Its qualities are apt to be those of the essay rather than of the genuine sermon. Preaching is not in the best sense "edifying" unless it arouses the hearers to new exertions in advancing the kingdom of God. It is difficult to imagine real sermons preached by living men doing nothing more than to impart a comfortable sense of satisfaction with the present and the future. Real preaching by men whose souls are illuminated by the truth is as certain to win men to the allegiance of Christ as seed corn properly planted is to yield a harvest.—Watchman.

AN AWAKING CALL.

BY THE REV. WALTER T. GRIFFIN.

"Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep."—Romans xiii. 11.

Oh, slumbering church, arise,
Too long, indeed, cold and inactive hast thou been:
Thy tedious night is past;
The op'ning day is full of glory which thy power can win.
Gather thy scrried hosts in rank and file
Arrayed to fight, all ready, stand a while;
The Captain orders "with the rising sun
The great decisive battle is begun."

Oh, slumbering soul, arise!
Why lie as dead? A thousand deeds await thy resting hands;
Tremendous acts undone
Call for thy power. Arise, thy God commands
Quick, in the very thickest of the fray
Thy flashing sword may help to win the day.
When foes are vanquished and the battle done,
A glorious rest is with the victory won.

A Mystery and Its Explanation.

In the ADVOCATE, of February 6, there appeared an article, signed "William B. Hines," calling attention to a striking phenomenon to be seen in the northeastern part of Kemper county, Miss. The writer did not attempt to account for the phenomenon; but, it seems, penned the article in the hope of having the mystery solved. Since there appears to be no special difficulty in explaining the mystery on scientific grounds, I wish to offer the following as a solution. My theory, I think, is not only reasonable, but also offers a full explanation.

First, let us examine into the nature of the phenomenon. The statement is made that on the highest point of a certain hill in Kemper county "it rains every day, whether there be clouds or clear sky." Just here I wish to say that the writer of the article referred to unintentionally made an over-statement. While the so-called rain is of frequent occurrence, it does not fall every day. I, myself, have visited the spot several times, and once or twice failed to detect anything unusual. Again, so diminutive are the drops observed to fall that I question the propriety of using the term "rain" at all. Quite a number of persons have been questioned upon this point, and they all testify to the smallness of the watery drops. The number of falling drops might make up for their smallness, but such is not the case. Only a few scattered drops can be perceived to fall at any one time.

Thus I have, in a measure, lessened the mystery; but still it is strange that there should be a semblance of rain at one particular spot nearly every day in the year, while nothing of the kind is observed at surrounding points.

Many are the theories that have been advanced by persons who have visited the locality, as to the cause of the phenomenon. Some of them are more amusing than scientific. One man, having noticed quite a number of bugs residing in a certain tree located in the region of the mystery, concludes that the bugs bore into the trees for water, and in their flight hither and thither drop particles of it. An old darkey who paid a visit to the spot, after witnessing the fall of the drops for some time, was heard to remark: "I'se bin a Baptis' all my life, but now I'se 'vinced dat sprinklin' am de correck way. I'm gwine home and jine de Mefodis'." Since a Baptist graveyard is situated on this curiosity-provoking eminence, the force of his remark will be seen.

The locality under discussion is the topmost point of a high hill, four miles west of Binnsville. A beautiful valley lies west, north and northeast of this hill, so that it is almost surrounded by valleys. Through the valley to the west flows Wahalak Creek, about two miles distant; while north of the hill and a mile or so away flows the Noxubee river. Thus the hill stands, as it were, in the angle formed by the confluence of the two streams, and is 250 feet, probably 300 feet, above the level of the valley from which it abruptly rises.

The valley partially surrounding this high point presents conditions highly favorable to the formation of large quantities of aqueous vapor by evaporation; for it is low, well-watered, and in a state of cultivation. The air containing this vapor, rendered light by the heat of the sun, constantly ascends to the upper regions of the atmosphere. In its ascension, however, it is carried by the winds directly over the hill described above. Those acquainted with meteorological phenomena know that altitude affects temperature. The hill over which the vapor is carried is, at least, 200 feet above the valley. This elevation of itself, however, would not be sufficient to cause the condensation of vapor observed. Such is my opinion. But on looking around to discover, if possible, another cause, I noticed that the top of the hill is covered with trees, not thickly, but enough to partially shade the ground. Hence the air on this part of the hill is necessarily cooler than at points where there are no trees. Moreover, the area over which the condensation of vapor occurs is not more than an acre, and is restricted to the highest point of the hill—that portion covered with trees.

Here, then, lies the solution: The warm, moist air from the valley, on striking the top of this hill, is slightly cooled by contact with cooler air. After being cooled, it can sustain less vapor than before, and so the excess is condensed and falls to the earth, giving rise to the phenomenon of a seemingly perpetual rain.

It is my belief that were the hill denuded of trees, no such condensation could occur; for the top of the hill would then absorb as much of the sun's heat as its base. Since the atmosphere in cold weather contains less moisture than in warm weather, I was of the opinion that nothing unusual would occur on the hill during a cold day. Accordingly, on a clear, cold day during this month, I visited the hill for the purpose of proving the correctness of my theory. On that day not a trace of condensed vapor was observed to fall. Accepting the statements of others, the rain fall (without any visible cloud) is much more noticeable in summer than at any other time. This, however, is exactly what science would teach us to expect. Such, then, is my explanation of a phenomenon which has puzzled many, and which almost every day attracts visitors from all quarters.

Tree-Planting in the Raymond Church-Yard.

MR. EDITOR: It is not often you hear from this section of country. If not trespassing too much upon the space of your valuable paper, I would like to tell you and your readers how delightfully we spent the day setting out trees in the church-yard. It was proposed by one of the teachers, Miss S. L. Gibbs. The superintendent gave the notice two Sundays in succession, for all who felt an interest in the matter to meet at the church, Saturday morning at ten o'clock, to set out and name a tree. It was not the idea of the originator that all the trees should be named in rotation for the pastors of the church; but for anyone we loved, honored, and esteemed. She also suggested that each class would set and name a tree. Saturday came. I do not think I ever saw a lovelier day—not a cloud in the sky; so we fully expected all there, especially all connected with the Sunday-school. The first on hand were Mrs. Davis, Miss Willie Beal, and Misses S. L. and Annie H. Gibbs, who rang the bell, that all might know it was time to begin work. Soon Mrs. Hunter came with some of the little girls, but not a gentleman to aid or give directions. We were not the least bit discouraged; thought, however, we would wait a while to see who else would come before we began setting out our trees. We were not idle in the meantime; but, with rakes and hoes, soon had the yard looking beautiful in its fresh covering of pretty green grass; not a weed left to mar its beauty. No one else had yet come to assist in the tree-planting; and, as the morning was passing, we concluded to begin work. A colored man dug the places for the trees, for we ladies could not have done that part of it.

There stands in front of the church three large China trees, set there some years ago by Mr. George W. Gibbs. In that row was a vacant space to the left of the gate, where the first tree was set by Misses Annie H. Gibbs and Willie Beal for the senior class, naming it Rev. T. L. Mellen, for the building of the church is due entirely to this true, noble, energetic soldier of Christ, being filled with love and zeal for the Master's cause, overcoming mountainous difficulties; yet not once wavering, but determined to succeed; not only working, but giving; and now we occupy as pretty a little church as there is in the Conference. I never think of the church without rejoicing that the Bishop sent to the Raymond circuit Rev. T. L. Mellen.

The next tree was named by Miss Annie Gibbs for our much loved and highly esteemed Bishop, Charles B. Galloway, a true and tried friend of the "woman's work." If all pastors were like him, in obeying the command to "help those women," there would be a Woman's Missionary Society in every church. He was to have dedicated our house of worship; started, reached Jackson, where he received a dispatch calling him immediately home. Rev. T. L. Mellen then telegraphed to Dr. C. G. Andrews to come without fail, as it was expected for the church to be dedicated that day. He promptly came to our assistance; preached a sermon which still lingers in the mind and heart of some of his hearers; then, with our beautiful and impressive service, dedicated the Methodist Church in Raymond to Almighty God. For him we named a tree, hoping it might grow in grandeur as the years roll by, typical of the life of him for whom it was named.

Miss S. L. Gibbs named the next tree for Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, our true, firm, and always encouraging friend through all the trying years we were endeavoring to rebuild the church; and when he heard it was really to be built, was among the first to send a contribution. May the beautiful and symmetrical oak live and grow to the honor of this pure Christian character, whose example is worthy of imitation!

Mrs. Davis named her tree for that consecrated and sweet-spirited servant of God, Rev. J. P. Drake.

Mrs. Hunter, with her son, Mr. Joe Key (the only gentleman who arrived upon the grounds during the progress of the pleasant work), set and named their tree for T. J. Hunter, the loyal friend and warm supporter of the church, ever ready with heart and hand to aid in the advancement of her cause. He fought the good fight, kept the faith, and passed triumphantly to his eternal home.

The little girls of Mrs. McRea's class named theirs for our present faithful and loved pastor, Rev. L. S. Jones. Mrs. McRea was in a distant State, or she would have been with us, for she belongs to the faithful few.

The tree for Rev. W. E. Ballard was named by the intermediate class, who was a favorite with all.

All the class trees—one for the superintendent, Mr. George W. Harper, and one for each of the teachers, Mrs. Belcher, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. McRea, Misses S. L. and Annie H. Gibbs; also one for Miss Willie Beal, the only senior pupil present, who named her tree for her teacher, Miss Annie H. Gibbs—were set out; still, we had no reinforcements. Some few came late in the afternoon; but, judging from their appearance, did not come to work; so the all-day hands went to work to complete the plan of work anticipated with so much pleasure—that of setting four rows of live and water oak trees in the church-yard.—

Now came one for our honored friend, Dr. C. K. Marshall; then one for each of the following ladies: Mrs. Hunter, Mrs. Harper, and Miss Mattie Hunter.

Our memorial trees were for Hon. Jefferson Davis, Mr. Alexander Belcher, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Gibbs, Miss Carrie Bankston, Mrs. Margaret Hunter, and Misses Clara Chrisman and Dora Rankin. In all, twenty-five trees. Two pure white roses for Fidelia Horter Glass and Lula Waddell.

As the years pass by these trees will stand as quiet sentinels around the house of God, protecting it from the heating rays of the long summer sun.

Some said: "Why set them? You will not live to see them grown." That may be; but others will. To us it was pleasure enough to ornament the sacred place we have loved so dearly from our earliest childhood, for around it cluster many happy remiuiscences of days that have passed and gone forever. The Fig Tree Blossom.

The prophet was afraid when he heard the speech of the Lord impressing him with the power and majesty of him who could invade the earth with his troops. His "lips quivered at the voice;" he prays him, in wrath, to remember mercy. But such was his trustful faith, that he uses the strongest figure by which to express his confidence. "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, . . . yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." The bloom of the fig being invisible, has led to the general belief that it has none; whereas it has a greater number than any other fruit tree. The germinating properties, the bud, flowers and pulp, being enclosed within the rind till the luscious fruit is fully ripe.

Many years ago a poetess alluded to its bloom. A friend suggested that it had none. The subject was discussed, and investigation led to the opinion that though not visible to the naked eye, there were numerous blossoms. Reference to the American Cyclopedia confirms the opinion of "G. T. V.," and others, and shows the perfect illustration made by the prophet.

The voice of inspiration never is in error. Misunderstanding and unbelief "scan his work in vain," and furnish skeptics sophisms with which to delude the unwary and those who do not devoutly and thoroughly read the Scriptures. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. S.

Bro. Daves' Proposition Amended.

Bro. Daves is right when he says that the secular press of New Orleans ought to be rebuked on account of its attitude toward the great revival. I will not take up your space in expressing indignation that has been well done by yourself, Bro. Mallard and others. Religious people are righteously indignant at this unfair treatment.

But to the amendment: It appears to me that a more effectual way to rebuke the press, and at the same time accomplish the most good, would be not only for the Christian people to withdraw their patronage from these papers, but also establish a daily anti-Lottery paper. The ADVOCATE is doing well, but "this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." This monstrous iniquity ought to be exposed daily to the people of Louisiana.

The crying need of the hour is a daily newspaper, moral and religious in tone, with headquarters in New Orleans, which will give the news in general, but anti-Lottery news in particular. The press is one of the most potent factors for good or evil, and how can we hope to have the charter of this iniquity annulled or prevent it from being re-chartered, when the majority of the papers of the State, especially the dailies, are bought up by the concern.

Mr. Editor, set the ball to rolling. Let us have anti-Lottery news daily. I think a daily New Orleans Christian Advocate would be just the thing. Of course it will take money to do this; but this is a question in which all the Christian people of the United States ought to be deeply interested, and I verily believe that if an appeal was made to them that the amount necessary to support such a paper as I have described, until it would be self-sustaining, would be forthcoming.

OSIRIS.

From the Work.

ARBROTH, LA.

Some fourteen years since the writer got loose from the clutches of the devil, having served him for about twenty or more years, boarding myself the while. During these years his majesty did me so much "dirt" that I am and have been like the Irishman who had a mania for striking people on the head; and hence, while working for the American Bible Society, selling Bibles in West Baton Rouge and Iberville parishes, I found frequent opportunities to display my agility at head striking—that is, preaching.

Some ten days since, with the consent of Dr. Grace, who is in charge of this part of Louisiana as pastor, I commenced an attack upon sin in a schoolhouse on Bayou Poydras. Preached about ten sermons; Dr. Parker, of Baton Rouge, coming to my aid at the close with two good, strong sermons; which served to clinch the nails already driven. Result: Several bright conversions, eight will join some branch of God's church, several family altars erected, eleven men and four or five women will pray anywhere when called on to do so, two weekly prayer meetings in full blast, some talk of a Sunday-school. All denominations were represented; Catholics and negroes being on hand, and many standing during the entire service, and congregations good from the beginning—all seeming delighted to hear the good news. I sold a good many Bibles to Catholics; some in French and some in English. One of the most prominent Catholic men in this section bought two Bibles—one French and one English—and a French Testament. He has also borrowed a copy of Clark's Commentary, and says it is the best book he ever saw, next to the Bible, and that he learned more from the preacher in five minutes than he had learned from the priest in his whole life. He says he will have a complete set of Clark's Commentaries at any cost. I propose to send him a set of Daubigny's History of the Reformation on my return home. God be praised!

There is a fine field here, and all over Louisiana, for missionary work, if the right man can be found, and a support is given him. Let us pray that God will direct us to the man. The dry bones will begin to take on flesh under the magic influence of the gospel preached by a man whose heart is aflame with love to God and man.

May God speed the day when the gospel will be preached to the thousands who now sit in the regions of the shadow of death and darkness! Amen!

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.

The Brookhaven district is moving on well all around. There has been an advance in preachers' salaries in many of the charges, and a better financial report than last year at the first quarterly meetings.

Bro. J. W. Sandell, after a heroic struggle with la grippe, had the misfortune of being thrown from his buggy, and badly bruised and disabled for a time. He is getting well, and will soon be at his work again.

The other brethren of the district have been hard at work in their respective charges. Bro. Huntley is pleasing the people of Brookhaven well. Bro. Norsworthy has taken vigorous hold of things in Crystal Springs, and has the hearts of his people. Bro. Rayner is indefatigable. He is moving forward on all lines in the McComb City charge. Dr. West has taken Wesson by storm. Time and space would fail me to mention in detail all the pastors of this district, and say what might be said of each. They are faithful men, and, as far as my observation extends, are leaving nothing undone, that ought to be done, to build up the kingdom of Christ. Look for a good report this year from the Brookhaven district. W. B. LEWIS, P. E.

VOSSBURG CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We are pleasantly domiciled in the parsonage at Vossburg, Vossburg circuit, and have preached at all the six appointments to good congregations of intelligent hearers. The good people of Vossburg received us very kindly, with good things in sack and pantry, and have kept them coming in ever since. "Our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places." We have pleasant and appreciative people to serve. Vossburg is the headquarters of the circuit, and is a nice little town, sitting upon high hills, and looking down upon the stirring and noisy business activities of the Northeastern railroad, and, at the same time, attending to her own good business. The outlook of the circuit promises well. We are satisfied with our home and our people.

Our new presiding elder, Rev. T. L. Mellen, has held our first quarterly meeting at Vossburg. He is an apostolic man, and an able minister of the New Testament. He is not in a hurry; was with us Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, giving us three excellent sermons, and holding our Quarterly Conference on Tuesday. In the midst of the Quarterly Conference business he introduced, parenthetically, a class meeting, and, conducting it to a close, resumed Conference business without confusion. It was a delightful class meeting, and a good Conference. Bro. Mellen is alive to all the interests of the church, and has energy and courage to push them to a prosperous issue. In the smallest congregation we had during his stay with us, he took up two collections—one for foreign missions, the other for Bishops; and cleared the deck for the first, and more, and a good proportion of the latter. With such energy and courage in administrative ability and pulpit power, we expect to see Meridian district take its place at the side of the foremost, if not in the front, of all our districts. Amen!

Yours truly, WM. B. HINES.

The Lottery.

Legislative Investigation Needed.

The act incorporating the Louisiana Lottery designates it as a charitable concern. To those interested, it is Bonanza; to the people on the outside, robbery.

We have already shown in these columns the general basis upon which the Louisiana Lottery Company has cast the scheme of its so-called grand, extraordinary drawings. It has in each year two, which are advertised as having a $600,000 capital prize each; and for which there are issued 100,000 tickets at $40 each. The face value of tickets for each of these drawings is manifestly four million dollars; and for the two, eight million. Then, there are in each year the ten additional drawings, with $300,000 prizes, and each with 100,000 tickets at $20: making value in tickets for separate drawings two million dollars; and for the ten drawings, twenty millions. It appears, therefore, that for the entire year, this company issues tickets worth twenty-eight millions of dollars. Prizes are advertised as follows: for the $600,000 drawings, 3,144 prizes, aggregating $2,159,600; and for the $300,000 drawings, 3,143 prizes, aggregating $1,054,800.

Having these figures, the sum is easily stated:

Face value tickets, 12 drawings	$28,000,000
Total of 1 rizes, 12 drawings	14,867,200
Balance	$13,132 800

To state results, on this basis, the company would sell $28,000,000 of tickets, collect it; generously return to the people out of their own money less than $15,000,000, and retain over $13,000,000. In other words, this company realizes at a rate little under than 47 per cent.; and refunds in prizes a trifle over 53 per cent. This is about as near a gobbling of one entire half as the company probably dares to go.

If a firm in legitimate business clears above all losses twelve and a half to fifteen per cent. upon money invested, it is doing a highly satisfactory business. But this company, without a dollar of outlay, or a cent at risk, and out of other people's money, every year is realizing near forty-seven per cent.

But, it is contended, that all tickets are not sold. This does not reduce the rate of robbery upon what is actually disposed of. Conceding that, on an average, half only are sold, this leaves a profit of seven million five hundred thousand dollars per annum. Five per cent. is a great return for safe investments of large sums; especially when free from taxes and charges. At this rate, the annual appropriation of this company represents a working capital of one hundred and fifty millions of dollars; considerably more than the assessed value of all the other property of the city of New Orleans, real, personal and mixed.

This, be it observed, is independent of the ordinary daily drawings, which probably pay all expenses and help to swell the surplus.

And from whom does this all come? From the pockets of the people: largely the poor.

What return do these people make out of this stupendous income to raise even the suspicion of public charity? A paltry $40,000 per annum, to the Charity Hospital of New Orleans! Not one cent beyond in tax or charge of any kind: whereas they should, in any view, be assessed for and pay annually, a larger tax than all other property in New Orleans combined.

And this institution will soon have completed its twenty-fifth year; whereupon it hopes to secure an extension, upon application. Such an application needs consideration, and consideration demands investigation. The coming Legislature may well appoint an investigating committee, which may find out all concerning this company: who form it; what amount of toll it has taken within the quarter of a century; and where this wealth, almost fabulous, has gone, and is going to. This interests our people: they are entitled to the information.

But if such committee can possibly find out these things, it can never get the facts and figures touching the poverty and crime this institution has occasioned, embezzlements, starvation of families, suicides; the degradation it has wrought among many, by converting them from honest and industrious people into gamblers; the shame with which it has covered the fair name of Louisiana at home and abroad.—Holy Family Journal.

The Louisiana Lottery.

It is a gross, cruel, heartless swindle, and has no feature in it that does not deserve the severest condemnation. The old pirates, who made their headquarters at New Orleans, were every way most estimable gentlemen compared with the cool and conscienceless gamblers who run the Louisiana Lottery. To see the eager-eyed lot of fools watching the bulletin-board when it has its so-called drawings, is enough to make angels weep. This crowd of poor, swindled, robbed wretches try to find some hope in the lies on the bulletins and the same elaborated in the daily papers, which are particeps criminis in this great crime. They publish for coin the lottery inventions and ghastly falsehoods, and lend simpletons on to ruin by their false commendations, written by the agents of the great gambling trust and liberally paid for by the money that has been fraudulently procured from poor people. The talk about honor, fairness or respectability in this monstrous villainy is a hard-cheeked assumption. If, as is intimated, Christians buy lottery tickets, the quicker they are undeceived the better.

There is not an honest man in the State of Louisiana that does not regard the Louisiana Lottery as an unspeakable shame and crime. It has ruined more people in that State than all other vices and crimes. It is a source of grief to all decent people in the State, but the swindlers and their fraud so profitable that they buy up the baser sort of politicians, and even corrupt judges upon the bench. They have the State by the throat, and their stupendous robberies go on unchecked. They pay vast sums to buy up the press of the country, and especially the great dailies. It costs a large sum of money to carry on this vast scheme of wrong and plunder. It probably receives from California $300,000 a year, for which it pays back large subsidies to papers that publish for money its stupendous falsehoods. It is unlawful to send money to this den of thieves through the mail, and the postmaster at New Orleans ought to refuse to deliver the enormous mail received by the great gamblers of the Louisiana Lottery. Of course the infatuated simpletons who drop their money into this bottomless pit will keep on doing so, although buying a lottery ticket is a dishonest and shameful act.—California Christian Advocate.

Monopoly.

"The State Constitution expresses the opposition of the people to monopolies; yet the council is asked, by imposing prohibitive conditions on the fuel gas project, to extend the most oppressive of all the monopolies—that created by the Radical Legislature in the vending of illuminating gas—over a field that this exclusive grant does not reach. Are the aldermen for the people or for the monopoly?"

The above paragraph, double-leaded, appeared in the "Wayside Notes" of the New Orleans City Item, a most able and interesting feature of that always able and interesting paper. It applies to the city of New Orleans. It can be made to apply, also, with equal force to the State in the matter of the Lottery monopoly—the richest monopoly and greatest evil that ever afflicted a State or people. Are the legislators for the people or for the monopoly?—Telegraph-Bulletin.

Books and Periodicals.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

—THE CHAUTAUQUAN, for March, has a splendid spread for its readers. The variety and ability of the writers for this monthly and their thoughtful and suggestive papers make this one of the most entertaining and profitable magazines of this day of magazine literature. Dr. T. L. Flood, Meadville, Pa. Price, $2.

—The MAGAZINE OF ART—March. This magnificent periodical is a delight to all lovers of art. The present number is not inferior to any that have preceded. It is published by Cassell & Co., New York. Price, $3 50.

—GOOD HOUSEKEEPING is published twice a month by Clark W. Bryan & Co., Springfield, Mass., for $2 50 a year. It is one of the best periodicals of its kind in the country.

A Change in Preaching.

The New York Advocate gives a good article on "Expository Preaching," from which we clip the closing paragraph:

The average preacher would render his pastorate more acceptable and valuable, and in some cases lengthen its term, by devoting one service on the Sabbath to a topical or textual and the other to an expository sermon. Probably the stress to which many are put to know what to do with the second service on the Sabbath, in order to make it interesting and attractive and useful, is due to the fact that most ministers limit themselves to one form of preaching. Hundreds who now stay at home in the evening because they care not to hear the same sort of a discourse twice on the same day would willingly go a second time to hear a vigorous, scholarly, and earnest Scripture exposition. If the right kind of expository sermons were substituted for the concerts, sensational addresses, and so-called praise services, which have been invented to draw the people, the results would be more spiritual, more satisfactory, and more enduring.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

First Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON X.—March 9.

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.

Luke iv, 33-44.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick—Matt. viii, 16.

TIME.—A. D. 27.

PLACE.—Capernaum.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. viii, 14-17; Mark i, 21-31.

33. And—Here begins that description of one complete Sabbath day in the life of Jesus, from morning till night, which is also preserved for us in Matt. viii, 14-17; Mark i, 21-31. It is the best illustration of the life of "the Good Physician," of which the rarest originality was that "he went about doing good." An unclean devil—As in most Eastern cities in both ancient and modern times, madness had an immunity from restraint, and the demoniacs seem to have mingled, if they chose, with the crowd of worshipers in the synagogue.

34. Ah—The demon speaks in the plural, merging his individuality in that of all evil powers. The holy one of God—Like the Gadarene demoniac, this possessed man has a preternatural intuition of our Lord's greatness.

35. Hold thy peace—Literally, be muzzled, as in I. Cor. ix, 9. The same verb is used in the calming of the winds and waves of Mark iv. 39, and in "putting the Sadducees to silence" in Matt. xxii. 34. Hurt him not—Literally, in no possible way. Mark omits this detail, which a physician would be careful to note.

37. The fame of him went out into every place—In Galilee, from the outset, his reception among the common people was most welcome; his fame pervading the whole country, and the enthusiasm great.

38. Simon's house—This is the first mention of Peter in St. Luke. Peter and Andrew were of Bethsaida (house of fish), a little fishing village, as its name imports, now Ain et Tabijah, "the spring of the fig tree," where, alone on the Sea of Galilee, there is a little strip of bright hard sand. St. Luke does not mention this Bethsaida, though he mentions another at the northern end of the lake. It was so near Capernaum that our Lord may have walked thither, or possibly Simon's mother-in-law may have had a house at Capernaum. It is a remarkable indication of the little cloud of misunderstanding that seems to have risen between Jesus and those of his own house that though they were then living at Capernaum, having perhaps been driven there by the hostility of the Nazarenes, their home was not his home. Simon's wife's mother—There is an inconsistency in accepting these facts of St. Peter's marriage, and yet treating marriage as incompatible with the sacred office of the ministry. His wife seems afterward to have traveled with him. With a great fever—St. Luke, being a physician, uses the technical medical distinction of the ancients, which divided fevers into "great" and "little."

39. She arose and ministered unto them—The fact is stated as showing the completeness of the work of healing. The "great fever" had not left behind it its usual sequel of weakness and exhaustion.

40. When the sun was setting—Sunset ended the Sabbath, and thus enabled Jews, without infringing on the many minute, primary, and subordinate rules of sabbath strictness, to carry their sick-beds and pallets. This twilight scene of Jesus moving about with word and touch of healing among the sick and sufferiug, the raving and tortured crowd is one of the most striking in the gospels, and St. Matthew quotes it as a fulfillment of Isa. liii, 4. There were two reasons why the time should be thus specified: (1) It was natural that the sick should be brought in the cool of the evening, rather than in the scorching heat of the afternoon; and (2) it was the Sabbath, and the feeling which made the Pharisee question the lawfulness of a man's carrying the bed on which he had been lying would probably have deterred the friends of the sick from bringing them as long as it lasted. But with sunset the Sabbath came to a close, and then they would feel themselves free to act. Every one—Implying the solicitude and indefatigableness of this miraculous ministry of love.

42. When it was day—St. Mark (i, 35) uses the expression, "rising up exceedingly early in the morning, while it was yet dark." It was his object to escape into silence, and solitude, and prayer, without being observed by the multitudes. Into a desert place—Densely as the district was populated, such a place might be found in such hill ravines as the Vale of Hoves, at no great distance.

Missionary.

Letter from Japan.

MR. EDITOR: I shall not be able to write a long letter by this mail. The new year has opened upon us with showers of blessings all around. I wrote you of a telegram from Oita of the good news of a revival there, and of a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the church there. There was such a manifestation of the Holy Spirit there as they have never before felt, and the whole church is on the praising God and seeking the salvation of those around them. Here, too, in Kobe, we have had a great blessing, and the whole church is stirred. Also in the "Kwau Sei Gakkn in," our school there has had a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the young men. The good is still going on in our midst, and it seems the whole church here and in many parts of our work is just on the eve of a pentecostal shower of divine grace.

In Oita and here in Kobe and in other places, wherever there has been an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, the native Christians have been influenced to go out on the street and to their homes and, with tears in their eyes, would plead with their fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, to believe in Christ and he saved. The same effect is seen here, as in all lands, where there is an outpouring of the Holy Spirit; Christians are drawn nearer to each other, and their hearts yearn for the conversion of others.

My friend, Mr. Nokagawa, in the city of Himiji, died two weeks since. I went on yesterday to see Mrs. Nokagawa, and she told me he had great peace before he died, and his heart was fixed on St. John i, 12. She showed me the verse which hangs on the wall in the room where he died, and she will not allow it to be removed from its place. She had her Bible and hymn book, and says she finds great comfort in reading the Word of God. I trust dear Christian friends will pray for Mrs. Nokagawa, that she may become a true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. Pray for us all.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Waiting for the Gospel.

What can we do in forming a conception of the conditions and wants, the fears and hopes, the sorrows and agonies, the sins and ruin, the dangers and possibilities, of multiplied millions "groaning and travailing in pain" who never heard of the Savior of men? Each individual a human being—a brother man, with a soul capable but ignorant of God—needing the Savior and waiting for the gospel! And there are continents full of them! We refuse to look steadily at this dark and sorrowful procession going its way to eternity. We can not while we neglect them. If there were only one man in the world who had never heard of Jesus, it would be worthy the combined efforts of heaven and earth to carry him the "glad tidings." What exertions have we witnessed to find Sir John Franklin—only lost in the Arctic seas! And yet there are hundreds of millions drifting into unknown darkness. Saying nothing of pagans in Christian lands, there are, of Mohammedans, 160,000,000; of Asiatic Buddhists, of one sort and another, idolaters all, 600,000,000; of miscellaneous heathen in Africa and in the islands of the sea, 200,000,000 more. If the church looked steadily at such facts; if she read in the light of the Bible and with full faith in God their meaning—so portentous for both worlds—she could never rest till she had "preached the gospel to every creature." Dr. Olin has said, as rightly as eloquently: "Did the church really believe the gospel to be as necessary to the heathen as it is to us, there would be at once and forever an end of her guilty repose."—Go or Send: A Plea for Missions.

Temperance.

NOTES.

Prohibition affects some things and effects some things. Commercial values in six cities of Kansas have in the last four or five years been affected and effected thus:

The increase in the assessed valuation of the six principal cities from 1884 to 1888 is as follows: Atchison, from $3,161,659 to $3,275,378; Fort Scott, from $1,241,882 to $1,987,675; Kansas City, Kansas, from $2,361,773 to $8,023,387; Leavenworth, from $1,571,253 to $5,471,385; Topeka, from $5,617,191 to $8,735,779; Witchita, from $1,759,053 to $10,691,570.

Prof. Kendrick, the noted scientist of Scotland, says "that while wine, beer, gin, etc., produced a similar result on the human body, yet each one produced a well-defined effect of its own. A common effect was produced on the heart and on the nerves, regulating the diameter of the blood-vessels, and thus affecting the distribution of blood on the glands and on the brain; but each had its own specific effect. Beer produced maudlin sottishness, and but spirits maniacal excitement. Even when small quantities were taken the difference was marked. Sherry, or spirits of any kind, produced irritability, shortness, and slight lapses of memory; while malt liquors, and such a wine as port, dulled all the sensibilities and caused languor and listlessness. The crimes of a country were influenced by the kinds of drink indulged in. Indulgence in spirits tended to maniacal outbursts of fury resulting in awful and sudden deeds of crime; the crimes of the soldier beer drinker were tinged by a persistent brutality. The true argument to press on a moderate drinker was that perfect health could be enjoyed without any intoxicant. The habitual use of spirits in a state of health was not justifiable under any circumstances, or in any climate."

Kansas has grown wealthy under prohibition. Property values have increased about $18,750,000 annually, while the increase in population has been 85,307 annually, or a total increase in population of more than half a million of people, and a total increase of values of nearly $150,000,000—to be accurate, $149,979,757.81: 1,591 more school-houses than four years ago, and 1,969 more teachers. The school population has increased during the last four years by the addition of 120,750 children.

The Atlantic Monthly says of the saloon: "It stifles progress, fosters pauperism, brutalizes husbands and fathers, breaks women's hearts, puts rags on the workingman's back, disease in his body, and shame and despair in his heart."

CLIPPINGS.

Nobody believes a prohibition law in this State would absolutely stop the sale of liquor in Chicago any more than he believes that the criminal code effectually prevents crime. But it would destroy the saloon as a political power, and that alone would be worth the cost of the experiment.—Chicago News.

The liquor power is so defiant of law, so vicious under restraint, so ready to enlist the lawless elements of society in its defense, so powerful and unscrupulous in politics, that quiet citizens naturally shrink from contending with such a foe; but it is not true that the majority of citizens view with indifference the trespasses of the liquor traffic upon the peace and order of the Sabbath.—Syracuse Standard.

The crisis in the drink-traffic question is rapidly approaching in this country. The rum power is growing utterly reckless of all restraint and is ruling with a high hand. Government and the State are of secondary or no consequence. The "first concern" has become the protection and perpetuation of the rum power. State and national politics are molded to that end. That time foreshadowed by Senator Platt's historic oration in 1870 is near at hand, when "the republic must triumph over rum, or rum will triumph over the republic." Recent events fully justify these startling declarations. Especially significant are the concessions of even high-license advocates that that much-heralded method has utterly failed to check the saloon curse.—Conn. Home.

The owner of a corner liquor store up town gave an interesting opinion as to the best way to curtail the liquor traffic, the other evening. He had been having a dull day, and was lamenting the fact that there had been little or no treating going on. "People may talk all they like about abolishing or curtailing the liquor traffic," he said: "but they can't do it as long as the treating habit is followed up as it is now. It is treating that gives most of us saloon keepers the most of our income. If our customers come in one by one and get their drinks, and go out, the receipts are very slow in footing up. But if they meet in front of the bar and get sociable, therein is our harvest. When they set to talking politics, then is the high noon of our prosperity. If some of these people who decry the saloon so much would organize a successful movement for the repression of treating, then the saloons would drop out of existence much more rapidly than the highest sort of high license law would make them."—New York Times.

This story is told of an officer in the army: He sat down to weigh the principle of total abstinence and deliberately decide whether it was his duty to adopt it. He took a sheet of paper, and on one side wrote down all the reasons why he thought he ought not to practice it. The list was long and imposing, and he felt sure that he would be safe in refusing to abstain from the use of ardent spirits; but when he undertook to write down on the opposite page the arguments on the other side, they appeared so weighty and numerous that they quickly overbalanced their opponents. He discovered that he had put down several reasons against total abstinence which belonged on the other side. These were transferred, and so overwhelming was the weight of evidence that his judgment was carried as if by storm, and he never afterward doubted concerning the path of duty in this matter. If men would set about the examination of this question in this deliberate, business-like way, and honestly consent to be controlled by the preponderating evidence, few drinkers would be left.—New York Advocate.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1890.

Attention, Preachers!

We speak to all the Methodist preachers in the State of Louisiana, both those belonging to the Louisiana Conference and those belonging to the Mississippi Conference in Louisiana territory. Brethren, we are just entering upon a most terrific struggle against the most gigantic evil and moustrous abomination known to history, the Louisiana State Lottery. While a goodly number of our State papers are on our side and doing valiant service, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is the only paper opposed to the Lottery that has a general circulation over the State. What we want now is to make this circulation more general than ever. We want our paper to go everywhere during this campaign. We can't extend the circulation without the help of the preachers. "Men of Israel, help!" We call upon the preachers and our readers, men and women, boys and girls, to go earnestly to work to put the paper in every family in the State. We must create everywhere an anti-Lottery sentiment, and to do this the people must be informed, and to give such information as shall create that sentiment will be the endeavor of this paper. If you want to do a service of inestimable value to all the best interests of our people, hurl yourselves with all your might into this work and help us. We expect to lose every subscriber and every advertiser that favors the Lottery; but God is our friend, and we confidently expect every true man and woman in the church to come up to our help. "Let us play the men for our people and for the cities of our God."

Denial of Christ.

There are two ways in which men deny Christ, and they both lead to the same dreadful result.

1. Unbelief is a denial of Christ. When a man refuses to believe the word of Christ, that act has far more than a negative effect. It does not leave him on neutral ground. It completely changes his relations and reveals him as an antagonist. If Christ had given no evidence in support of his teaching, unbelief might be harmless. But Jesus does not require men to believe his word without evidence to prove its truth. His word, when he spoke it, was supported by testimony sufficient to establish it. Since it was spoken, that testimony has been growing in strength and clearness and abundance until to-day, and now it is ample and overwhelming. The unbeliever of to-day is so in the face of more light and proof than the world ever had before. It is no wonder, then, that Christ says he will deny those who deny him. It is precisely what every reasonable man would do under like circumstances. After having given his word and ample proof to establish it, if a man rejects it, there is nothing left for Christ to do but to reject that man!

2. Failure to live according to the teaching of Christ is a denial of him. A profession of Christ without a practice of his precepts in daily life is a practical denial of his claims. The profession of religion is annulled by not living up to its teachings. Such a denial may result from "the cares of the world and the deceitfulness of riches and the lusts of other things entering in," for we are assured that "these things choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful." When a professor of religion becomes unfruitful he is denying Christ, for it is his privilege and duty to be bearing fruit all the time. Christ has made the practice of his precepts the test of the genuineness of profession of him, and if the practice is wanting, the profession is a sham. Of all the beings who ever lived on this earth, none were more opposed to shams than Christ. He can not regard with favor the failure to follow his teaching, because it would be a denial of himself.

The result of a denial of Christ: Jesus said, "Whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." Paul says, "If we deny him, he will deny us." Faithfulness is essential to Christ's character. "He can not deny himself." His word is, if we do not the things which he teaches, his very faithfulness to that word will condemn us to perpetual banishment from his glorious presence. Whether we believe or not, whether we practice what we profess or not, still he remains faithful to his word. Unbelief and improper living will alike share in the dreadful sentence of condemnation. "If we believe not, he abideth faithful." "Ye are my friends if ye do the things which I say."

Sunday-School Music.

We quote on this subject a part of an article which appeared in the St. Louis Advocate. We heartily endorse it. We could not, in our view, do a better thing than to adopt the suggestion in all our Sunday-schools:

A further step, for which it seems vain at present to hope, would be the introduction into all our Sunday-schools of the regular hymn and tune book of the church. Were this done, it would infallibly be attended by much good. Among the most weighty influences of childhood are the associations connected with music, and how much greater would be the power of the church were the hymns of the sanctuary also the hymns of the Sunday-school. No nation is more noted for the deep religiousness of its character than the English, and much of this is no doubt due to the fact that from early childhood the hymns of the church are used by the children. The wonderful words of the time-honored hymns are impressed on the minds of the young and are never obliterated. So also it is with the Lutheran Church in Germany and the Scandinavian peninsula. Sunday-school singing books, as such, are unknown among the Lutherans of the older countries; the hymns and tunes which stirred the hearts of the original reformers are good enough for them and their children, and the dearest memories of a German Protestant child cluster around that grand chorale, "Ein Feste Burg ist Unser Gott."

This is no unimportant matter. The formation of character is the work before teachers in Sunday-schools, and in this work music is an important adjunct. The tunes of the church hymnal have proved their own value by ages of use; the hymns of the church have passed through the crucible of time and successfully borne the test. The words and music contained in most of the Sunday-school books demonstrated their own worthlessness by the fact that both children and teachers tire of them in a few months and demand something new. Why not satisfy the demand by placing in their hands the regular hymn book of the church, thus giving at once the best results of the church's experience, and fitting them far better than at present to take their places, when grown, as members of an organization the most popular part of whose service has thus been made familiar to them from earliest childhood.

The Millsaps Methodist College.

The matter of appointing a Board of Trustees for this institution was committed to Bishop C. B. Galloway, who presided at both of the Mississippi Conferences. This was a heavy and an important responsibility. The Bishop, wisely and judiciously appointed on this Board all the members of the original committee because they were picked men, commended to him by the endorsement of their Conferences. Thus far the responsibility imposed was shared by the Conferences uniting in this enterprise. These were men of their own selection.

In addition to the original committees, approved by the Conferences, two additional members of the Board had to be chosen from each Conference. The Bishop wisely selected one of these, for North Mississippi, from the extreme west, and one from the east; and from the Mississippi Conference men were chosen from the coast country that all parts of the territory might be fully represented.

It so happens that only two men on the Board are from any of the places competing for the location of the school—one from each Conference. These two were put on the original committee by their Conferences before there was any competition. They were commended to the Bishop as suitable men for this work.

The rivalry among the several places competing for the location made it improper and unwise for the Bishop to have appointed any one of the new men from anyone of these places, unless he could have given each place a representative on the Board. Even in this case it is better to have the matter left to the arbitrament of impartial and disinterested men, who can act wisely because they see clearly.

It is manifest that the appointment of any one of the new members from any one of the competing places would at once have stirred up fear and jealousy on the part of the other places. The action of Bishop Galloway in this matter was eminently proper, and indicates good judgment, impartiality and far-seeing wisdom.

That two members of the Board are from competing places is modified by two facts. First, they were charged with this work by their Conferences, and, second, they are from each of the Conferences; and so, if not impartial, they will offset each other. These are the facts in this matter. In some places the facts seem to have been forgotten or entirely overlooked.

GILDEROY.

The Opportunity in Brazil.

No one can read the history of the times without being impressed with the fact that in every direction Providence is throwing down the barriers that have opposed the introduction of Christian civilization in its Protestant form. The most notable case of modern times is the revolution in the empire of Brazil. The world was struck with amazement at the suddenness of the revolution, particularly as the Emperor was a man well thought of. Since his overthrow and banishment things have turned out in such a manner as to show the world that there was something beyond the Emperor aimed at, and that was the papal bondage in whose grasp the people were held. As they do wherever they have the power, the priests interfered officiously and obnoxiously with everything, until "forbearance ceased to be a virtue," and the people demanded a change. The provisional government took the matter in hand, and one of its first acts was to promulgate a decree securing religious liberty to all the people. This act has been the cause of great rejoicing in Brazil, and by it a "great and effectual door" has been opened for the triumphant entrance of Protestantism into that magnificent empire. The following is the substance of the decree:

It prohibits the federal authorities or individual States, from making any laws, rules, regulations, or passing any administrative acts, establishing any religion as the religion of the State. To all citizens is given the privilege of exercising their religious beliefs according to their own dictates, and in their devotions, either private or public, they shall not be interrupted or disturbed. This liberty embraces also churches, associations and institutions in which there are religious observances, everyone having the full right of forming religious associations and living in accordance with his creed without interference from the powers. All patronage, resources and prerogatives of religious institutions granted by the State are extinguished.

The right of all churches and religious orders of acquiring and administering estates under the limits made by the laws regarding corporations is lawfully recognized, granting to each one the ownership of the property as well as the use of the buildings for worship. The federal government will continue to furnish the ecclesiastical revenues and support the actual personnel of the Catholic Church where it was done under the old regime for one year, and for a like period will subsidize the professorships in the seminaries. It is in the option of each State to recognize in the future, ministers of this or other religions, providing they do not run counter to what is laid down in the preceding articles.

This opens a grand field for missionary work. We are already at work there; but the security which the new government guarantees to all churches to prosecute their work without molestation or hindrance, should spring our people at home to come forward now with their money in unstinted measure to assist Bishop Granbery, who has charge of that field, to plant the standard of Methodism all over that land. This is virtually the opening of all Latin America to Protestant enterprise. The teeming millions there are ready for the reception of evangelical Christianity. Will the Protestants of the United States improve the opportunity the Lord has thus thrust upon them?

The Gambling Mania.

In giving an account of a "pious raffle" for the benefit of a Roman Catholic Church in St. Louis, the Mid-Continent takes occasion to offer these pertinent observations on the subject of gambling in general:

Gambling is of late showing unusual boldness in our country. The vice represented by 6,000 persons tempted each one to throw away one honestly earned dollar, that the 6,001st might gain one-half the sum they lost, and some holy cause might gain the other half, is self-evidently dishonest and dangerous. Raffling is directly against the law of most of the States, which shows the public, and not the strictly religious, estimate of its character. Our youth are having a fearful example set before them, that many of them will not be slow to follow. This vice once started on, is known to be very seducing and fascinating. It attracts women as well as men, and is as destructive of the true principle of honesty in heart and conscience in them as in men. The idea of getting something for nothing, that which costs money for neither labor nor brains, lies at the very base of public immorality, and has ruined many a fair character in youth. The wide introduction of small prizes in parlor card-playing to give zest to the game, is to blame for much of the popular demoralization on the subject. We mean progressive euchre, and such games, where something is put up to be won. To call these things "gifts" is a thin disguise. It would seem that the subject should not need an argument to prove its immorality and danger to the public welfare. In all nations the rise of the gambling proclivity has been a sure indication of the decline of public morality and of national decay. The growing popularity and power of the lottery system in our land is a conspicuous and threatening evil.

But when the question enters the realm of Christ and his church, how can there be any doubt or questioning for an instant? The need of money is never so great that it will require the use of doubtful methods in raising it. It does not relieve the matter that the people enter into the scheme willingly and are not forced to it. The good name of the Master should not be smirched with any even doubtful courses. The refusal of a large sum of money raised by raffling methods in Chicago, when offered for the Presbyterian Hopital, and a similar incident in Philadelphia, show what should be done in such cases. The position of our own church herein is not doubtful. And in these easy and relaxing days there is particular need of keeping ourselves clean and free from the very appearance of evil. The Lord's blessing is needed to consecrate all things offered to him. And he will not bless, neither will he accept the fruits of iniquity offered for his cause. Those who bear aloft the banner of the cross should hold it high, that it suffer no reproach or shame from those who stand without.

The Preacher and the School.

We believe that a preacher should be a molder of society, socially and intellectually, as well as spiritually, so as to give "free course" to the word. He must dig out the channels in which to turn the gospel current. No man can do this who is not thoroughly awake to the educational interest of his people. Ignorance is, and always has been one of the deadliest foes of religions, as well as of civil progress; we must deepen and broaden our channels of Christian movement by educating our people. Complaints are constantly made that the people do not take a comprehensive view of Christianity and its mission, and hence are almost useless to the church. The people need mental attention to secure great spiritual usefulness. It is no surprise that some sections of the country pay so little attention to the claims made upon them by the church. They are not educated to look beyond the interests of their own immediate vicinity. When we speak of education, we do not limit the term to our colleges and universities. We fear that this part of the field is being cultivated to the hurt of the common schools of our church. Our colleges can not do the work that the church demands, for the reason that comparatively few can attend them. What we need is a higher education of the masses, such as can come only from the common schools. The church should have its schools in every district, and in every circuit and station, if possible. We may well learn a lesson from our Catholic friends just here. The preacher who is asleep to the educational interests of his charge is neglecting one of the best means of promoting the gospel.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

Pulpit Manners.

This is from the Congregationalist. Does it fit you, brother?

The writer of this paragraph heard a very good man preach very well on the last Sabbath. But it was clear that the good man had not the slightest suspicion how, as a stranger, he was damaging the moral effect of the total impression which he was making on the congregation by the utter carelessness—not to say, the seeming indevotion—of his behavior in the brief "waits" of his service. He stood up during the singings, as did the congregation, but instead of joining with the people, or reverently listening to their song if he could not sing himself, he spent the time in sorting out the notices, looking up the next hymn, finding the Scripture reading, adjusting the sliding pulpit-top, his shirt collar, and so forth. There is a legal maxim: de minimis non curat lex. But if the law does not concern itself about trifles, the gospel does. And he who wishes to make that gospel acceptable to a miscellaneous congregation, with its average of sharp-eyed and sharp-judging prejudice, will do well to take Dr. Young's advice, and Think naught a trifle, though it small appear.

Notes.

The Ruston Caligraph says of the present contest against the Lottery: "Let us continue the fight until the foul concern is blotted from existence in our State." Amen!

The growth of a church is the evidence of its vitality; its power of adaptation is the evidence of its indestructibility. When a church ceases to grow its life is gone; when it loses its power of adaptation its utter destruction is only a question of a little time.

One of the great preachers of the South—a foremost man in another church—said to us the other day: "The most distressing sign of the times is the grasp the world has upon the church, and I don't see how we are to get loose from worldliness." Have you thought of that?

Dr. Haygood writes this paragraph in the Nashville Advocate on the solution of the race problem:

Let us have law, education, religion. These solve problems and elevate men. An honest judge—a faithful teacher—a consecrated preacher—these three, working together, can, under God, solve any sort of social and civil problems.

The St. Louis Advocate, having been asked about the beginning and ending of the century, answered: "Ninety-nine cents never counts for a dollar, nor do men ever begin to count the second hundred till the first is ended." That is the best answer we have seen to a simple question which seems to puzzle some folks.

This, from an exchange, ought to open some eyes wide:

Dion Boucicault, the famous playwright, asserts that "more than $200,000,000 is paid every year by the American people for their theatrical entertainment." That means nearly $18 to support the theatre for $1 given to send the gospel to heathen nations; and yet there are those who declaim against the cost of foreign missions.

A Christian being asked by a sceptical acquaintance how he knew he was saved, replied: "How do I know when I have sugar in my tea? Isn't it all the sweeter? And when Christ is in the heart, life is all the sweeter." The Psalmist said to his sceptical acquaintances, "Taste and see that the Lord is good." No evidence like experience!

What Henry Ward Beecher said about men consenting to slavery is true in regard to the Lottery. We just substitute the "Louisiana Lottery" for the word "slavery," and give it: "Every man consents to the Louisiana Lottery who does not exhaust himself in efforts to prevent it." The Savior said: "He that is not with me is against me."

A prominent gentleman in political circles in this city informed us, the other day, that the Lottery had proposed to elect a certain member of the Legislature to Congress; but the legislator saw that the object was to get him out of the Legislature, and he declined the honor. If all our legislators would thus foster the interests of the State, there would be no danger from the Lottery.

A writer in the Texas Advocate suggests that the Conference claimants might be assisted by a General Board, similar to other General Boards. This would, at least, make their support a connectional matter and insure a special attention from the whole church. Whether that would work better than the present plan is doubtful. It seems to us that our present plan is better. Perhaps if we could adopt the Wesleyan plan, that would solve the whole difficulty.

In the town of Latbrop, Mo., the officers and the men failed to execute the local option law, whereupon the women gathered in force, attacked the saloon with brick-bats and axes and hatchets, stove in the windows, broke down the doors, rolled the kegs and barrels and bottles into the street, emptied their contents in the gutters, and thus broke up the unlawful business. It was unlawful, of course, for women to do that! Was it lawful for the saloon to run contrary to law?

We think the New York Sun "hits the nail on the head" in this paragraph:

There is no union of Church and State here, and there can be no public taxation for the schools of any church, or to propagate any religious doctrines and dogmas. The education of the State, provided solely because of civil necessities, must be secular. But consistently with its theory it can not be more than a simple, elementary education. This whole ironbie about religion comes from the unjustifiable extension of the State instruction far beyond such a limit.

The Attorney General of the United States says:

I had hoped and believed that the day for the chartering of new lotteries had gone by. I had supposed that the only reason for the existence of a lottery anywhere in the United States, was the fact that it had become by a sort of prescription so entrenched in some localities that it could not be easily removed. That the Louisiana State Lottery, for instance, is a great public evil, I think, is generally conceded; and I as little expected the Legislature of North Dakota to sanction a lottery as that the Legislature of Massachusetts would legalize polygamy.

Personal and Otherwise.

We like very much to get credit for what we do. We are not unlike other people in this respect. So when the Mid-Continent quotes "Sam Jones on the Lottery," and gives the Southwestern Christian Advocate credit for it, we are ready to exclaim with the Rev. Sam, "My! my!" Try again, Bro. Taylor.

"Wonders will never cease." It was announced that the pastor of a certain Boston church was about to get married, and when the news came to the official Board they promptly raised his salary!

The Interior says:

There is a great deal in knowing what you are talking about, and you are always listened to with more interest if you talk only about that of which you are well informed.

That will apply with tremendous force to preaching.

John G. Whittier received from Robert Bonner's Sons one thousand dollars for his last poem, "The Captain's Well." There are forty-eight stanzas of two lines each. Mr. Whittier is eighty-two years old, and this is one of his finest poems.

Dr. C. K. Marshall, in the Nashville Advocate, says that all the issues of our Advocates for two weeks do not equal the issues of the New York World for one day. We believe the Doctor's statement to be too low! Yet we have one million members and four million adherents.

Dr. Barbee will publish a Daily Christian Advocate at St Louis during the session of the General Conference.

We are indebted to Bro. Van Valkenburgh, 106 Camp St., for a copy of Pocket Lessons for Sunday-schools for 1890. It is quite a convenient vest-pocket vade mecum, brief and pointed.

The Sunday-school literature from our House for the next month is on hand, and as good as the best. We commend it to all our people.

J. R. Bingham, treasurer of the North Mississippi Conference Board of Church Extension, writes that Corinth station has paid its assessment for church extension for the year, and the money goes to work at once building churches.

Dr. Tillett's article in the Texas Advocate, in regard to Hymn 889, is a "settler" to the critics who have pounced down upon it. Eh! Bro. Campbell?

Once for all, we say to the brethren who have complaints against the secretaries of the Conference for reporting them incorrectly in the printed Minutes, send those complaints to the secretaries and not to this office. Our observation on these matters is that the secretaries go by the figures given by the preachers at Conference, and in nine cases out of ten the secretaries are right.

Presiding Elder Mellen, of the Meridian district, has appointed Rev. I. W. Tinnin to supply Union circuit in that district.

We do not send out bills for obituaries. Don't ask us to do it. If your obituary is beyond the required length, send the money with the obituary: five cents for every line over thirty-five lines. This is the law.

Our young friend, Rev. Josephus Stephan, has favored us with a copy of his Church Building Advocate, a monthly devoted to the interests of Marvin Chapel. It is a creditable periodical, and we trust will be a great success.

Dr. McAnally, senior editor of the St. Louis Advocate, is eighty years old. He has been sixty-one years in the ministry and forty-one years in the editorial chair. That is a length of service which few attain unto. The vigor of the good Doctor's utterances sound as if they came from a much younger man.

Bro. Sawyer, our secretary, informs us that the Minutes of the Louisiana Conference are out, and will be sent to the preachers by express to their nearest office.

Bro. Scruggs, our pastor at Shreveport, in a note to us, speaking of the Lottery, says: "The fight at this end of the State we hope to make a success. Down with the monster." That's what every true lover of our State says, and we are going to down the monster!

Rev. W. J. Rives, a superannuate of North Mississippi Conference, died at his home in McNarry county, Tenn., February 19.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. H. P. Lewis, Benton, Miss., writes: "I am moving on well with my work. Have procured fifteen new cash subscribers to our dear good ADVOCATE, and my prayer is that the blessing of our kind Father above may rest upon and abide with editor, publisher, business manager, one and all, and that ours may grow to be one of the best of all our church papers. If all our preachers of the three patronizing Conferences would rally, as they might and ought, to your support, I believe it would soon be one of the best, if not the best. God bless you all."

—Rev. W. F. Henderson writes from Pleasant Hill: "I have nearly completed two rounds on my work, and while the congregations are fairly good and the people kind and attentive, yet we have great need of a revival, a 'living again.' of the church. Feeling this, and realizing that the gospel has lost none of its power, we are preaching, praying and laboring to this end. Missed my appointment last Sunday, having been down all the week with la grippe. Am up again now. Pray for us."

—Rev. T. B. White writes from Mansfield, La.: "It may be encouraging and inspiring to others to state: Our congregations keep up finely; singing on quite a "boom" with new organ and new hymn book; five persons recently received into the church on profession of faith, and we are expecting others; also several by certificate. Our gospel temperance prayer meeting, last Friday night, was instructive and edifying. Finances healthy. Mansfield Female College doing good work, with about forty boarders. I praise God for health and a full salvation."

If you want your people to have a full and correct account of the doings of the General Conference that is soon to meet, press upon them the fact that our paper will give the best account to them that they can get. Use this point in your canvass for the paper.

Corrections.

In the ADVOCATE of February 20, Bro. T. A. Holloman says: "As per the Minutes, page 32, the cities of Vicksburg and Natchez (Jefferson Street) positively did not raise one cent on this (General Conference) assessment." I write this to say that Jefferson Street Church did pay her full assessment on this and every other claim against her, and it was so reported and paid at the Annual Conference in Crystal Springs. If the Minutes do not show it, the Minutes are incorrect that far.

Respectfully, W. E. BALLARD.

Our statistical secretary, or, at least, our Minutes as published, makes me say, in answer to the question, "What amount has been expended on churches and parsonages?" $270, where I did say in my report $2,700. We built two churches, a parsonage and a tabernacle; and I think Louisville work should have credit for all improvements made. F. P. SPENCER.

I wish to correct through the ADVOCATE a mistake made in publishing the Minutes of our last Annual Conference. Topisaw circuit was assessed for Conference claimants $25, and paid $25 in full; and the Minutes have failed to report anything.

J. M. COWAN.

B. CARRAHINE, Pres.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company, since its organization in 1843, has paid to its policy holders $287,681,948 20. The wonderful growth of the Company is due in a large degree to the freedom from restriction and irksome conditions in the contract and to the opportunities for investment which are offered in addition to indemnity in case of death.

The Mutual Life was the first to practically undertake the simplification of the insurance contract and strip it of a verbinge in the mazes of which could be found innumerable refuges against claims of policy holders who had, however unwittingly, departed from the strict letter of the agreement. That this appealed powerfully to the popular taste is evident from the fact that in 1889 the company wrote over $151,000,000 of new insurance.

Are broken down from overwork or household cares. Brown's Iron Bitters rebuilds the system, aids digestion, removes excess of bile, and cures malaria. Get the genuine.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

WHICH SIDE ARE YOU ON?

BY ANNA B. HENDERSON.

Come, children, and listen; I'll tell you in rhyme
A story of something that happened one time.
There was war in the land, and each brave heart beat high.
And many went forth for their country to die;
But words fail to tell of the fear and dismay
Which swept the small village of W. one day,
When the enemy's army marched into the street
And their own valiant soldiers were forced to retreat.

Such hiding, surrendering, and trembling with fear!
When what in the midst of it all should appear
But Grandmother Gregory, feeble and old,
Coming out from her cottage, courageous and bold.
She faced the intruders who marched through the land,
Shaking at them the poker she held in her hand.

"How foolish!" her friends cried, provoked, it is true.
"Why, grandmother, what did you think you could do?"
"Not much," answered grandma, "but ere they were gone
I wanted to show them which side I was on."

Now, children, I've told this queer story to you
To remind you of something the weakest can do,
There is always a fight 'twixt the right and the wrong,
And the heat of the battle is borne by the strong;
But no matter how small, or unfit for the field,
Or how feeble or graceless the weapon you wield,
O fail not, until the last enemy's gone,
To stand up and show them which side you are on.

A Good Name.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Even the unscrupulous men know the worth of good principles that can not be moved.

A gentleman turned off a man in his employ at the bank, because he refused to write for him on Sunday. When asked afterwards to name some reliable person he might know, as suitable for a cashier in another bank, he mentioned this same man.

"You can depend upon him," he said, "for he refused to work for me on the Sabbath."

A gentleman, who employed many persons in his large establishment, said: "When I see one of my young men riding for pleasure on Sunday, I dismiss him on Monday; I know such a man can not be trusted. Nor will I employ anyone who even occasionally drinks liquor of any kind."

Boys, honor the Lord's day and all the teachings of the Bible, and you will not fail to find favor with God, and with man also.—Selected.

LEARN A TRADE.—Hardly a day passes but what we see evidences of the folly of young men scattered here and there. They are willing to work for about the half they should be receiving. If you ask them what their trade is, they will reply that they have none. In these days, when skilled labor is in demand, it is a shame and outrage for so many bright, promising young men to be loitering their time away either for want of work, or, if they have it, in a position where their pay is nothing. We have seen too many such who expect to climb up the ladder of fame and fortune without working for it. They are looking around for pins to pick up, and then be folded to the embrace of some wealthy bank president or philanthropic merchant, made a partner, and finally marry into the family. Such cases are not to be found every day in the present time. We read Munchausen tales of years gone by that have an ending like this. But to-day the merchant who wants a young man wants one of character and ability. Learn a trade, young man; first become proficient in some industry, so that when you go forth to pastures new you have something to fall back on for a living. If the young man to-day would ask some of our old successful merchants for the secret of their success in life, they would be astonished at the stories of hardships, trials, and privations they endured. Fathers, mothers, is there not a lesson to be learned from this? Is it not your duty to see your boys educated to make their living, so that when they come to man's estate they can bless you for it? —Columbus Herald.

Remember this—let us all remember it: No crowned queen, no general leading great armies, could do more than be faithful, and every little child even can do so much as that. You are not asked to fight any enemies except those that are right before you. If you resist and conquer them, then some other battles may be given you to wage by and by; but if you do not fight the good fight as it is, then you ought not to be given any battle of more importance. Christ wants the children to come into his kingdom, and he gives the children a part in the warfare. Be brave; do the right thing; obey him; resist temptation; don't give up; be wide awake; and, above all, trust in Christ, love him, be loyal to him, and follow where he leads. So not only in childhood, but down to old age, strive to fight the good fight of faith, and to prove yourself a true soldier of the Cross.—The Rev. P. T. Farwell.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little Louisiana girl. I wrote one letter to you, and you were kind enough to publish it. I am eleven years old. I am a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I go to Sunday-school every other Sunday; I like to go very much. Dr. J. H. Whitington is our preacher this year. I don't know much about him, but think I will like him very much. I heard him preach once. I am not going to try to love him as I did Bro. Roberts, because, if I did, Bishop Galloway would take him away from us, and it wouldn't be any use. I loved him better than any other preacher I ever knew, and it was so hard to have to give him up to go on another circuit. I will answer Josie Henkel's question. The word "gold" is first found in Genesis xxiv, 22. I will also answer Hattie Woodard's question. The word "butter" is found in Genesis xviii, 8. Mr Editor, please publish this, as I want my cousin, M. A. Taylor, and Uncle Wiley Brown to see my letter. With many kind wishes to you, and wishing the ADVOCATE much success, I am,

Your little friend,
ZULA M. POWERS.

CLINTON, La.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to the ADVOCATE, I thought I would do so. We have a nice Sunday-school here. I am a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at this place, and also the Sunday-school. My teacher is Mrs. A. A. Kidd. We all love her dearly; she is so kind and good. I am proud to say that ours is the banner class. Our pastor is Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy. He is loved very much by everyone. I attend Ruston College. Our president is Prof. T. S. Sligh. Hoping to see my letter published, I remain,

Your little friend,
DAISIE MORRIS.

RUSTON, La.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote to your paper once before, but, as I never saw it in print, probably it reached the waste-basket. It seems like the editors won't publish my letters, for I wrote to the Sunday-School Visitor once, and never have seen it. Papa takes your interesting paper. I will answer Josie Henkel's question: "Where was gold first found in the Bible?" Genesis xiii, 2. Abram was very rich in cattle, silver and in gold. Well, I will say good-bye, with a heart full of love for the dear old ADVOCATE. I am,

Your true friend,
MATTIE STUART.

MR. EDITOR: As I never see a letter from this part of the country, I thought I would write one. I am a little girl eight years old. I do not go to Sunday-school now, as we haven't any yet, but soon will. I do love to go to Sunday-school. I must tell you about our new preacher, Rev. N. J. Roberts. He is such a good preacher; we all love him. I do love to hear him preach. If this letter is printed, I will write again. Your little friend,

Relative Values.

A chatty woman, who signs herself "Pleasant Riderhood," conducts the "Woman's Department" of the Ruston Caligraph. She gives her readers some of the very best home-bred philosophy. In a recent chat on the "Value of Out-door Life for Women," occurs this paragraph, which will do to think on awhile:

May Heaven speed the day when dozens of our delicate women will lay aside some of their house-keeping cares, their dusting brushes and suicidal needles, and find health, strength and vigor in open-air exercise; when they will turn to employments, both pleasant and profitable, which will take them, for several hours a day, into the life-giving sunshine.

Once I received a rather incongruous mixture of gifts: a lovely little garden hoe and a lovely little diamond ring, (I assure you, ladies, strange as it may seem, putting the hoe first is not the result of oversight,) Their relative values, judged by the usual standard, were fifty cents and fifty dollars. But estimated by the proper gauge, the days of pure happiness, the physical improvement, the saving of medicine and doctors' bills, wrought by the little hoe, their values were relatively five hundred dollars and fifty dollars.

All the tonics of all the doctors —Dr. Brown-hyphen-Sequard thrown in—can never equal the heavenly elixir of sunlight and pure air.

No Work That Pays Better.

It costs something to be a good mother. There is no more exacting and exhausting work in the world than a true mother's work. But there is no work in all the world that pays better. No reward in God's service is surer, richer, grander than the reward to a faithful and faith-filled mother.

And as to the idea that a mother can neglect this work in the earlier years of her children's life, and rake it up to better advantage in their later years, that is as baseless in fact as it is in philosophy. No mother on earth ever yet won her child's freest, truest confidence in its maturer years if she had failed of securing it before that period. No mother would deserve such confidence if she deliberately postponed their seeking until then.

It may be—it often is—a wise mother's duty to be measurably separated from her children in their latter training, when they must be at school or at labor, or in the enjoyment of well-chosen companionship outside of their home; but this should never be accepted as a necessity until the mother's hold on the children's confidence is so strong, through the experience of the years that are gone, that only the close of life can diminish, can change the conscience-power of that hold.

As a rule, a child's taste and character, and trend in life, and even its permanent destiny, are practically shaped before the child is seven years of age. A mother's failure of a motherly devotedness in those first seven years can never be made good by seven times seven years of devotedness thereafter.

EVOKE THE BEST TALENT IN A CHILD.—Nearly every child is endowed by nature with a faculty or aptitude for some special work, varying as the temperaments and individualities differ in each member of the family. It is here where the fine discernment and discriminatiug judgment of the parents should be exercised to evoke the best talent, to encourage and foster its manifestation by every means calculated to bring it to perfection. Is it musical ability? Then see to it that patient drudgery of daily practice is honestly performed, not alone by oral command, but by personal supervision, for it is natural for children to shirk labor. The rule applies to boy or girl indifferently. Whatever the bent—even if opposed to your own preferences —if decided talent or skill is evinced, cultivate it in a practical manner for contingent practical necessities. Teach your children something, and teach it well and to the utmost limit of his or her capacity.—Rural Californian.

The Language of the Future.

The controversy in regard to this subject has only one conclusion. The language of the future will be the language which Chatham and Webster kindled into eloquence; in which Shakespeare and Milton bodied forth all things in heaven and earth, and in the place beneath, and in which Tennyson and Longfellow sang. It is somewhat curious to note the progress of this English tongue. The language in which Shakespeare and Milton wrote was the language of less than six million people, and when Washington was President less than sixteen million used the English language. At that time French was spoken by from thirty to fifty million. Half a century ago as large a proportion of the population of the globe spoke German as English. Now German is far behind in this respect. In Austria, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, and the United States, German is spoken by about 60,000,000 people. In France, Belgium, Alsace-Lorraine, Switzerland, the United States and Canada, Hayti, Algiers, India, the West Indies and Africa, French is spoken by about 45,000,000. In the British Isles, the United States, Canada, Australia, the West Indies, India and other British colonies, English is freely spoken by 100,000,000. These figures are very significant and their analysis, did space permit us to give it, would prove even more so. The fact is that the enterprise of the English people long ago led them to explore this globe pretty thoroughly and to pick up whatever was worth having. It was not an action of the government, for the governments of that day were too stupid to originate any policy whatever. It was the work of semi-commercial buccaneers whose discoveries and pretensions the government had just sense enough to sustain. Out of this condition of things has arisen the widely scattered extent of the British Empire. But this very condition of things paved the way for the extension of the influence and language of Great Britain. Wherever the English standard was planted the English tongue was spoken, so that now, all over the world, more than in the case of Latin in the old Roman empire, an Englishman can go round the world and be understood, speaking only his native tongue. It is somewhat curious that the latest triumph of the English language should have been due to American influences, yet such is the fact. When the Samoan Conference was held at Berlin the natural impulse was to hold the discussions, as usual, in French, which, time out of mind, has been the language of diplomacy. But, on the representation of an American delegate, the conferences were held in English, and accordingly to America is due the first surrender of diplomatic usage to the English language. In that case, the marvel to the American diplomats was that the other delegates understood and used the language so well. The same thing has been observed in regard to the knowledge of English shown by the several members of the Pan-American Congress, and of the International Maritime Conference. These instances served to show that outside of the English-speaking nations the knowledge of the English tongue is very general. Accordingly, it may be said with confidence that, if a great revolution does not take place, submerging English and American interests, then those interests are bound to prevail all over the globe, and with their general prevalence will come the universal use of the English language.—Washington Post.

Diseases of Women.

Nausea, indigestion, bloating, general debility DEPRESSION, SLEEPLESSNESS, liver and kidney troubles and kindred affections, permanently cured by using Maguire's Cundurango.

I. A. C. Hallenbinger, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

The most potent remedies for the cure of disease have been discovered by accident. The first dose of Dr. Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria was given, as an experiment, to an old lady almost dying from the effects of Malaria, on whom Quinine acted as a poison. One dose cured her; and a single dose has cured thousands since. It is the only known Antidote for the poison of Malaria. Sold by Druggists.

People Wonder

WHEN they find how rapidly health is restored by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The reason is that this preparation contains only the purest and most powerful alteratives and tonics. To thousands yearly it proves a veritable elixir of life.

Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brockway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and Indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggist.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his foot. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a sugar mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attewell, Sharbot Lake, Ontario.

BOWMAN—Died, at the residence of Samuel Whited, in Ouachita parish, La., December 15, 1889, Mrs. JANE BOWMAN, aged seventy years. The editor knew Mrs. Bowman from his boyhood. She was the daughter of Dr. Mark Bonner, of Clinton, La. Her first husband was Mr. Dunn, of East Feliciana parish. Her second husband was Rev. James Bowman, of Ouachita parish.

Mrs. Bowman was a Christian woman in the best sense of that word. She was kind to the poor, looking continually for opportunities to help them. She was as firm a friend as anyone could have. She was devoted to God. She dearly loved the church. She implicitly trusted in an atoning Savior. She was ever ready with her alabaster box of precious ointment. She strewed flowers along the path of the living. Many rise up to-day and call her blessed. Providence could not have pleased her better than to permit her to die where she could be buried by the side of her husband and her idolized boy. Many are the happy days spent by the editor at her pleasant home. She lived as "seeing him who is invisible." The veil has been withdrawn, and now she sees "eye to eye and face to face."

EDITOR.

BRANTLY—Died, in Alexandria, La., January 5, 1890, EDWIN C. BRANTLY, in the forty-ninth year of his age.

A man marked by modesty, integrity and geniality! By nature singularly sensitive and shrinking, with precarious health, bearing about in his body the reminiscences of the exposure and hardships of his soldier-boy experiences. His life-struggle was made under painful conditions, under restrictions on the very energies of life within him, by threatened disease.

Though meek and uncomplaining, he often suffered from a poignant sense of defeat, in not being able to master the difficulties of his situation. He leaves an interesting family behind him—a wife and six children—who will sadly miss his gentle presence, good counsels and influence. To his children he bequeathed the fair and ever-to-be-cherished memory—"My father was a Christian gentleman."

A. B.

GLOVER—WILLIAM GLOVER died at his home, in Natchitoches parish, La., October 22, 1889, aged sixty-five years. William Glover was born in Alabama, and came to Louisiana in 1844.

The writer knew him for many years. He did not join the church until near his death. When he was taken sick he sent for the writer to come to see him, and he wanted to join the church and be baptized, and when he was baptized he was happy and praised the Lord. Thus he passed away. He left a wife to mourn his loss; he has two sons and one daughter that had crossed the river. May God help us to live as to meet in the sweet by-and-by.

J. C. CARNLINE.

SEAY—Died, August 12, MALCOLM M., son of Dr. M. B. and Mrs. F. E. Seay, aged nearly four years. How sad for one who knew and loved this little child to record his early death! Not yet had his little feet become weary of life's journey, but, burdenless, his life went out, leaving to aching hearts the tender memory of one whose mission was accomplished while it could be said, "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

Dear little Malcolm was a favorite of all who knew him, so affectionate, so bright and happy—a real little sunbeam. No one could feel lonely with him, and we can scarcely realize that we shall never in this life hear that loved voice that gave us such a welcome, nor the patter of the little feet as he would run to meet us. How hard it seems! Human wisdom would have ordered it differently. Whilst life lingered hope still whispered that the dark death-angel might leave the sweet little boy with us; but the Savior, who makes no mistakes, called him to a brighter, happier home. Lightly lay the sod upon his early grave! How he will be missed in the home circle! But, dear parents, does not heaven seem brighter—far, and nearer, too, since your loved child is there? And when life's pilgrimage is over, that we may meet our loved ones "gone before," in that sun-bright clime, where "God shall wipe away all tears," is the hope of AUNTIE.

GALE—Mrs. NARCISSA ELIZABETH GALE (nee Lewis) was born December 4, 1856. She was married to Rev. R. S. Gale, of the Mississippi Conference, March 22, 1887.

Sister Gale was a true, good woman; quiet in disposition, agreeable in manner, dutiful in all things. She was of the large Lewis relationship of this section, noted for their piety and Methodism, and was ever faithful to their record. She joined the church at the first Crystal Springs Camp Meeting, then in her girlhood. She was an intelligent Christian, a constant Bible reader and an efficient worker in the church, especially the Sunday-school—always keeping up with the Sunday-school lessons. She was a great help to her pious husband.

On Sunday morning, November 24, 1889, she triumphantly departed this life. Just before her death she said, "All is well!" with countenance illuminated with an unearthly smile, and, singing, "I am trusting, Lord, in thee," she passed away. What satisfaction in the assurance that heaven is her eternal home!

B. S. RAYNER.

BALLARD—Died at his home in Tangipahoa parish, January 12, 1890, ELIJAH BALLARD, at the age of seventy-six. Bro. Ballard had been a consistent member of the Baptist Church for a great many years; an humble, devoted Christian, who was honored and loved by all who knew him. He leaves a large family, a wife with whom he lived fifty-two years and children and a large number of friends to mourn for him; but we all know where to find him, for he chose the strait way to the narrow gate long ago, and we know he passed through.

A. FRIEND.

MCNEIL—On November 6, 1889, God sent an angel to the home of Bro. Charlie McNeil, of Amite county, Miss., and took their oldest child, LITTLE. Just a little over two years did he gladden the home of the parents. But God's ways are best. The parents mourn not as those who have no hope, but are assured that their little treasure is in heaven. May they so live that they may meet their little one where parting will be no more! May God's Spirit support them in this dark hour of affliction!

M. H. MOORE.

GERMAN—On October 24, 1889, the angel of death visited the home of W. T. and Hattie A. German, of Anacoco, La., and claimed as his victim their sweet little babe, JOSEPHINE CONERLY, aged seven months.

Little Phenie, sweet be thy rest, for we know you are with the blessed, waiting to welcome the coming of a loving mother and a kind father.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

FEWELL.—Tribute of respect to the memory of Mrs. M. C. FEWELL, who died January 17, 1890.

Whereas, it hath pleased God, in his inscrutable providence, to call from earth to heaven the sweet spirit of our dear sister, Mrs. Maggie C. Fewell; feeling that "death lies on her like an untimely frost upon the sweetest flower of all the field," the Meridian Auxilliary, Woman's Missionary Society, adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in her death we bow submissive to the decree of an all-wise Father. While we mourn her departure from our midst, we rejoice that pain and suffering for her are over, and though absent from the body, present with the Lord forevermore.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with her heart-broken mother, husband and sorrowing relatives in their sad bereavement. May the Lord comfort their hearts, and help them to freely say, "Thy will be done!"

Resolved, That in days to come the melody of her tuneful voice shall long be missed from our missionary meetings, where she often sang for us so sweetly the words of the favorite hymn. Though dead, she yet speaketh in tender pathos to the living of the heathen.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Mrs. J. B. CHATFIELD,

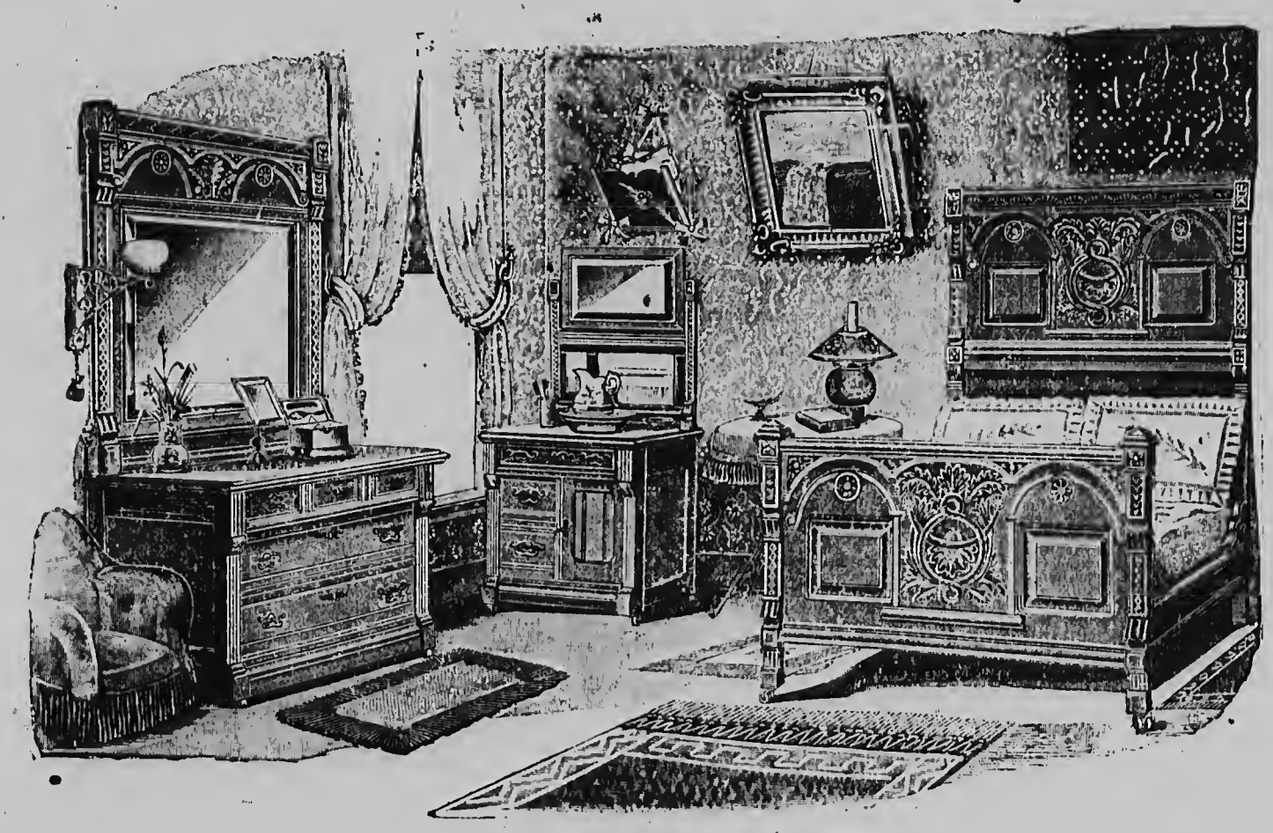
Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

EDITED BY

W. P. HARRISON, D.D.

The erudition of the editor is so well known that no commendation of his skill and ability is necessary. The mechanical execution is not excelled by any publication of its kind. It is especially designed to meet the wants of the THINKING CLASS, both of the clergy and laymen.

No preacher who desires to be progressive can afford to be without the REVIEW.

The list of new enterprises in the South during last week, as published in the Manufacturers' Record, shows unprecedented activity in the sales of mineral and timber lands, and large tracts, and the administration of companies, with local and outside capital, to build new towns and establish industries. A party is being formed in St. Louis, with strong financial backing, to make thorough scientific exploration of the great unknown region lying in the far Northwest between the coast range and main range of the Rockies—chiefly in the new State of Washington. The unrelenting warfare against the Hebrew race in Russia and the intermittent anti-Semitic crusades in Germany and other countries have led to proposals for a meeting of prominent and representative European Jews, to which it is understood a few Americans of that race will also be invited, at Amsterdam, or some other city in a small nationality, in the course of the coming summer.

By intelligence from Mozambique, it is reported that the Makololo, incited by the agents of the East African Lakes Company, had attacked the Portuguese. The natives were supplied with arms and ammunition by the agents. The Scotch missionaries at Blantyre, who were opposed to these proceedings of the agents, interfered, arrested hostilities and restored peace.

PROSPEXIT.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

"I would have that death bandaged my eyes, and forbore,
And bade me creep past."
—Browning's "Prospice."

I.

He watched for it—met it—and conquered!
With joy on his face,
He fronted the fear. But the darkness
That shrouded the place
In mystery failed to affright him;
For firmly and fast
He clung to his faith—that somewhither,
Will triumph at last,
God's ends in this earthly creation—
That infinite love,
Will lift the true soul that can trust in him,
All evils above!

II.

Why fear them? That trust was his anchor;
Himself hath so said.
His life shall be only beginning,
When death shall be dead;
Why should not the smile on his features
Betoken that he Saw the "soul of his soul" through a radiance
None other might see?
Clasped hands with her—named her in rapture—
Reached forth, as it drawn
By fingers invisible—faltered
One word—and was gone!

The Law of Life—The Secret of Their Trouble.

BY REV. JOEL T. DAVES.

Some years ago I crossed, in an unexpected place, a beautifully bound volume of "Draper's Conflict." It seemed a stranger there, and begged to be carried away, and to be read. Inquiring of the household about it, none seemed to know to whom it belonged, or how it came into the home. I carried it away with me; I read it with great profit; I learned a lesson in its study—for a second reading was a real study—that has been worth much to me, in many ways. The mission of this paper is to give to other readers a hint of these things.

The first reading was with much impatience of the man. My pencil would almost drive through the margin of each leaf with indignant answers and fiery protests. When, in an open and frank way, he tells his readers, in the very opening, that he viewed religion from the standpoint of Roman Catholicism (and that, too, without saying it, in some of the most ignorant and darkest ages of that church), I wondered whether the man was a fool or a knave. I thought: "Can one who is honest be so unjust, so unfair to the truth, as to propose to show that religion was narrow, ignorant and bigoted in its 'conflict with science,' counting the superstitions of Romanism as the best expression of religion?" So he said, in substance, that, "judging from the antiquity and the following of this church, if there was anything in religion, it was found here; that this church held the best statement of it." I was tempted to throw the "red-bound," attractive book in the flames. Then later on, when he says, in a simple way, as if every ten-year-old school-boy knew it to be truth, that "the Jews learned all they know of the Mosaic economy from the Persians, during the Babylonian captivity," my impatience reached a climax. The thought came, and so it does now; "How can a capable, honest man say such things?" But I read on from first to last, and settled down on this conclusion: that the "Conflict" was one of the ablest, most subtle and most dangerous books ever issued from the home of agnosticism. The writer steals upon the reader with a gentle, velvety tread. He is so open, confiding, candid, that he has a firm grasp upon one's confidence as to the truth of his conclusions, making you forget his premises. He dwells for instances specially upon the early struggles of the science of astronomy, and makes a point against religion by detailed accounts of the fierce, cruel opposition, and even persecution, of Roman Catholicism, and calls that a "conflict of religion and science." You see the "conflict," you see the scientist, etc., and you forget—a young reader would—that the ignorance, superstition and bigotry of Romanism is as far removed, as it is possible to conceive, from the religion of Christianity. Science is a tangible something—that is, the demonstrations of true science. Religion is an intangible something. You can't see it, handle it, use it. Great learning, great intellectual powers are necessary to know and apply science. The most ignorant and stupid can be as religious as the learned. Religion (Romanism) is in open conflict with science; therefore, religion is a false thing, and science is a true thing. He does not say this; but it is the poison in the sting.

But to proceed. Duty called me to the little village again some months after. I found that the book belonged to a young physician of the place, who was evidently walking on unknown and dangerous shores. He expressed himself as glad that I had the book, and in a serious way asked me to tell him what I thought of it. I did not feel prepared to answer him. The spirit of caution came upon me. I was in a condition only to denounce it. But would that help the doctor? Was it right in itself? I was discontented with my own feelings toward the learned author. So, promising an answer by letter, when I mailed the book to him, on reaching home begun the book again. Reading it now, with a kindly human face looking into mine, pleading for help, I had somehow a different feeling toward the author. I had more patience and forbearance. This grew into the sympathy of a recognized brotherhood. The author was at one point, I was at the other point, and a human life, with all of human hopes and fears, and doubts and struggles, filling the space between. It was a study. I looked from the pen, tracing the lines, to the hand that held it; from the hand to the face, and from the face to the life. I looked for the motive inducing such a man—a man of such ability—to write such a book: a book designed to lessen the influence, if not to destroy the life, of God in the world, and thus rob the earth of its only light and only stay, even admitting that it is "a vain thing" to serve God and keep his commandments. I asked for the motive. The grace of patience and fairness came to my help. I thought of the possible conditions and surroundings in childhood or young manhood, bringing the germ that in maturer life developed a strong, honest skepticism. In my heart I accorded to him the same honesty and sincerity that I would have him accord to me. The spirit and tone of the man indicated integrity. He was not a conscious enemy of his kind, seeking to inflict an incurable hurt. His aim was not to rob the world of its only light. Granting him ability and integrity, what was the motive driving his pen to the production of such a book? Was it mere vanity, the lust of praise, the desire for gold, or empty, foolish ambition? Reading between the lines, looking back of the pen to the open-faced brother, I said, No. Under the same conditions I could have reached the same statement of things. The fallen nature, restless and dissatisfied, in him was in me. I loved the truth, and worshiped the God of truth and Jesus, his Son, and desired to lead all men to the same peace and rest. But it was not because I was better by nature than he. "Lord, is it I?" So asked they all. Even the one betraying him said the same thing. Under the blessed ministry of such a good angel I found an answer. Whether it will satisfy another, I know not. Whether it is a full statement or not, I hesitate to say. But in my answer I am persuaded that we have a solution to the problem of all honest, sincere, capable skeptics. It is this: He was trying to reverse an irreversable law of his life. The law of life is do, in order to know. He began as many are now beginning—by wanting to know in order to do. The farther one goes on this route, the farther he goes from God and truth and safety. Jesus said: "If any man will do—has the will to do—the will of God, he shall know." Dr. Draper and his company seek to set aside this law of being. They say, in effect, "Shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us." They want the sensible and the tangible—something they can see and touch and handle. This law holds good in all things, and not only in religion. The baby learns by doing. Men know things by doing things. The man proposing to give you the answer to a problem in mathematics without solving it—without doing it—offers an insult to your intelligence. In all things, and specially in religion, there is a place where reason ceases and faith begins. Men want to be good by being great. They want to know things in order to do things, forgetting that that man only saves or finds his life who loses it, and that the greatest in the kingdom is the man most like a little child, who knows nothing, but does all things commanded him.

Now, all this may sound weak and foolish, if not silly, to some; yet to me, as I have carried on to the end the thought here barely hinted at, it has been a great good. Remembering that the lesson applies only to capable, honest skeptics, and not to the dishonest and fools, the solution is a true one, and the end of controversy.

I trust others may be helped as my young physician friend was helped, and, I hope, saved.

LAKE CHARLES, La.

Nine Big Barges.

BY ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, D. D.

Nine big barges are moored alongside our Sheffield wharf. Our people have looked upon a stirring scene never witnessed in the South before. A week or two since a Pittsburg firm of iron men bought, in the open market in New York, 5,000 tons of Sheffield pig iron. Sheffield beat the field in prices and freights, and nine big barges from Pittsburg, Pa., are loading up. We are not "carrying coals to Newcastle," but we are sending Southern pig iron to Pittsburg. The great secular papers have given prominence to this new departure; Bradstreet and Dun have made comments significant and prophetic. It means revolution; it concerns the entire South; it is the peculiar fortune of Sheffield to have the Tennessee river below Muscle Shoals. In this one shipment there is a saving in freights of about $12,000. In 5,000 tons of pig iron there are more than 10,000,000 pounds, for a ton of pig iron is more than 2,000 pounds. It would take 250 cars, each carrying 40,000 pounds, to move what these nine plain, rough barges easily bear northward, with the compliments and best wishes of the New South. Some say, "There is no New South." There is hereabouts a somewhat that is new. In old times cotton, not iron, moved down this most beautiful of Southern rivers. It is bewildering to think of all that it portends.

There are in this young iron city (practically what has been done here is a matter of three years only; six years ago it was all cotton plantation and adjoining forests) five huge blast furnaces of the most approved sort, with stove works, machine shops, hat and shoe factories, flouring mills, furniture and saddle factories, mineral paint mills, electric lights, "and other things too numerous to mention." The furnaces are the "very latest and best," and most of this great plant is the product of Southern money. Three of the five are now pouring out pig iron at the rate of 450 tons a day. Close by is all they need: coking coal, the richest brown ores in this country, limestone, fire-brick clay, sand and water; also the best labor. Maj. Dowd, a Northern man and (I think, without knowing, for I never thought to ask) an ex-Union soldier, superintendent of the Ensley furnaces, said to me, "The best furnace man is the negro." They are pushing along arrangements to put the other two of the Cole trio in blast, and then we will have an output of 700 tons a day, requiring, if there were only one three railroads for handling it all, a heavily loaded train of thirty-five cars daily. They do not stop for Sunday (I am not now discussing the Sabbath question, but only ciphering a little concerning pig iron), and, if nothing happens, they can produce 700 tons every twenty-four hours for 365 days in the year. Suppose we allow—a large margin, too—sixty-five days lost to each furnace by accident, and we have 300 days and 700 tons daily, that is 210,000 tons a year. Moved at once by rail, it would require a train of 10,500 cars. These nine barges can move it in forty-two trips, and, as compared with railroad freights, at a saving of $504,000 on the output of each year—a big interest on more than $50,000,000 of money. No wonder these people made an ado over the coming of the Pittsburg barges, as they will upon the arrival of another fleet of barges the telegraph reports as on the way from St. Louis. No amount of misjudging—not bitterness of speech—no recklessness of misstatement, no partisaning in legislation can hinder the New South from coming into the kingdom God had prepared for it "from before the foundations of the world." The energy of this movement is typified to me by the Titanic forces that throb in these great furnaces. There is Southern money, brain and muscle in nearly all of it. What comes from England and the North is welcomed and assimilated. So are the people who come to work.

* * * * * *

Very great is the responsibility that rests upon the church now. If the church falls behind in breadth of view and energy of movement, in boldness of plans and liberality of investments for "the kingdom," twenty-five years of this amazing material progress will give us paganism; little, if any, the better for having its roots in the soil of Christian civilization.

Looking at these barges loaded with Southern iron for Pittsburg; looking forward just a few years in the revealing light of these tremendous expressions of business genius, courage, and pith; remembering that what is going on in Sheffield is but a small part of the revolution (there is no other word for the underlying fact), I then consider a great church, of 1,200,000 members, passing resolutions about the conversion of the heathen world, and seemingly content with plans inadequate forty years ago, sending, at long intervals, a lone man or woman across the seas to join battle with the hoary idolatries of great heathen nations, with our one secretary, as aforetime; while every other business, corporation, or association of men, for really doing something worth while, broadens its plans to meet growing demands, and we stick fast in the ruts of ancient days—when I see these things, my heart sinks.

It was the Master who said—not approving, but reproving—"The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light."

Will it be always so?

SHEFFIELD, Ala.

"The Location of Millsaps College."

BY "TAU."

The article of "Sigma," in a late number of the ADVOCATE, under the above caption, was thoughtful and timely. Sigma asks: "Where is Millsaps College to be located?" and then offers a few suggestions looking in a general way towards an answer. The question is one of great and vital interest to Mississippi Methodists just at this time. If the college is wisely and well located, it promises to command the patronage of two large Conferences, and to become an important source and center of Christian education for generations to come. Unwisely located, its patronage will be limited, its success only partial, and its life a continued struggle for existence. The Board of Trustees, who are also the committee to locate, have devolving upon them a delicate and grave responsibility. They will need to rise above all local preferences, to look over the whole field, and to avail themselves of all possible sources of information, not only as to eligibility of location, but also as to the sentiments of the people in different sections of the State, and then decide according to the lights before them.

From the fact that five or six members of the Board reside in the city of Jackson, it appears to be a foregone conclusion with many that Jackson is to be the place of location. Add another fact: that of the eight members of the Board from North Mississippi, seven are in the west and southwest parts of the Conference; only one, a layman, being resident east of the Illinois Central railroad. These facts may have contributed somewhat to a feeling of disappointment, if nothing more, which has cropped out here and there. The citizens of one town, who were much interested, and were proposing to offer a large bonus to secure the location, seemed at once to lose interest, and said they would do nothing. The people of another town, building handsomely, felt, as one of them expressed it, that they had been "snubbed."

Now, the expression of such a feeling and such foregone conclusion may do great injustice to the fair-mindedness and good judgment of the Board, who are all connectional men, good men, and true.

Having somewhat to say on the question of location, I would consider it only upon its general merits, and without regard to the mere incident of residence, or of local preference on the part of any member of the Board; for, influenced by proper motives (and who can question otherwise?), the entire Board might all be resident in one town, and yet locate the college in another. I would also lose sight of the fact that two Annual Conferences are interested, and consider Mississippi Methodism as a unit, proposing to establish and locate a college in such place as will ensure the largest degree of success. The question of location resolves itself into three subdivisions, having reference, respectively, to the southern, central, and northern portions of the State.

1. Should the college be located in the southern part of the State? In the communication of "Sigma," already alluded to, he says: "This college should not be located where it would divide the legitimate patronage of other connectional schools." Centenary College, at Jackson, La., is connectional, in that it is a denominational school, still claiming the patronage of the Mississippi Conference. To locate the contemplated college in South Mississippi would bring it too near to Centenary. Besides, as "Sigma" again says, "the tendency of our people is to send northward to school." Both these points are well taken, and suggest the wisdom of locating further north.

2. Should the college be located in the central part of the State? Under this head we may consider the propriety of locating at Jackson, although that city is considerably below the geographical center of the State. Because Jackson is the home of our honored Bishop Galloway, and of Major Millsaps, the munificent benefactor to our college enterprise, and because it is the capital of the State, it might be claimed that Jackson is the place for the location of our college. But the two points already mentioned, as counter-indicating a more southern location, are against its location at Jackson. It is sufficiently near to Centenary to bring it into competition with that denominational institution. And its latitude is too far South to harmonize with the preferences of our people generally for a higher or more northern location. The fact that Jackson is the capital of the State constitutes another objection to it as a place for the college. Many of our legislators and public men are not such models of character as we would like as exemplars for the youth of the country; and the moral and social environments of the State capital are, to a large extent, such as to exert a harmful influence upon our boys and young men coming from the more benign atmosphere of the Christian home. Many would dislike to send their sons to a college located in Jackson on this account alone—because it is the State capital.

3. Should the college be located in the northern part of the State? If the above suggestions are judicious, and the points well taken as to the southern and central portions of the State, then the trend of argument favors location somewhere in the northern third of the State. Added to the above, and strengthening the argument of the more northern location, we have the example of the founders of the State University. When locating this institution for the whole State of Mississippi, they passed by all southern points, including the city of Jackson, the State capital, and going more than a hundred miles further north, they selected the beautiful and healthy town of Oxford as a site for the State University.

This article is written in the spirit of kindness and candor, looking to the best interests of Millsaps College; and we hope it will be appreciated by all concerned in the spirit in which it is written.

Our Board of Trustees have vested in them a very delicate and weighty responsibility. May they have wisdom and grace and money to decide wisely, to build well, and to succeed grandly!

To the Members of the North Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: I presume that it is known to most, if not all, of you that some ten years ago there was organized among our members what is known as a "Ministers' Relief Association"—the object of which was the immediate relief of a member's family in case of his death. On the death of a member notice is given, and all surviving members are required to send five dollars to the secretary and treasurer within sixty days. Failure to do this works a forfeiture of membership. This membership may be renewed, however, at any time by paying the last mortuary fee that fell due. A member who has no family can name anyone as the beneficiary of this fund. A fee of twenty-five cents annually is also provided for, the object of which is to pay incidental expenses; but there has been no occasion for paying this for the past three years. Some brethren have desired a change in the provision requiring the mortuary fee to be paid within sixty days, preferring to have the time for payment extended to the time of the meeting of the Annual Conference, in the judgment of the majority this could defeat—in part, at least—the object of the association—that is, to furnish immediate relief to the family of the deceased. Some may find it difficult, maybe impossible, to raise that amount within that time, and thus run the risk from then until Conference of losing the benefit of the society. But is that reason for changing as great as the one for the present provision of the law—the immediate relief of the beneficiaries? We have been greatly favored the past three years, in that we have lost but one member by death. This is an average of only $1 66⅔ annually. But we know not what a year may bring forth. Some of us may fall this year. In that event it will be a source of great comfort in dying to know that so many loving hands and hearts will contribute to the immediate relief of our loved ones. I would rather my family would receive this amount from my brethren, whom I love as I do no others, than from any other source. We have now on our Conference roll 146 names. If all these were members of our association, and would pay promptly the mortuary fee, it would furnish an amount sufficient to buy a comfortable little home. What a relief to these generally homeless ones! And, brethren, could we afford relief to a worthier class than these who have sacrificed more for the cause of the Master than we have? Brother, are you a member of this association? If not, will you not send your name at once to our secretary and treasurer, Rev. T. J. Newell, Greenda, Miss., and be enrolled as a member, and hold yourself ready to relieve any family of any brother or brethren who may fall this year? This is all it will cost you to become a member. If any of our lay brethren wish to become members, they can send their names also. They are required to pay one dollar mortuary fee; but they can not become beneficiaries. I make this appeal by order of the association.

J. D. CAMERON, Pres't.

SALVATION.—Salvation—what music there is in that word; music that never tires, but is always new; that always rouses, yet always rests us. It holds in itself all that our hearts would say. It is sweet vigor to us in the morning, and in the evening it is contented peace. It is a song that is always singing itself deep down in the delighted soul. Angelic ears are ravished by it up in heaven; and our eternal Father himself listens to it with adorable complacency. It is sweet even to him out of whose mind is the music of a thousand worlds. To be saved! What is it to be saved in the fullest and utmost meaning? Who can tell? Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard. It is a rescue from such a shipwreck. It is a rest, and in such a home. It is to lie down forever in the bosom of God, in an endless rapture of insatiable contentment.—F. W. Faber.

THE LADDER ABOVE THE SEA.

BY REV. R. A. RAND.

The wide, wide sea in shadows rolled,
And sha lowed was the sky,
When, lo, upon the horizon's rim
A ladder reaching high

A ladder built of lines of mist,
And oh, so straight and tall!
Its foot was on the troubled waves;
Its top touched Heaven's wall.

For where that ladder pierced the clouds,
What radiance was its crown!
As if from Heaven's golden street
An angel let it down.

'Twas when I saw that vision fair,
There came a whispered call:
Though life be like a troubled sea,
Thou hast a ladder tall.

"'Tis prayer that rests upon the earth,
And starts with lowly round,
It reaches to the Gates of Pearl;
Its top with glory crowned.

"Then use thy ladder, downcast soul,
And upward mount and sing!
God's angels, ever on its rounds,
Will golden blessings bring."

WHY SHOULD THIS BE?

I can not but ask myself and my brothers and sisters throughout the church, "Why should this be?" when I receive letters like the following; for it pains me inexpressibly when they come from true, modest men and women driven by great need to let their wants be known. A brother who has endured much writes:

If there was a house here we could rent, this request would not be made. I am living over a store with no chance to study and but little room. I can not keep this room long; so, if the Board does not help me, I see no chance but for myself, wife and baby to live in a tent.

Again a sister writes:

We came here—I with a young babe, and in poor health. We found no house for the preacher, and not a house could we rent. One of our members kindly offered us a place in his house for a short time. And my husband set to work to secure the means with which to build a parsonage. But sufficient money could not be raised to build even a small house. At this juncture I thought of the parsonage society, and write to you, hoping to secure help.

Another in California, whose husband was sent to an important place, without a parsonage, and financially weak, writes:

Plenty of work for the Master; but our membership is small, and all poor, not one rich member. Usually we have found a few able to give. But when I tell you not one single dollar in money have we received, I tell you the truth. In all other things about fourteen dollars in three months and a half. Oh, that our Heavenly Father may keep us not only humble, but willing to do the work he has assigned us!

She is teaching three Chinamen, and hopes to "bring them to Jesus." We have promised her aid if we can secure the funds.

Another brother lived in a stable, until, receiving a portion of the appropriation made to him, he built a parsonage. He is now depending on us for the rest. Bishop Galloway wrote me the other day an urgent note to raise the money for this brother, if possible.

Dear sisters, you tender-hearted lovers of Jesus, to whom the trials of your own sex rarely appeal in vain—you, who can so well understand how a mother would feel compelled by duty to remain where she can not have the sweet comfort of gathering her children around her at home, but is forced to see them scattered, a burden upon the hospitality of others—why should you, when the facts are laid before you, delay to open your hearts to these who are sacrificing for Christ's sake all you hold most dear? A few have borne the burden of this work. Would that I could move the hearts of all to join us in our labor of love.

Dear brethren, you who know so well how this weight upon our itinerant preachers hinders the work of Christ, why should you delay or allow anything to prevent your coming forward at once and actively aiding this movement for their relief? Many of you have cheered us by word and deed, but what is it that hinders the great majority of you from helping, not financially, but with your influence. It can not be from a want of appreciation of the subject, for it comes home to you. But you must know your influence is peculiarly needed in this work, and that if you do not help, you hinder. Do not let any outside pressure keep you from doing your duty in this matter. Do not think me impatient. I am only eager for immediate help for the many pressing applications before us.

With the help of God, we have been able to relieve many of our suffering brethren, and we feel his blessing will rest upon us for it.

We know a movement with an object like ours can not be stopped. God will see to that. But we are restive under the fact that it moves more slowly than it should because of the inactivity of those who should most vigorously push it on. If it was a general principal at stake, one might bear this with more equanimity, feeling God will ultimately cause the right to prevail. But it is not that. It is little children suffering, weary mothers worn with toil and care, husbands and fathers going about doing good with heavy hearts, not for the privations they must bear, but because of the burden resting upon "wife"—a burden they are unable to remove because their time is given to God. I lose sight of general ideas. I can not calmly say: "All shall be well; we have done good works thus far, and bid fair to become a most useful society." I can not patiently wait for the future. I must relieve my poor, tired, heart-broken sister yonder before she goes down under the weight of daily care; I want to lift the burden off that godly man—that very one, now; not some future one I know not of—that he may do with a free heart and untrammeled mind the work of the Master. And faith tells me God, who has heard their prayers, is urging us on to be his means of answering the prayers of his faithful servants toiling bravely to extend his kingdom on earth. If there be any who can, I pray God to move their hearts as soon as they read this to give something to relieve these good people from the trying circumstances that surround them; to give largely if they can, for the need is great.

Those who wish to organize auxiliaries should write for papers to their Conference secretary for this department. If you do not know her address, write to me

Which Is Correct?

In the two expositions of the Sunday-school lesson for February 16, that given in our Sunday-School Magazine, and that published in the ADVOCATE, there seems to be different interpretations of the same text or passage. In answer to the inquiry of the Jews, John says: "I indeed baptize with water," but "he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost," etc. Now, the Magazine interprets John's baptism to be "symbolic" "preluding that of the Messiah;" but that in the ADVOCATE, in speaking of the baptism which should follow John's, "that of the Messiah," says: "As heard and understood at the time, the baptism with the Holy Ghost would imply that the souls, thus baptized, would be plunged, as it were, in that creative and informing spirit, which was the source of life and holiness and wisdom." "Plunged"—now that is the difficulty. Now, I would like to know which of these we are to accept and teach our children? If we preach from the pulpit, and thus seek to inculcate the doctrine of baptism by affusion, as our conception of the mode, as typical of the descent or outpouring of the Holy Ghost, and yet teach in the Sabbath-school according to Huribut and Simpson, and thus impress upon the minds of the children that the Holy Ghost is an invisible, inconceivable substance, or something, into which all souls, in order to regeneration, must be "plunged;" and again, preach from Sabbath to Sabbath, quoting from the Word of God, that all who look for the baptism of the Spirit must expect him from above, poured out upon and into the hearts of those who receive him—what conclusions are they to arrive at? What are they to understand by all this? Certainly, either that we do not believe what we preach, or, believing, do not properly comprehend the signification of water baptism, or the nature and character of the work of the Spirit.

Of course, we can not accept any such theory, or teach any such doctrine, for, being spiritually dead, if we are to have life in us at all, it must come from a source independent of ourselves, and external to ourselves; not by being "plunged" into it, and absorbing, as it were, through the pores of the skin, the life-giving essence or power; but by the life entering into, and touching the center of life in us, that the tendrils of our being may grasp life from the source of all life. As the small, almost invisible rootlets of the plant, piercing down deep into the earth, touches the inorganic mineral substance therein contained, breathes into it, as it were, the breath of life, and that which was dead, inorganic, inactive, becomes active, organic and living; so also must the Holy Spirit breathe into us, not by our "plunging" into him, but by his entrance into us, and touching with his own life-giving energy our dead, inactive, spiritual natures.

If we believe in baptism by affusion, in the descent and outpouring of the Holy Ghost, let us preach and teach it as clearly as possible, ever avoiding any and everything that smacks of "plunging," "dipping," or other mode of baptism, whether by water or the Holy Ghost. W. F. HENDERSON.

Too Large.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The General Conference is too large. The time was when it was, doubtless, necessary to have one for every thirty-six members of all the Annual Conferences; but that time has passed. The law ought to have been changed before now. And why it has not been, I do not know. It is hard now to find a Southern city that is able or willing to try to entertain it—that is, the Methodist. In order to entertain the Conference, the pastors have to call on the brethren of other churches; and also, outside of taking all they can entertain at their homes, they have to make arrangements with and pay large hotel bills for about one month; and now are talking of having an extra collection put on the people for the purpose of getting out of the difficulty.

Well, do you ask me to give you a remedy? If so, I would have the General Conference to change the Discipline on page 34, ¶ 33, Ans. 1, and have it read one for every seventy-two, in place of one for every thirty-six; and I think you will see that that will effectually remove the difficulty; and there would be a dozen Southern cities calling for it. And then, in the place of having to go contrary to the book of discipline in appointing a committee to secure a place, the Conference could select without any trouble, and there would be really a contest to see who should have it.

But you say, "It has not gone a-begging yet." Why not? Why was it that the last General Conference, in place of fixing the place to meet again, as the Discipline directs, only appointed a committee to locate the place?—and why was the question agitated with regard to taking a collection to pay the hotel expenses of the Conference? Why all this if there are plenty of places that want it? No doubt there are plenty of places would like to have it if the expenses could be paid by the church at large; but there are only a few places that would be willing to try it all alone, and especially without the help of other denominations, and those that are not members of any church at all.

Our Conference ought not to be embarrassed that way; nor we ought not to have to ask other denominations to help us. If they ask for delegates, all right—divide with them; but if they do not, oh, my, shall we have to beg our way, or be intruders? Never, never! Cut down the delegation; make it small enough so that almost any of our Southern towns can entertain it. We have, I suppose, now about three hundred delegates, more or less, besides our chief pastors and connectional officers, that will attend, making a body of, it may be, something over three hundred (I do not know exactly), and that body to remain for nearly a month.

Now, I ask, why all this? Is our little bark in such bad condition as all that, that it requires three hundred of our best men, about a month every four years, to repair it? Why, I have thought all the time that our book of discipline was about as near perfection as we can get it; and I do not know but we would get along much better without many changes—only a few. Of course, I think it necessary to make some changes; but does it require so many as that to make the necessary changes? Is it not an unnecessary expenditure of men and means? If half could do the work as well (and I think better), would it not be better to leave the other half at home? Is it a small matter to leave seventy-five vacant pulpits for a month, and also seventy-five vacant pews? Could they not do more good preaching and teaching than trying to make laws where our laws are already almost perfect? It would not only save about 150 men to remain and work for the month of May, but would save hundreds of dollars—railroad, hotel, and general expenses—that might be spent otherwise. And does not the Lord hold us accountable for the wise expenditure of our men and money? I think he does. If so, we ought to be very careful.

But, in the last place, the body is too large to work intelligently under one chairman. One hundred and fifty men can do better work, and more of it, than three hundred; and then it would not be necessary to remain in session more than two weeks; but if it required a month, all right; let them give full time. "They That Preach the Gospel Should Live of the Gospel."

The name of a preacher, whose initials are J. O. T. H., will be found in the Minutes of the Conference of the Methodist Church in Mississippi more than fifty years ago. He was well known in those days because he was a man to attract attention; and when seen to be admired, and when known to be esteemed; of finest person, genial in manners, and effective oratory. He was appointed to the most important stations—Vicksburg among them—where the writer lived, who knew him well, and valued his friendship. His success in the pulpit at an early age seemed to promise eminence in the future—to be the equal of those who have become great in the church, and are remembered by the world. Unfortunately, however, for him and the church, he attempted to better his condition by pursuits out of the ministry. He tried farming in a small way; then selling medicine, drugs, and books, without success. After studying medicine he attended a medical school in another State. Before the close of the session he permitted an appointment to be made, that a medical student could preach in the Methodist Episcopal Church of the town. His fellow-students, as a compliment to him, attended in great numbers, whilst the citizens made up a large congregation. His sermon excelled every expectation, and he was a great man at once, as reported by the newspapers. The citizens of the town prevailed upon him to remain among them, practice medicine, and be their preacher. His popularity brought success in his practice and position, but an unfortunate end at last.

A political party sought his eloquence and influence as a means to their success, and he was a candidate or popular suffrage. To treat and drink is incidental to every canvass preceding an election. He was not equal to the trial; prostration, by traveling and speaking, must be counteracted by a stimulant. Drinking to excess came to pass, with other effects equally inevitable—neglect of business, loss of confidence, practice, and property.

Strange to relate, he came to himself, returned to Mississippi, and attended Conference, held in Vicksburg. He was greeted kindly by his old friends and brethren, though greatly changed, as may be supposed. He had an interview with the presiding elders, to whom he admitted all his backslidings; but declared his purpose, God helping, to do the first work and regain his position in the ministry. Tears were shed, and a helping hand promised to the returning prodigal; but prudence directed delay in his being received into full connection with the Conference. Some place would be left to be supplied, and he would be appointed to that work.

He returned to his home to prepare for his new life in the ministry, and to change his residence. At his home, being afflicted in body and mind, drink was prescribed as a supposed necessity. Thus he who could have been a great man was the reverse—a maniac. A blow was given to prevent injury, by him, which caused his death.

Moral: Preachers who take, as a tonic, stimulants, or as a narcotic, morphine, should do so with fear and trembling.

Preachers rarely succeed as other men in profession, trade, or any pursuit, though of equal ability with those who prosper. Denial to the former is not because the professed employment is wrong, but the refusal to go as God indicates his will to be for them to walk. E. G. COOK.

The Lottery.

The Press and the Lottery.

The Telegraph-Bulletin, of Monroe, La., says:

The Lottery is the most obnoxious, corrupt and corrupting monopoly in existence.

You are right there, Charley. And we believe the people of this State are going to sweep it out of existence!

The Louisiana Journal, of Homer, La., says:

Louisiana in our opinion has had the Lottery too long already, and can afford to dispense with it in the future, and from every consideration of honesty and common decency should do so.

The Lake Charles Echo, Lake Charles, La., speaking of the removal of the Lottery from Louisiana, asks this pertinent question:

Is not this a move to draw forth the sentiment of Louisiana legislators upon the advisability of passing an amendment to our Constitution to be submitted to the people, extending the charter?

The Christian Observer, Louisville, Ky., says:

The wrongfulness of dealing in lotteries is, perhaps, not so obvious as of some other sins. Yet it is no less real. The whole scheme is based on an effort to get a neighbor's property away from him without giving him an equivalent. And this is a violation of the eighth commandment.

In most forms of sin only one party is the transgressor; the other is an innocent sufferer. But in this sin both the winner and the loser and the operator of the lottery, are alike guilty of the eighth commandment. The winner is self-convicted of taking another's property without any effort to render an equivalent. The loser has transgressed God's requirement that we shall use the property that he puts into our hands in such a way as to promote his glory and the comfort of those who are dependent on us.

And the managers of the lottery are the spiders who ensnare these victims. Their aim is to get all the money they can, and distribute as little as possible. By indiscriminate lying, this is possible. So far as our observation goes, the managers of such concerns do not make any attempt at fair dealings.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate, Chicago, says:

A lottery is robbery. Who supposes that the design of such institutions is less than that? Now and then some silly or prominent person is allowed to win a sum of money, but such exceptions are planned only to bait and deceive others into taking risks. The robbers pretend that the large sums gathered by them are to remain in the State and thus increase the total of capital for general business uses.

All states in the Union outlaw lotteries except Louisiana, and that State will withdraw its permission in five years. It is a reproach and insult to North Dakota that it has been selected to be the only State in which such gambling is to be lawful. The proposition should be flung back into the teeth of the gamblers who insult Dakota by such temptations to legalize the robbery of silly and weak people. In five years that Dakota will be famous for its stealings and defalcations. The very servant girls will learn to steal, and boys will be instinctive thieves.

Our Brother in Red, Muskogee, Indian Territory, says:

The moral sentiment in Louisiana against the great Louisiana Lottery has increased until now it is considered a certainty that the charter when out will not be renewed by the Legislature of that State.

An attempt was made last week to pass a bill in the North Dakota Legislature granting privileges in that State to lottery companies. The bill passed one house and was in a fair way to pass the other when some secret influence turned the tide and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

The only hope now for this gigantic evil is to get a foothold in the Choctaw Nation. It is to be hoped that our Choctaw friends will not so disgrace themselves and their race and harm the cause of morality as to grant it.

The Standard (Baptist), of Chicago, says:

It will be a thing most astonishing if the unanimous protest, in all directions, and in quarters the most influential, against the passage of the Lottery bill by the Legislature of North Dakota shall prove to be without avail. The members of that body may not have been aware of the light in which this relic of an iniquitous past is held by people of intelligence and a clear sense of right; perhaps many of them have never given the subject much reflection. Any such plea must be impossible for them now, and their action, if they make this bill a law, will be, in a sense which they will find it hard to answer in time to come, "without excuse."

The Ruston Caligraph, Ruston, La., says:

Some people may be deluded into the belief that the Lottery's cash is being spread broadcast over the State for the purpose of relieving the high pressure in the money market, or that its liberal circulation has been productive of that result; but to the man of average intelligence the argument will fall flat on account of its extreme gaudiness. The Lottery spreads its money about election times and during the sessions of the Legislature, but it does not enable the money borrower to get money any cheaper.

From the Work.

COVINGTON, LA.

The first Quarterly Conference of the Covington circuit, Seashore district, was held at Covington, Saturday and Sunday, February 15 and 16. We prepared ourselves for a season of refreshing by observing Friday as a day of fasting and prayer, and holding a prayer and praise service Friday night. Saturday evening Bro. G. D. Anders arrived and stated that, owing to illness, our presiding elder, Bro. Cooper, was unable to be present, and had sent him in his stead, to assist me in my Quarterly Conference. I was, indeed, glad to welcome this earnest, consecrated man of God. Our Conference was called to meet at 8 P. M. After an earnest sermon by Bro. Anders, I, for the first time, took the chair as presiding officer of the Quarterly Conference. Among other business was that of increasing the assessment of preacher in charge and presiding elder from $350 to $400. Bros. J. E. Smith and J. Monroe Simmons were elected delegates to the District Conference. Bro. Anders preached Sunday morning and night, and at the morning service collected nearly half of the amount assessed for general collections. I believe by the first of April all collections will be up in full.

This Conference will be long remembered, as it is unparalleled in the history of the Covington circuit, and Bro. Anders endeared himself to all our people.

I entered upon my second year as pastor of this circuit on the fifth Sunday in December, and since then have preached 28 times, held 8 Church Conferences, and made 96 pastoral visits, besides reading the greater part of my Conference course. Pray for us.

L. WALLACE WOOD, P. C.

TALISHEEK CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I am now entering upon my fourth year of ministerial labors among these good people with flattering prospects. Glad to say that they have received me as cordially and affectionately this, as they did the first year I came on the work. Our first Quarterly Conference was held on the fifteenth instant. Bro. Cooper, the presiding elder, failed to reach us on account of sickness; but sent us Bro. George D. Anders, who filled the chair and the pulpit much to the delight of all present, preaching us two real, practical gospel sermons. Better attendance of official members than at any other first Quarterly Conference since I came on the work. Assessment for the preacher in charge raised seventy dollars in excess of last year, a respectable amount of which has been paid in cash and subscription. The people seem to be more willing to contribute to the different claims of the church than ever before. Since Annual Conference we have purchased and paid for the lumber, and I have added to the parsonage a neat, comfortable kitchen and dining room. I say "I," because I did the work. So, Doctor, if you will rusticate for a while this summer at St. Tammany Camp Ground, you will see that preachers can do something else besides eating up all the chickens in the country. I have good congregations at nearly all my appointments, and very attentive to the preaching of the Word. Have organized two prayer meetings since Conference—one a weekly, and the other a semi-monthly, which I believe will be a power for good. A number of our young members, both male and female, are praying in public, and telling of Jesus' wondrous love in the experience meetings. In conclusion, let me say that I am praying and trusting for a grand, glorious revival on the Talisheek circuit this year. Pray for us!

THE BIBLE IN THE SCHOOLS.—In emphasizing the importance of the Bible for the sake of character building, we are in danger of overlooking the incidental advantages of its study, which bring to the common people their choicest pleasures of literature, and their highest motives to patriotism. Says St. Hilaire, a French writer: "Wherever the Bible is not made the foundation-stone of education, of society, and of every form of life, there is no literature for children or for the people. Look at Spain, Italy, and even France—in a word, at every country in which the Bible is not read: nowhere is there any reading for the child or the laborer. In Germany and England, on the contrary, there exists a Christian children's and popular literature, in which, as in a mirror, the national spirit is clearly reflected."—Congregationalist.

THEY WAIT NOT.

BY REV. C. H. D. FISHER.

As in a heathen land we labor,
The precious truth of Christ to preach,
It is a joy no words can measure,
To see some souls salvation reach.

'Tis joy to show to sinful, lost ones
The Christ they need, but know not of,
To see their heart-gloom change to gladness,
Their fear to hope, their hate to love.

But with our joy comes, too, a sorrow,
Whose greatness words all fail to speak,
Of thousands, needy thousands, 'round us,
That we can teach but part who seek.

The sin-cursed lives of all entreat us,
And more, there come from far and near
The earnest voices of some sin-weary,
"The things you teach we want to hear."

Our hearts say, "Go," but go we can not,
Yet longer wait, compelled we say,
If seeking wait, are others guilty?
That help may come we daily pray.

In our blest land are preachers many;
And men ten-thousand times have heard
The gospel God has given to save them,
The strong entreaties of his word.

But you must wait; wait though you perish,
The church scarce hears its Lord's command:
"Go preach my word to those sin-burdened,
The good news tell in every land."

Oh, Christians, whom the Lord has purchased,
Whose souls has saved when they were lost,
Must we "yet longer wait?" give answer,
And you have ease at such a cost?

Nay, God forbid it, for the rather,
Leave friends, leave church, prized joys discard,
And find in work that God here gives you,
A joy that's hundred-fold reward.

Oh, are not some already starting
Who in these fields will give us aid?
Then haste them on, on all his children
Has God the task of helping laid.

Beloved of Christ, to you God speaketh:
"Go forth if can, help send beside.
Yourselves are mine, and mine your treasures;
Save now the lost for whom Christ died."

Oh, friends, if God's, to-day he calls you,
Hear, too, we pray, our earnest cry:
The heathen can not wait; they wait not,
While you still waiting are they die.

Tokio, Japan.

Letter from Mexico.

We have missed the usual visit of the dear old ADVOCATE this week. It may come later, for our mails are very irregular. The lenten season has begun; bells are ringing, and the disfigured faces of women and children meet you at every turn. The great ugly black cross of ashes on the forehead, made from ashes of old images, they burn and use, they call holy ashes.

I was in the cathedral yesterday with some Tennessee ladies who are visiting here. The sad-faced women so devoutly kissing the soiled floor, and looking so longingly to the images in front of them for some ray of comfort in their sunless lives, is ever painful to me. I long to kneel beside them and whisper in their ears of the sympathizing Savior. Alas! how helpless I am, while my heart is burdened with the suffering souls around me. This morning, as I went to school, I met two street-car hearses and a number of collins carried on men's heads. When I see daily the list of those dying in the Romish faith, I feel like crying aloud.

Oh! Christian friends, can you not realize that these people are dying in heathen ignorance at your very doors? I am willing to give my all to help bring these people to a knowledge of the truth. I notice in all their churches very few men. Comparatively, they are becoming hardened infidels. This makes me tremble, lest our opportunity will pass unimproved. Now, it seems to me, is the favored time to work. Who will help us? While I would not have one Christian feel less interested in China, Japan and Brazil, I would have you more alive to the fact that the suffering here is just as great, and the souls daily going down to the grave, with nothing better than holy oil to insure an entrance into the home of the blest, are just as precious.

Bishop Mullaney delivered an address at Association Hall, on "The Saxon Race." It was, indeed, splendid; and when he spoke of the pain it caused him to know any American in the colony here would act in an unchristian manner in this land of shadows, instead of being an example for good to the heathen, I felt like saying, Amen! Ah! men may preach, and the world will listen; but profit comes by example.

I realize the great responsibility resting upon us, and it weighs heavily upon my heart; but we are trying to work the best we can, and trust God to help us to act in such a manner as not to damage his cause. Indeed, the troubles we must meet here in the course of the year, if we had to meet at once, we could not bear. But, as John Newton says, there are "a great bundle of faggots, far too large for us to lift. But God does not require us to lift it all at once. He mercifully unties the bundle, and gives us first one stick which we are to carry to-day, another to-morrow, and so on. This we might easily manage if we would only take the burden appointed us each day, and not add to-morrow's burden before we are required to carry it." We try to practice this lesson; but we need your prayers and your sympathy, and we need more workers, more money, and we need our women to help us. Oh, what a field for them!

Last Sunday Bro. Watkins was questioning the little children of the Sunday-school. I wish you could have heard them talk. One little fellow said the priest sprinkled holy water on the children to take their sins away. When Bro. W. asked how a little water on the forehead could take away sin, the boy said it sucked it out. Another said: "No such thing; the water itself is dirty, and it has no power." If we had consecrated women here to teach the children, my hopes would brighten considerably. Oh, let our church papers plead for us!

I hope the readers of the ADVOCATE will pray and work for Mexico. I will not say more now.

Avenida Baldcras No. 11,
CITY OF MEXICO.

An English Wesleyan missionary in China gives an account of a recent service at which he was talking to the people who crowded into his chapel, of Christ as the Savior from sin, when an old man stood up and stretched forth his hand, saying, "You tell us of all sorts of good deeds, and exhort us to follow them; but why did you bring this opium? It has me in its grip, and it's killing me." A glance at the old man showed that he was an opium-smoker, very far gone. The people around him told him to be quiet, and tried to make him sit down, and at the same time the missionary, though an Englishman, disclaimed all responsibility from the bringing of opium into China. But the man broke out again: "Ah! it's killing me, and yet I can't give it up." "Better die than ruin your soul by smoking it," was the missionary's answer. But he adds: "Seldom has it fallen to our lot to see anything more thrilling in the daily preaching than when the old man reached forth his hands, exclaiming, 'Better die! But I am afraid to die!'"—Missionary Herald.

Rev. Mr. Webb-Peploe, in an anniversary sermon before the English Church Missionary Society, asserts that the annual income of Englishmen amounts to $6,275,000,000. Were a tenth of this sum consecrated to God's service, it would be $627,000,000, which is said to be the exact amount of Great Britain's drink bill. The preacher estimated that a tithe of the drink bill, or a hundredth part of the total annual income, was actually given to religious objects, and that, perhaps, a tenth of this, or a thousandth part of the income, was given to work outside of Great Britain, for the evangelization of the world.—Christian Weekly.

Lotteries and Gambling.

EMPLOYERS MUST PROTECT THEMSELVES—LEGALIZING GAMBLING DEVICES.

BY ANTHONY COMSTOCK.

Unless the laws against these evils are more rigidly enforced, the time is not far distant when employers will have to organize a vigilance committee to prevent the pilferings of their employes. Merchants complain of gambling houses in close proximity to their places of business, and demand that they be closed to remove temptations to dishonesty from their employes. A Broadway business man recently said to me, "Merchants should combine to sustain your society for their own protection."

We are glad to note that the President of the United States, in his message to Congress, has indorsed the Postmaster General's recommendation of further legislation against the use of the mails by lottery companies. The Louisiana Lottery, a national scourge, in its heartless greed, has recently increased the price of tickets, so that if all are sold each month the annual income is increased from $1,000,000 to $28,000,000. The Society for the Suppression of Vice closed their New York office in 1879, and notwithstanding an offer of $25,000 annual contribution to our work if we would not interfere again with their doing business openly in this city, they have never dared to either open an office, nor can they advertise as they formerly did in this State. It has been publicly stated that this monster public plunderer, in order to secure a renewal of its charter, which expires in 1893, for fifty years more, has offered to bribe the whole State of Louisiana by paying the State debt of over $12,000,000, and erecting a public library for the city of New Orleans to cost $100,000. During the past year no less than four so-called Little Louisiana Lotteries have sprung into existence. We arrested one Olin D. Gray, a lithographer and printer in this city, for printing tickets for these snide affairs, seizing in his possession over 1,500,000 tickets at one time, besides fifteen lithographic stones.

The ravages of pool, gambling and book-making in the past year have been fearful to contemplate. From all sides come accounts of dishonesty, embezzlements, defalcations, breaches of trust, robbery, suicide and murder. The warning prophecy of our secretary before the legislative committee and the governor of this State, made prior to the passage of the infamous lives' pool bill (allowing gambling during a part of the year on race tracks), are fully realized. The large space given to these crime breeders, under the heading of "Sporting News," in some daily papers is fostering crime and promoting dishonesty. This sort of high-handed robbery, when boss gamblers and their touters invade not only every race course, but maintain open pool rooms in the midst of the marts of trade, is a constant menace to industrious habits. To spread glittering inducements of gain before the hard-working and ignorant classes, to take the poor man's dollar that should go to buy bread for his family, is the quintessence of cruelty, but to legalize a scheme that induces and entices men and women of all classes in society to become gamblers is to outrage the fundamental principles of good government.

First Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON XI.—March 16.

THE DRAUGHT OF FISHES

Luke v, 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men.—Luke v, 10.

TIME.—A. D. 27.

PLACE.—The Lake of Gennesaret.

2. Ships—Boats. The narrative implies that they were the boats respectively of Jonas, the father of Peter and Andrew, and of Zebedee. Standing—Lying at anchor. Washing their nets—Cleaning their nets from weeds before laying them up.

4. Launch out is, in the original, singular, addressed to Peter alone, as steersman of his own ship; let down is plural, addressed to the fishermen collectively. So below also, I will let down, of the director, when they had this done, of the doers, of the act.

5. Master—Not Rabbi; rather a term of general respect, such as workmen might use of their master. All the night—The ordinary time of fishing.

6. A great multitude—Of this, as of all miracles, we may say with St. Gregory that it was an acted parable, of which the significance is explained in Matt. xiii, 47. Their net brake—Rather, their nets were breaking.

7. They beckoned—It is one of the inimitable touches of truthfulness in the narrative that the instinct of work prevails at first over the sense that a miraculous power has been exerted.

8. When Simon Peter saw it—Apparently it was only when he saw the boats sinking to the gunwale with their load of fish that the tenderness and majesty of the miracle flashed upon his mind. Depart from me—The speech is in exact keeping with the quick discernment and expression of feeling of Peter's character. This sense of unworthiness and self-loathing is ever the effect, in the depths of a heart not utterly hardened, of the divine power and presence. Below this is the utterly profane state, in which there is no contrast, no contradiction felt, between the holy and the unholy, between God and man. Above it is the state of grace, in which the contradiction is felt, the deep gulf perceived which divides sinful man and a holy God; yet it is felt that this gulf is bridged over, that it is possible for the two to meet: that in One who is sharer with both they have already been brought together. We must remember that both before and on that very day Peter had listened to our Lord's teaching in all its deep and piercing power, and that thus what we have learned to call "conviction of sin" may well have been begun in him. Then came the miracle, with the proof it gave of superhuman power and knowledge, and with that the consciousness, such as ever accompanies man's recognition of contact with the divine, of his own exceeding sinfulness. So Isaiah cried, "Woe is me, for I am a man of unclean lips." So Job cried, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee; wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes."

10. Thou shalt catch—Literally, thou shalt be catching alive. Jer. xvi, 16, the fishers draw out men to death, and in Amos iv. 2; Hab. i. 14, men are "made as the fishes of the sea" by way of punishment. Here the word seems to imply the contrast between the fish that lay glittering there in dead heaps, and men who should be captured not for death (Jas. i, 14), but for life. But Satan, too, captures men alive (II. Tim. ii, 26, the only other passage where the verb occurs). From this and the parable of the seine or hauling-net (Matt. xiii, 47) came the favorite early Christian symbol of the "Fish." The prophecy was first fulfilled to Peter, when three thousand were converted by his words at the first Pentecost.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Read This!

The editor is desirous of sending out through the State of Louisiana five hundred extra copies of the ADVOCATE every week, from this time until the first of July. The publisher promises that he will furnish them at the lowest cost price. One brother has offered a generous contribution in aid of our design. Will some others help us? We want to reach all the people we can, in order to inform them and stir them up in opposition to the Lottery. If we were able to do this of ourselves, we would not ask for this help; but something must be done, and we believe much will be accomplished by this plan. Will you help us? If so, send on your contribution.

If we get more than enough for five hundred copies weekly, we will use the surplus in publishing tracts.

Organize for Work.

The value of organization, when work is to be done by many persons, can not be overestimated. Where the work is to be done by one individual, there can be no regular organization, and yet if the worker himself were analyzed, we suspect that he would be found thoroughly organized. But where the work to be done is committed to many persons nothing will be accomplished if each one works according to his own ideas. A strong army is a well-organized one. A strong government is a well-organized one. The same is true of churches. The purpose of the movement must find its strongest expression in the details of the organization. A church will be strongest on that line of work in which it has the best organization. If it is well organized on the line of missionary operations, it will be a missionary church. And so of other lines of work. The best work always results from the best organization.

There is no doubt but the better people of Louisiana are tired of the Lottery and desire to get rid of it. It is the common opinion that the Lottery Company will come before the next Legislature with a request in some shape—that its charter be renewed. It is not yet very clear what will be the manner or form of the request. It is clear, however, that the people should be ready to give that request a deadly blow as soon as it is presented. But if we are not ready, the infamous abomination may be thrust on us again for years to come. One speaker here, and another yonder, orating against it will not have the desired effect. One newspaper in this parish, and another in that parish, won't accomplish much. One pulpit thundering in this station, and another on that circuit, won't drive the hydra off Louisiana soil. All who are opposed to this iniquity must come together and organize themselves into anti-lottery clubs or societies, and contribute of their brains and money for the enlightenment and arousement of the whole people. No sort of wickedness can stand exposure. Let it be the object of these clubs or societies to expose—to drag into the light—the unspeakable infamy of this great gambling concern. It was the fear of exposure that caused the utter collapse of the gambler's scheme before the North Dakota Legislature. Let the opposers of this wickedness organize themselves, and, by their means and minds, arouse the public conscience of our people as it ought to be aroused and can be aroused, and there is not a Legislature on earth that would dare to foist the Lottery upon us again. Not only that, but before that aroused public conscience the Legislature would be compelled to institute an investigation into the affairs of that concern, which would show that it has persistently refused to comply with the conditions upon which its existence was predicated. That one fact shown—and it has been proved by the records—and that same public conscience would tear the whole thing to pieces and grind it to powder before the ides of July!

Then let our people everywhere organize and go to work. There is still left us the inalienable right of freemen—the right of petition. And we must use it to its utmost extent. The Legislature can not, and will not, ignore the prayer of thousands of the best citizens in the land. Let petitions be gotten up everywhere and signed by the people, of all classes and colors, praying our law makers to spare our fair State the shame and humiliation and reproach of another regime of lottery, by turning a deaf ear to any and every request of this public robber and plunderer.

What Can Science Do?

Suppose that science, in the end, should compel us to give up a certain portion of our Bible—she has not done it yet; she never will do it; but for the sake of the argument, let us suppose it possible. Well, then, we may begin with Genesis and tear out every book of the Old Testament until we come to the Psalms. We may tear out all the history and the prophecy that remains. Beginning with the New Testament, we may tear out all there is in the Gospels, except the Sermon on the Mount and Christ's words on Calvary. Then we may tear out everything else except the Pauline Epistles—and we still have the grandest body of natural and revealed truth that the world ever knew. We would have all the essential parts of our body still. For, if we have the Sermon on the Mount, we must have Christ. No mere man could have ever spoken those words. If we have the Pauline Epistles, we have the heart and core of our theology, and if we have the Psalms, we have all the poetry and the spiritual uplift which the soul of man requires. Science can never touch the essential truth and spirit of the Bible. Thus we see how large reserve we have in the Bible as against the destructive critic at his worst.—Zion's Herald.

We have seen the above "going the rounds of the papers" with apparent approval. We quote it to say that we don't believe in any such rhetorical bombast. We believe such utterances as the above are made without thinking. Just look for one moment. Destroy all the Old Testament, except the Psalms; then destroy all the New Testament, except the Sermon on the Mount, Christ's words on Calvary and the Pauline Epistles. Now Zion's Herald says: "We still have the grandest body of natural and revealed truth that the world ever knew." We would, indeed, have a body of truth, but who could understand and explain it? With all the Old Testament destroyed, except the Psalms, who could explain the Sermon on the Mount? Would it not be converted into the most mysterious puzzle the world ever tried to solve? The Epistle to the Hebrews is considered by a great many scholars as one of Paul's Epistles; but if we had no history of the Levitical economy, what could be made out of that Epistle? Destroy the writings of Moses, and who can understand Christ? Blot out the history of the Levitical economy, and you have reduced the priesthood of the Son of God to a mere myth! Erase the history of the theocracy God established over Israel, and the kingdom of heaven becomes a dream, and its King a phantom. Yes, destroy Moses and the Prophets and the Gospels, and keep the Psalms, and the Sermon on the Mount and Christ's words on the cross and the Pauline Epistles, and you have left a body of truth, it is true, but a body like the Pyramids—a massive, towering perplexity, whose very stability adds to the mystery of its origin; and the purpose of its existence will be the puzzling problem of the future. And, then, you have given the case into the hands of the enemy, for you can not reasonably expect any man to accept a system which you can not explain. Give up the Scriptures named by the Herald, and you throw away the key that unlocks the treasures of redemption. No, we don't intend to do it, not even "for the sake of the argument." To do so, and then talk about "how large a reserve we have in the Bible as against the destructive critic at his worst," is to us simple foolishness. Give up the Scriptures named by the Herald, and science will show you very quickly what it can do!

Church Union.

It is hardly supposable that the different denominations will ever come to a union on doctrinal statements or church polity. Indeed, such a union, it seems to us, is not desirable. But it does seem desirable and practicable that every branch of the church should join hands with every other in the war against evil of every kind. Why should the churches be hurling thunderbolts at each other and seemingly give little attention to evils that are spreading disaster and ruin all around. According to the Savior's teaching, evil is the only thing to fight. If we use up our ammunition in blowing up one another, the enemy will get possession of the field without firing a gun. This fratricidal war ought to come to an end, because it is wicked, because it gives the enemy an advantage which nothing else gives, and because it leaves no time and energy to expend upon the real foe.

This is specially the case now in Louisiana. If there ever was, or ever can be, a platform upon which all the Christian people of our State can stand, it is the anti-lottery platform. The churches as churches, and the individuals composing the churches, should come together and pray and plan for the overthrow of this gigantic wickedness. Have the Christian people to be told of the havoc this great gambling company is making in the morals of our communities? Must we tell the Christian people of Louisiana that our children and servants, that our clerks and laboring poor, are being taught to steal? Must we tell the Christian people of this State that this company, with an independence and effrontery that surprises the devil himself, is seeking, by adroit but gradual approaches to gain a position from which by one spring it can fasten its fangs upon us again? A sugar refinery in St. Mary—another one in Rapides—twenty-five thousand dollars deposited in an important center—all for what? To bring influences to bear upon the approaching Legislature! These things are so. Then is there not incentive to arouse all the Christians in the State to cease their warfare upon one another and join in solid phalanx against the common foe? Now is the time for church union in Louisiana—union strong and solid against the Louisiana Lottery.

Studying the Problem.

Dr. Parkhurst, editor of Zion's Herald, gives, in a long letter to his paper, an account of his visit to New Orleans, where he came to "study the problem." It seems that he has finished his course of studies and, doubtless, is satisfied with his progress. The mystery to us is, how any man can master this manifold subject in a visit of three or four weeks, and those weeks consumed mostly by rapid travel over different parts of the country? The good Doctor learned something here also. He learned the emphatic lesson that his church, after twenty-five years of indefatigable labor and the expenditure of thousands of dollars, has made a most signal failure at a point most cherished in her purposes and plans. That we may not misrepresent the Doctor, we give a paragraph copied from his own paper, of February 19. He says:

At New Orleans we supplied in the morning St. Charles Avenue Church, formerly Ames Chapel. This is a fine church edifice and will seat a thousand people. It was built through the able administration of Dr. J. P. Newman, and he always drew a crowded house. Our audience numbered not quite fifty people, and that is larger than the average attendance. This is the church in which for years the effort to have the white and colored people worship together has been urgently pressed. The result is a lamentable failure, and the future of the church is an oppressive problem.

We can imagine somewhat of the feelings of the student of the problem as this "lamentable failure" dawned upon him. This effort to "have white and colored people worship together has been so urgently pressed" in this city as to break down this congregation, where Dr. Newman "always drew a crowded house." We were told, not long ago, by a preacher of theirs, that the number of colored people attending St. Charles Avenue Church was less than the number attending our Carondelet Street Church. So much for sticking to the pet policy of forcing church relations!

The Doctor seems to have come to a conclusion in regard to the whole matter, which he sums up as follows:

The negro has a future in this country in God's compensative purpose which neither Southern prejudice nor outrage can defeat.

We believe the Doctor is right in that sentence; but we are looking for that "compensative purpose" to manifest itself in a far different way than the Doctor expects. In church matters, we believe the indications are that God's purposes are working in the direction of the establishment of one Methodist organization for the colored people of the South, and if Dr. Parkhurst lives two decades, he will see it.

College Preachers' Meeting.

The preachers' meeting of Centenary College is held weekly, and embraces twenty preachers, eighteen of the students and two of the faculty. The cause of missions commands a large share of interest. Three of the young men have already declared their intention to devote their lives to missionary work in some foreign field, and others will, doubtless, find their hearts drawn in due time toward that inviting part of the Master's vineyard. I am now, for the first time in more than a quarter of a century, freed from a regular pastoral charge, and now I may give all my time to the college. I enjoy the preachers' meetings, and go to the country occasionally to preach on Sundays. The president of the University of Louisiana has accepted an invitation to address the young men of the two societies at their joint public debate in March.

North Mississippi Conference Items.

Bro. Dollar is sick. Bro. R. M. Evans has been very sick, but is now convalescing. Bros. Callaway, Fullilove and Brantley have had measles. Our beloved father in Israel, Rev. J. H. Brooks, is in a low state of health. Many prayers are ascending daily in his behalf that he may have divine comfort in his afflictions, and that his holy and benedictive life may be spared to us yet many years. These veterans of the cross are loved and revered for their work's sake.

The parsonage at Verona, with nearly all of its contents, was burned a few weeks ago. No insurance.

Bro. Sage was recently married to an estimable lady, Mrs. Cook, of Lowndes county.

Great preparations are being made for the Sam Jones' meeting at Aberdeen in April. Pastors and people of the several churches are combining their efforts and prayers for the occasion.

Bro. Bowen is doing effective work in that charge. He has such a tact of looking after delinquents and the irreligious, that there are almost weekly accessions to the church by letter and on profession of faith.

Rev. Joe Jones has held successful meetings at Shell Mound, Minter City and Charleston. He will begin soon at Corinth.

The church-house in Grenada is undergoing repairs, and Bro. Thomas is in agony for a revival, a special meeting for which will begin soon.

The colporteur and Sunday-school agent has been endeavoring to magnify his office—not himself. He has not "been idle or unemployed," "neither has he spent more time in any one place than was necessary." During the past two months he has visited fifteen churches and places, preached eighteen sermons, delivered seven Sunday-school and three prayer-meeting talks, and withal sold a large quantity of good books, pamphlets and papers. At Grenada, Walthall, Mathiston, Starkville and Aberdeen there has been special success in the colportage work.

Much concern is being felt and expressed just now as to the location of Millsaps College. Let all interested possess their souls in patience, with faith in God and confidence in the wisdom and integrity of those to whom the responsibility is committed.

A Creditable Exhibit.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference show pretty good finances. The presiding elders' average allowance was $1,044; average receipts, $882. The average salary of the preachers was, $583; average receipts, $504. By districts the figures are: New Orleans, average allowance for preacher in charge, $847; paid, $834. Shreveport, average allowance, $597; paid, $456. Alexandria, average allowance, $491; paid, $391. Opelousas, average allowance, $493; paid, $404. Delhi, average allowance, $552; paid, $459. Homer, average allowance, $521; paid, $485.

We think these figures will compare favorably with those of any Conference in the connection. The assessment for foreign missions was $5,626; the amount paid, $4,873. For domestic missions, $1,948 were assessed, and $1,526 paid. Special contributions and woman's societies and Sunday-schools raised $2,954, making in all for missions $9,354. This is an average of forty-six cents per member, not counting the pastors. The whole amount raised for all purposes was $109,445, which is $5 46 per member. The increase over last year of all money raised is $9,695. The increase in membership is fifteen local preachers and 1,692 members. We only raised sixteen cents per member to meet the claims of our Conference claimants. This is the only ugly place in the exhibit.

Notes.

Do the people of Louisiana realize the fact that they stand alone in infamy? The Lottery is branded as a disgrace and crime by the general government, and by almost every local government in the country! Thoughtful men consider it the most demoralizing species of gambling ever invented! And yet we hold on to it. What are we holding on to it for?

Read the article on third page, entitled "Lotteries and Gambling," by Anthony Comstock, and note what he says about the offer of $25,000 annually from the Louisiana Lottery to the Society for the Suppression of Vice in New York, if the society would not interfere with its business in that city. Bribery! bribery! And will Louisianians continue to uphold this public bribe and robber?

Our friends in Mississippi and other States must not grumble at us for giving so much of our space to the Louisiana Lottery. The necessity is upon us to do our best to overthrow this mighty monster. Its existence is a perpetual menace to everything good in our State. We humbly believe that in this matter we are doing God service; therefore, don't find fault, but help us with your pens and money.

A prominent gentleman in the country writes to us: "It is an open secret—so I heard lately in New Orleans—that the Lottery Company or its managers would build a sugar refinery in St. Mary and one in Rapides, for the purpose of bringing social and business pressure to bear on certain members of the General Assembly, seeking to make them feel that if they vote against the Lottery, they will injure, pecuniarily, influential friends." Our friends in St. Mary and Rapides will make a note of this. It is simply a form of bribery.

The National League for the Protection of American Institutions is composed of eminent citizens of New York. Among other things proposed by them is a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution to this effect:

No State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use its property, money or credit or any power of taxation, or authorize either to be used, for the purpose of founding, maintaining or aiding any church, religious denomination or religious society, or any institution or undertaking under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

The London Methodist Times says:

It is one of the most serious inconveniences of modern Methodism that some among us who are "supposed to be pillars" live so completely in little worlds of their own that they have no conception of the depth and force of the new current which is carrying us forward. Like the Bourbons in the last century, they and their followers are blind to the signs of the times. They are wasting their strength and their influence in disparaging and resisting the inevitable course of events.

Will not this apply with some force to Methodism in this country?

There was an Educational Conference held in Washington City not long since. It was composed chiefly of public school superintendents, and these sentiments were affirmed.

That the public school system is the chief source of our civilization and the strong bulwark of our religious and civil freedom; that the American flag should be placed over every schoolhouse; and that we can best meet the hostile criticisms openly made against the public school system of the country, the ally of the home, by making them the sources of the highest moral instruction, and that without any objectionable sectarian bias.

The papers report that three lottery ticket sellers were recently fined $100 each by a Mobile court. Can not this same punishment be meted out to these people wherever they sell contrary to law? We understand the law of Mississippi forbids the sale of lottery tickets, and yet we have heard of no convictions, but hear of the sale of tickets all about over the State. Our friends outside must help the good people of Louisiana in their fight against this monster, by hedging him in at every point. Turn loose, brethren, on the ticket sellers.

The Baptists are quite fond of reproaching the Methodists for receiving unconverted people into their church. In this connection, what is the meaning of the following paragraph from an article by J. R. Sampie in the Baptist Record, of February 20?

I believe that we (Baptists) are all agreed that unconverted people should not be in the church. As a result of this oneness of sentiment, there is an increasing desire that some effectual method be suggested by which the unconverted material in the church may be gotten rid of, and the letting in of such material hereafter be avoided.

Are they in or not? If in, who let them in? If not in, what can the above mean?

Personal and Otherwise.

A Brooklyn Church is described as "harmonious, aggresive and loyal to its pastor." Something in that, if it has the right kind of a pastor.

It is good for a preacher to have health of body and mind and soul; it is also good for him to have a "healthy abhorrence of debt." Many have suffered for lack of health at that point.

Bishop Beebe, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, spent several days in our city looking after the interests of his church. That branch of Methodism is growing quite rapidly in other places, and has now a pretty good start here. We hope to see them grow to be a huge host.

The Wesley Monumental Church, Savannah, Ga., will be dedicated March 23. The towers are still unfinished, but the interior is completed. The church will seat thirteen hundred people.

Bro. John A. Ellis, presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, says: "A better beginning I have never known on a district than is made this year on Vicksburg." A good start almost insures a good wind-up.

A subscriber in Ohio: "I will have to send for the ADVOCATE, because I can't get along without it." Accompanying this little note was a modest little $2 bill!

If you want your people to have a full and correct account of the doings of the General Conference that is soon to meet, press upon them the fact that one paper will give the best account to them that they can get. Use this point in your canvass for the paper.

Bro. M. C. Mauly desires us to say that until further notice his postoffice address is Opelousas, La.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. E. Buck reports from Kosciusko circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "Our return to this, the Kosciusko circuit, met with our approbation. The good people received us kindly, and tokens of their appreciation of us are shown daily. Our first Quarterly Conference convened February 8 and 9. Bro. Wheat, our presiding elder, was present and preached in his usual way with power. Finances very well up and officials engaged to do their best this year. La grippe is doing its work in the country, making the congregations small. Success to the ADVOCATE!"

—Rev. T. J. Miller reports from Westville circuit: "I met with a warm reception here, and these people have been very kind and liberal in providing for us; consequently I am cheerful and very hopeful. I believe God is with us and will give us the victory. Five of my children—two at college and three at home—have been sick for some time (some with flux, some with la grippe, and others with measles), but I think all are convalescent. We have as good water here as can be found anywhere, and I have dry ridge roads to travel."

—Rev. J. E. Buck writes as follows from Rome, Miss.: "We were in the midst of a terrific cyclone last evening (February 27), at half-past four o'clock. No hurt to the family, but serious damage to the parsonage property. Its track is from one-half to three-fourths of a mile wide. The damage to houses and farms is incalculable, but no lives lost as yet heard from. Thanks to our Father who redeemeth our life from destruction."

—Rev. W. M. Stevens writes from Vicksburg, Miss.: "Have not quite finished my second round, but have learned enough about the people of South Warren circuit to say they are lovers of truth and appreciaters of the gospel, and I love them. Wife and I have been received very cordially by these good people and are settled, happy, contented and hard at work. We have two very interesting weekly prayer meetings, which the Lord is using to his glory and to our edification. One Woman's Missionary Society which is, so far, a most wonderful success; will let you hear of it later. Have received eight members at one of my churches, and have collected almost enough money to purchase an organ. To God be all the praise! Pray for us!"

—Rev. C. W. Crisler writes from Hamburg, Miss.: "The Roxie circuit is in its formative state, but we are looking for a glorious upbuilding of Christ's kingdom in every line of church work during this year. Our good people seem imbued with new spiritual life, and are praying and laboring for the cause of Christ. Our work is moving right along under the most favorable auspices, and we trust that in the near future our spiritual condition will reach the measure of the old-established works. Pray for our success."

—Rev. C. H. Owen writes from Bolivar, Miss.: "Our first Quarterly Conference was a pleasant occasion. Preachers well provided for, and nearly one-fourth paid. Large number of communicants on Sunday. We are moving up on all lines. Conference claims about forty per cent. higher than last year, and will all be in full. Nearly one-half in hand. I can report all for foreign missions. We have an excellent church that will compare with any in our connection. We are expecting a large increase of souls."

—Rev. W. W. Drake writes from Bentonia, Miss.: "A cyclone passed over Bentonia on Thursday, February 27, destroying a school-house, several dwellings and our church. Am thankful to say, however, that no lives were lost. Our people will find it hard to rebuild the church, but we are not in despair."

An Amendment Amended.

If the establishment of an anti-lottery daily in New Orleans should be considered difficult or impracticable, how would this do? Let an anti-lottery society be organized in New Orleans, with branches in the other parishes, to raise funds to drive the Lottery into the sea. These funds will be under the direction of well-known, competent men. One of the measures they will adopt will be as follows: They will contract with your publisher to publish an extra every week, containing half your paper and all the lottery matter—say five, ten, or twenty thousand, or more copies every week, to go to every postoffice in the State for gratuitous distribution.

Individual subscribers, as a whole, works too slow. The town or country societies will raise funds and see to the distribution. You have lawyers and others who can furnish reliable information touching these frauds, infamous "charities" and extensive robberies of the people's taxes. I think all that is needed is reliable information; but this must be bountifully supplied. Every neighborhood must be flooded.

Something like this is practical. It can be worked at once and suspended when necessary, and if worked well, will likely do more good than two or three daily papers. Every man can be supplied. But it will require money and vigilance. They have millions of money, any amount of fraud and falsehood by wholesale, and unless something be done, and done speedily, you will find Louisiana disgraced and ruined! R. A.

Correction.

In the published Minutes of the last session of the Mississippi Conference, Scotland circuit is reported as having been assessed six dollars for General Conference delegates, and paid nothing. The truth of the matter is, Scotland circuit was assessed five dollars, and paid it. I handed it to the man appointed to receive it at Crystal Springs. No circuit or preacher likes to be misrepresented.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

BONNIE'S PRAYER.

Dear little Bonnie, four years old,
Thoughtful as child of her age could be,
Said her prayers as her mother told,
Nightly kneeling beside her knee.

But she said one night, this quaint little elf,
"I've a wish, my mamma, so good and true,
Let me kneel by the bedside, all by myself,
And make my prayers as the big folks do."

So all were quiet as mice could be,
While Bonnie, robed in her night-gown white,
Stole on tip-toe and knelt her knee
All alone for her prayers that night.

Only a moment the wee head bowed.
Then the face came up with a smile most fair;
While the other children laughed aloud
At the wondrous shortness of Bonnie's prayer.

Then came a little flush of dismay
Over the radiant face so small,
"I couldn't think of much to say,
So I said, 'Lord keep me,' and that was all"

Papa kissed her gravely and smiled.
"That was the best of prayers, my dear:
It was all you needed to say, my child,
You could ask no more, if you prayed a year."

To the Little Cousins.

The editor is in trouble, and asks you to help him out. The trouble is this: He has now on hand about thirty letters from the "little cousins." He can't publish them all at once. To publish a few at a time, it would be weeks and weeks before some of them would see the light. He wants to please the little cousins; but in any course he may pursue he sees he will displease many, and so what shall he do? Can any of you help him out of his dilemma? EDITOR.

Ned Hoyt's Luck.

"Lucky Ned Hoyt" was the popular sobriquet of the railway magnate.

"A man," his associates would tell you, "of only moderate talents, born in poverty, with no family or social influence, yet he had mounted the ladder of success rapidly and steadily. Nothing to help him but luck, blind luck."

Let us look a little at the steps of this ladder up which Ned climbed so fast. He was the son of a poor woman, who gave him a few years' schooling and then found him a place as "elevator boy" in a hotel. Ned had one aim: to find work on a railroad and there to make his way up. He stuck to that one idea; he never changed it, he never forgot it. The men who used the elevator daily found the boy always clean, always polite and eager to be of use. He became a favorite, especially with one, a station-master on a railway leading out of the city. To him Ned, choosing a moment when he was in a good humor, frankly told his story and his hope. "Can you give me work?" he asked.

"Yes," the man said, "in the yard; but it will be hard and poorly paid. Better stay where you are."

"You never can rise in an elevator—above the fifth story," retorted Ned, laughing.

He was set at handling freight on the platform. In a month he attracted the notice of all the men in the yard by his unfailing promptness, energy and good-humored courtesy. His eyes and ears were always open, and he was eager to learn the business and the methods of the road.

One day the freight-master needed a temporary helper in his office, as one of the clerks was absent—suddenly ill. He applied to the yard-master for a substitute, "If you've got a wide-awake young fellow, not afraid to work."

"Here's your man!" said the yard-master, tapping Ned on the back.

"What luck Hoyt has!" said his companions, as he went into the office.

At the end of the week the sick man returned, but Ned had made himself too useful to be dismissed from the office. A year later a small road applied to the larger one for a man competent to superintend its freight department. Nobody was surprised when Hoyt was chosen.

Ned threw himself into the interests of the new road with zeal, and introduced into its management the methods of the older systems. At last he saw an opportunity for a grand coup by which to insure the success of the road and his own as well. By building a short branch it would tap the trade of a productive region. He urged this action upon the directors; the road was built. In a few years two great railways saw the vast advantages held by the smaller line and bid high for them against each other. The short road was at last incorporated in one of the larger ones, and Hoyt was taken into its board of management.

"Blind luck!" cried the men whom he had left behind.

But as years passed and Hoyt, always cheerful, energetic and good humored, steadily rose to the chief control of the road, never failing to see and secure an opening for its advancement or his own, his comrades began to suspect that there was some secret in his success other than that of luck.

Can our boy-readers explain it?—Youth's Companion.

Improving the Time.

William Bardley was a clerk in a store in a small country town. He had a great deal of time on his hands, for customers were not very numerous. But he did not waste his time, or spend it in vain and gossipy talk with those who lounged into the store to pass away a vacant hour. He procured a text-book in shorthand, and applied himself diligently to master the system. A friend of his, who was an expert stenographer, corrected his exercises and helped him over hard places for a time; but William soon found that the measure of his own application was the measure of his success in the study.

When he got so he could write quite well, he persuaded some of the school-boys of his acquaintance to read to him (and he found ways of discharging the obligation) evenings when he was off duty, until he could write fast enough to take down most of the minister's discourses on Sunday, and the lectures of occasional visitors to the town, and conversations that might be going on within his hearing.

In a year's time he had become expert enough to fill a position in a lawyer's office in a neighboring city, and to his ability as stenographer he soon added that of using the typewriter. His constant practice in both these industries made him in a comparatively short time quite rapid as a reporter and typewriter. With his improved facility he was able to command increased compensation for his work. Thus he went on until now he is supporting himself comfortably and laying up money to go through college.

All this came from his wise improvement of odd moments. —Selected.

HOW HE DOES IT.—A Michigan pastor tells this: "I have come across a small boy who is a philosopher, and who has solved the problem of how to get safely by the saloon. Said he, 'Papa, I'll tell you how I go by the saloon. I walk on the outside of the sidewalk, as far away from the saloon as I can; then I hold my nose and shut my mouth, and when I get by I spit before I swallow.'"

One day Ava went with mama to see a mite of a baby. She looked at the little, rosy, puckered-up face without saying a word. When they were going home again, mama asked:

"Well, dear, what did you think of the baby?"

"I thought," said Ava, "it was was very cryful-looking."—Youth's Companion.

We are often deceived in the age of people having beautiful and luxuriant hair, not knowing that they use Hall's Hair Renewer to keep gray hairs away.

What more could God do for us than he has done and is doing? God could convert us to himself by taking away our free choice. He could turn us to stone and chisel us into statues to glorify his temple. But God wants not marble statues, though they be beautiful; he wants human souls. God might frighten us into submission; but he does not want the trembling cries of crying slaves. He wants the love of children.—The Advance.

Household.

"Mrs. Gladly."

BY "UNCLE BOSTON."

It was a real pleasure to meet this lady recently. It was on this wise. I had occasion to step into a store on a shopping errand. Said the lady who was just about to leave the store:

"Good morning! I was hoping I might meet you soon. I have become most deeply interested in the work our Publication Society is doing among our boys and girls. Will you please take this twenty dollars which I gladly give to keep our great Sunday-school Society in its grand work. I gladly enroll myself among its life-members."

How do you suppose an agent felt to have such words addressed to him? Well, you will never know until you become an agent, and have the genuine pleasure of listening to such cheering sentences.

I really want you to become personally acquainted with "Mrs. Gladly." She is a most estimable lady. She is not a wealthy lady, except in the possession of the "true riches." As she hears of the urgent calls, from so many sources, for funds with which to send workers into the whitening harvest-fields of the world, she sometimes finds herself wishing she had more means at her command. "Mrs. Gladly" has no stated income, and her husband has no special sympathy with her church life and work; he is intent upon "laying up treasure on earth" Any money spent in making their home more beautiful and attractive is not grudgingly given by him; neither that which goes to furnish money for his wife's wearing apparel and other feminine adornments.

"Mrs. Gladly" is a firm believer in laying aside at least one-tenth of all income, by every one who receives money or its equivalent. As she has no income, the little woman has hit upon the happy plan of tithing her outgo, so that she "may have to give to him that needeth." Upon receiving money, say fifty dollars, for household provisions, she at once gladly lays aside five dollars and purchases that much less for her table; these five dollars are at once put into her "jewel case," which is dedicated to receive all money for the Lord's treasury.

So when "Mrs. Gladly's" husband gives her five, ten, twenty, fifty, or a hundred dollars with which to go shopping, she does this before leaving home. The Lord's portion of her outgo is gladly laid aside, then she starts on her shopping expedition. When her husband sees that a new piano would add grace and melody to their home, he gives "Mrs. Gladly" say seven hundred dollars with which to make the purchase. She gladly lays aside a hundred of it, and places the amount in her "jewel case." She has partially learned the sweet lesson of sacrificing, that she may have funds with which to meet some of the urgent calls. Never a worthy call comes to "Mrs. Gladly" that she does not gladly respond.

And now some fearful sister will ask in trembling tones: "Does 'Mrs. Gladly' tell her husband that she lays aside a part of all the money he gives her for the Lord's work?" Yes, indeed. "Is he willing she should do so?" Of course he is. She is such a good wife to him that he can not find it in his heart to condemn in her what she plainly believes to be her duty. And let me whisper, "Mrs. Gladly's" husband, away down deep in his heart, admires and loves the benevolent spirit he sees in his wife.

"Mrs. Gladly" lends a most helpful hand in every line of church work. Is a poor neighbor sick? "Mrs. Gladly" always hears of it and is there to do what she can. Does the pastor tell her of one who is anxious concerning her soul's salvation? "Mrs. Gladly" finds the seeking soul and gladly tells of the Savior's dying love. Is testimony to Christ's wonderful love called for? No one more gladly testifies than she. Has one of the younger members come to love the dance, the card-party, or the opera more than the prayer-meeting? "Mrs. Gladly" is the one who points out to the wanderer "the more excellent way"; she does it in such a gladsome and tender way that many are won to lead earnest, consistent and consecrated lives for him who gave his own precious blood for their redemption. When you meet "Mrs. Gladly" you will see how well she has learned to "serve the Lord with gladness."—Exchange.

Scientific.

What Science May Yet Do.

A writer in the Gentleman's Magazine, after chronicling some recent scientific advances, suggests certain possibilities of the future. He says:

Perhaps the field which holds out the greatest promise is chemistry applied to the arts of life; one can see no limit to what may there be accomplished. Not only is there the promise of far more durable materials, stronger drugs and cheaper chemicals, but, above and beyond all, a prospect of such advances that food will be built up in the chemist's laboratory, and inexhaustible supplies be poured into the market. Man has a tendency to multiply more rapidly than the means of subsistence; land can only produce a certain limited quantity of food, and that is so dependent on the seasons, the latitude, and the depredations of insect and vegetable pests, that the actual yield from a given acreage falls under the most favorable conditions, far short of the theoretical return.

It is conceivable that the pressure of population might tax wide areas, and demand more food than they could be made to yield. We have nearly reached that limit in England; two-thirds of our wheat, and perhaps close upon one-half of all the food consumed in this realm, is drawn from foreign lands, But supposing that chemical science should teach us how to build up compounds, with dietetic properties equal to those of wheat, and with nothing offensive to the palate, what a marvelous future might await the race, at last become independent of extraneous supplies! Many people will smile, and will assure me that the manufacture of such food, should it ever be possible, will not be economical, and, therefore, not practically useful. But is there not continuous progress in practice and in theory? Machinery is being rapidly perfected, human labor economized, and the stored up energy of the tides and rivers must before long be utilized. Let us calculate the energy that runs to waste in a single gale of wind, or in a single high tide off the coasts, and in the rivers of our country. The stored-up energy of all the coal in all the coal fields of all the world represents, in billions of tons, a mere fraction of the energy of the rivers of Europe, nay of England; and, while the richest coal mines are soon worked out, and coal demands immense labor for its transference from the bowels of the earth to the centers of industry, there is just as much energy in the tides and rivers today as there was a thousand years ago.—Congregationlist.

Rainfall on the Plains.

Prof. Frank H. Snow, of the Kansas State University, said several years ago: "But the fact that thousands of new-comers, from ignorance of the climate, have attempted to introduce ordinary agricultural operations upon the so-called plains, and have disastrously failed in the attempt, has placed an undeserved stigma upon the good name of Kansas in many far-distant communities, and has undoubtedly somewhat retarded immigration during the past few years. It is time for the general recognition of the fact that, except in the exceedingly limited area where irrigation is possible, the western third of Kansas is beyond the limit of successful agriculture." The severe seasons of drought which have occured since the above conservative statement was written show the whole truth of the matter to be that the westward advancing line of settlement is by no means an isohyetal one, but that it is merely a line representing in a way the overflow of the population of our Eastern States. It needs but a slight acquaintance among the old settlers in central Kansas to know that they fear nowadays excessively dry weather as much as they did twenty-five years ago. The people who live farther west are losing faith in the idea of an increased rainfall, as is evidenced by the fact that over two hundred linear miles of main canals have lately been constructed for irrigation purposes nearly as far east as Kinsley, in the Arkansas Valley of western Kansas. In the Platte Valley, in Nebraska, large irrigating systems are at present being projected.—Popular Science Monthly.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

HILL.—Died LOTTIE C. HILL, wife of T. J. Hill, and daughter of L. K. Russell. She sunk in death's embrace, January 29, 1890, at Auter, her home, aged 23 years 1 month and 26 days. It was my happy lot to meet Sister Hill before her illness. I can truthfully say she was a model Christian. In a conversation with her, she readily convinced me of her pure religion. She had been a member of the Baptist Church about six years. She proved to me that baptism was not her hope of heaven, but Christianity, purity of heart.

I was to see her in her illness. She was still trusting in God. She did not live but a few days. While passing away she told her dear husband to meet her in heaven, and raise the children right, and called her sister, Mrs. J. B. Hill. She requested her to take care of her two little children, and to give to the little babe her new Bible, and teach it to read it. Bless God for such fruit—"ye shall know them by their fruits." Yes, her end was triumphant, with exhortations to husband, connections and friends. Thus passed to her reward one of the pure women of earth. May the God of love and mercy ever sustain the husband, and enable him to lead these two little ones on in the path which their mother trod! is the prayer of a brother and friend. J. C. ELLIS, P. C.

McGUFFEE—Sister MARTHA C. McGUFFEE was born in Covington, St. Tammany parish, La., in the year 1831 or 1832; moved to Mississippi in 1851; was married to Bro. Joseph P. McGuffee, November 26, 1852; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and embraced religion at Topisaw Camp Ground in the year 1855. She departed this life at Green's Switch, Rankin county, Miss., December 15, 1889.

The writer became acquainted with Sister McGuffee about a year before her decease and was impressed at once that she was a child of God and joint-heir with her Savior. I was with her some in her last illness, and, though severe, no words of murmuring escaped her lips. Sister McGuffee was a kind neighbor, a devoted mother and affectionate wife. She leaves a kind husband, a dutiful daugbter and affectionate niece to mourn her loss; but their loss is her eternal gain.

Dear brother and sisters, grieve not as those who have no hope, for Sister McGuffee has gone to the better land to live with her two little children who had preceded her. Be faithful a little while longer, dear friends, and when the summons shall come for you be ready, for those dear loved ones will be waiting for you at the beautiful gate. F. A. LANE.

WHITESIDES—Died, in the full assurance of bliss and immortal glory, at her home at Mooreville, Lee county, Miss., on December 28, 1889, in the seventy seventh year of her age, Mrs. A. H. WHITESIDES.

She was an honored member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for over thirty years. Her husband dying some thirty-three years ago, leaving her and a large family to mourn his loss, she bravely bore up in those sad times with her afflictions, looking forward to him, "who doeth all things well," for support and fortitude. She so lived that her light shone in all the relations of life. Hers was a truly useful life—useful at home, in the church and among the poor. She died full of years and of honor, and has gone to reap her reward. She has entered into that "rest that remains for the people of God." "Our loss is her gain." The sympathy of the community is extended to the hereaved children and relatives in their irreparable loss. God grant that we may all meet in that bright world where partings are unknown! L. W. M.

KNIGHT—Little FANNIE MAY KNIGHT, daughter of J. T. and S. E. Knight, was born December 11, 1886, and died of membraneous croup, December 1, 1889, being nearly three years old.

Little Fannie was one of the sweetest flowers in the earthly garden, loved and petted by parents and all that knew her. But she was too pure and sweet for this dark world of sin, and God took her to the bright elysian fields of glory, there to live and chant her sweet little melodies around his throne. May God, by his grace, abundantly sustain the dear parents and friends! is the prayer of their pastor,
A. D. MILLER.

PARKER—Died, at his quiet, peaceful home on the morning of January 24, 1890, JESSE PARKER, aged eighty years eight months and seventeen days. He greeted death with a smile, and on earth closed his eyes to open them in heaven. Bro. Parker was born in Kentucky, and, having spent a few years in each of the States, Kentucky, Alabama and Louisiana, he moved to Mississippi, and settled in Copiah county, where he remained till God called him up higher. In his twenty-third year he was happily married to Miss Wilmoth Bickam, to whom he was a true and devoted husband till death took her from him November 18, 1874. On August 18, 1878, he was married, a second time, to Mrs. Amanda Shankles, who now, with a number of friends and relatives, mourn his loss. Bro Parker had no children of his own; yet he reared three sets of orphan children who loved, honored and respected him as if he had been their own father. He united himself with the Methodist Church in 1834, and in that church died "holding fast" the Christian religion.

Bro. Parker now rests in heaven, and may the God of peace comfort and keep his faithful wife whom he leaves behind, so that on the morning of that great day she may grasp his hand in the land of joy, peace and love to be forever with their God!
W. J. FERGUSON.

WARNER—NATHAN MIXON, son of J. J. and Eveline Warner, died January 26, 1890, aged ten years. Little Mixon was a kind and obedient child, always ready to assist in anything that he could do. On January 20, while feeding the horses, one kicked him in the abdomen, and, after six days of severe suffering, at twelve o'clock, January 26, his spirit winged its flight from this rough clime to the Giver of all good, from whence it came.

We can say: Farewell, little Mixon, until father, mother, brothers and sisters shall meet again where sickness, sorrow and pains are to be felt no more.

It was the privilege of the writer to see the sufferer during his illness. He bore his suffering with the fortitude of one far beyond his years. May the Lord bless the sorrowing father, mother, brothers and sisters in this sad hour of sore bereavement!
W. B. INABNET.

GLOVER—JOHN GLOVER was born in South Carolina, July 10, 1813, and died December 17, 1889, aged seventy-six years. He first moved to Alabama; thence to DeSoto parish, La., in 1859. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1853, and continued steadfast in the faith till he was called from labor to rest and to a reunion of loved ones who had preceded him to the home of the good. J. P.

SCHULTZ—Forasmuch, As it hath pleased Almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove from our midst Bro. RUDOLPH SCHULTZ by sudden death; And, whereas, Bro. Schultz was an official member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, holding his membership at Bonifaro Church, Talisheek circuit, Mississippi Conference, we, the members of said church, with his pastor, feeling a deep sense of the great worth of our departed brother and the loss which the church and community have sustained by his untimely death, desire to offer before the first Quarterly Conference of which he was a member the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Schultz we feel that his aged parents have lost an affectionate and dutiful son; his disconsolate brother, a loving companion; his wife, a devoted husband; the church, an active and faithful member, and the community, a noble, generous-hearted neighbor and citizen.

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore his untimely death, we bow in meek submission to the will of our divine Father in this dispensation of his providence, realizing that whatever he does is strictly right, and that he causes "all things to work together for good to those who love him."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, with an expression of our deepest sympathy and fervent prayers, be tendered to his bereaved family, and that a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and one to the Family Friend for publication.

Signed in behalf of the church.

Our Hannah Jane.

Our Hannah Jane was thin and weak,
And sadly white her lip and cheek
We often thought—and thought with pain,
"We soon must lose our Hannah Jane."
With change of doctors, change of air,
She sought for healing everywhere.
And, when our hopes were almost past,
Favorite Prescription" tried at last.
It gave us joy, it gave us hope,
She ceased to pine, she ceased to mope,
(Pierce's remedies are sure and true)
Now Hannah Jane is good as new.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cleanse and regulate the stomach, bowels and system generally. One a dose; purely vegetable.

If any community were as determined to suppress the saloons as the United States is to collect revenue from them, suppression would be easy.—Christian Union.

RALEIGH, N. C., Feb. 20th, 1888.

DR A. T. SCHALLENBERGER, Rochester, Pa.

Dear Sir:—I wish to say a word in behalf of your wonderful Chill and Fever Pills. Some months ago a friend, who knew that my wife had been afflicted for months, sent me a package of your pills. I gave them to her and they cured her at once. A neighbor, Mr. Perry, had suffered with chills for more than a year, and had taken Quinine until his hearing was greatly injured. Seeing the cure wrought in my wife's case, he procured a bottle of pills and was speedily restored to perfect health. I feel that this is due to you. Very truly,

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Bentonia, Miss., was visited by a cyclone on February 27, and every house in the town was destroyed or damaged.

A bill was introduced in the National House of Representatives, so as to require, at least, two of the Board of Control of the World's Fair to be women.

Governor Boies, of Iowa, was inaugurated on February 27. The Democratic organizations of the State, reinforced by delegations from Illinois and Missouri, made the occasion one of extraordinary festivity.

Carthage, Miss., was struck by a cyclone on February 28 and was destroyed. Several persons were wounded.

One hundred and sixty three indictments against saloon-keepers for selling liquor on Sunday, contrary to an old statute of the State, were returned last week by the grand jury in Covington, Ky. This includes all the saloon-keepers in Covington except two.

Bishop John F. Hurst's project to build a Methodist university in the District of Columbia has taken a practical shape, and its actual existence is now almost an established fact.

The Mississippi river, which threatened to overflow its banks in front of this city, is now steadily falling at this and other points.

Petitions in favor of New Orleans as the site for the navy yard are going in as the result of the declarations of the Boards of Trade of many cities.

The delegates to the International American Conference are beginning to talk about final adjournment, which will probably take place about April 1. Nearly all of the committees have made their reports, and several of them have already been adopted.

Vice-President Morton and party visited Charleston, S. C., on March 2, and were received by the mayor and a committee of the city council.

One of the results of the recent disastrous fire at Secretary Tracy's house is the introduction of fire alarm boxes into the White House, which has heretofore been without adequate protection of this kind.

Ex-Governor Warmoth, appointed to be collector of the port of New Orleans, was confirmed by the Senate on March 3. The nominee was actively supported by Senator Eustis, on the ground that Warmoth's defeat would give control of the customhouse to the worst element in the Republican party and prove injurious to the State.

Captain J. H. Willard, of the engineer corps, has made a supplementary report to the Committee on Harbors and Rivers asking for an appropriation of $125,000 to complete the survey of Red river, including the cost of maps, etc. The purpose is to survey the whole stream from Fulton, Ark., to the mouth, a distance of 600 miles.

While the congregation of the Centenary Methodist Church (Richmond, Va.) were worshiping, on March 2, a fire started in the basement. Men, women and children rushed out pell mell. Many ladies fainted, and some were slightly bruised, but no one was seriously injured. The fire department soon extinguished the flames.

The actions of the lottery people in the Dakota Legislature indicate very strongly that they are planning some scheme, and a rumor of a new bill is repeated with great persistence. It is probable that a canvass is being made to find out whether there is strength enough obtainable to carry the bill through. If the bill is introduced, it will most likely be during the last week of the session.

FOREIGN.

The British steamship Quetta, which sailed from Australian ports on February 27 for London, has been lost at sea. A dispatch from Brisbane Queensland, says that the Quetta had 280 souls on board, of whom 116 were saved, including the captain and several officers.

Pope Leo XIII. was 80 years old on March 2, and March 3 was the twelfth anniversary of his coronation. In honor of these two anniversaries he gave a reception to the college of cardinals. Replying to the congratulations of the cardinals, the Pope declared his intention to give the most earnest study to the social question, and said he hoped to receive the assistance of the European powers in solving this difficult problem.

The men-of-war Atlanta and Boston of the American squadron of evolution have arrived at Genoa. The Chicago and Yorktown; the other two vessels of the squadron, have reached Spezzia.

The Grashdaniel, a Russian newspaper, considers that lack of wisdom has been shown by the powers that have consented to take part in the labor conference at Berlin. The conference, the paper believes, will tend to the military preponderance already exercised by Germany over Europe, and it is on this ground that it censures the powers for giving their support to the project.

Mr. Chamberlain writes that he believes free education will be conferred by the present government before Parliament is dissolved.

Advices from Newfoundland state that the legislature of that province will not consent to a renewal of the modus vivendi regarding the issuing of licenses to American fishing vessels on account of the bitter experiences the providence has had in enforcing the bait act of the colonies.

Austria, Italy, Holland, Switzerland, Denmark and Sweden have accepted the invitations to the Berlin labor conference. Neither Prince Bismarck nor Count Herbert Bismarck will attend.

The House of Commons has authorized the expenditure of $20,000,000 in improving and extending the military barracks throughout the country.

It is anticipated that as a result of the conferences between the Emperor and Prince Bismarck the government will, at the coming session of the Reichstag, submit an anti-anarchist bill to take the place of the rejected anti-socialist bill.
